"This fourfold program develops in a boy's life the vital things that are necessary to fit him as a man for the things that God calls him for in life.

"If we study for a few minutes the aim of the Trail Ranger we can see that first the boy Jesus increased in wisdom, in his mentality, he was trained and grounded in the knowledge, of God, who is the Counsellor of all things. Next the boy who would become a Trail Ranger trains his body so that he can be able to think clearly and judge wisely in the affairs of one's life.

"The second side of the program is to increase in stature or to grow up to be healthy and strong. To cherish health and to guard it carefully. Boys naturally like to play, it is part of their makeup and develops their bodies and muscles during the period of growth. How to play the game and take part in sports which develop the spirit of good fellowship and also trains the mind to think and act quickly is taught under this part of the program. Always remembering that it is far more important to play the game than it is to win.

"The third part of the program is that we must find favour with God. A Trail Ranger promises to love God, to be reverent unto Him at all times, to do His will, to show full loyalty and devotion by service and faithful obedience to Him at all times and by acknowledging Jesus Christ as his Lord and Master, our Supreme Chief Ranger to whom he must look for his guidence.

"The fourth part of our program desires that we find favour with man. To find favour with man we must be sociable, friendly and kind at all times to everyone irrespective of race, colour or creed, and ready to help in time of trouble or distress. Be cheerful and quiet when things go wrong, be thoughtful, generous, forgiving and always ready to help others. Remembering the words of the Master "Love Thy Neighbours As Thyself".

"This four-fold programme as I have outlined it to you for the C.S.E.T. is trying to do for the boys of the town. Its aim in order to mould their lives into the pattern laid out by Our Supreme Chief Ranger Jesus Christ. Your co-operation will help to make this work possible.

Picton, Feb. 11—About sixty presidents of cheese factories, makers and patrons, representing fifteen of the seventeen cheese factories of Prince Edward County, met in the Town Hall, Picton, at 2 o'clock on Saturday afternoon, February 9th, together with many others interested in the cheese industry, to discuss the formation of a "Cheese Producers Co-operative Limited Company".

Mr. Will Bedell of Hillier, occupied the chair and called the meeting to order. Mr. Charles W. Fraleigh of Demorestville, read the minutes of the last meeting.

He also gave an account of the visit of the committee, chosen to visit Belleville on the evening of the last meeting. This committee had conferred with Mr. A. V. Sheppard, whose idea was to assess all butter fat to per lb. and borrow the export from the Bank.

The committee had also journeyed to Ottawa to an audience with Hon. Robt. Weir, that had been arranged by Mr. J. E. Parkhurst. Mr. Weir had received them cordially and assured them the department would help them all it knew what help to give. They were given five minutes in which the chessemen, themselves, took action. The committee also attended the meeting of the Cheesemakers' and Patrons' Association at Brighton when addressed by Mr. Jas. of Belleville, to give the main points of the scheme, which took all the afternoon.

Mr. Fraleigh then read a draft of the constitution of the proposed company to the meeting.

Resolved

"That a company be incorporated under the name "Cheese Producers' Co-operative (Prince Edward County) Limited" and that the following aims and objects:

(1) Organize that the farmers of Canada hold an honored place in the Canada and the trade of the Canadian people. That the welfare of the Canadian agriculturist is primary requisite to the happiness and prosperity of the Canadian nation.

(2) Recognize that the Dominion can represent the interests of the cheese factories in Dominion and Provincial governments, and that groups and direct representation has heretofore been a great handicap to these Governments, in considering grants made by the organized business interests, which are of vital interest to the welfare of farmers.

(3) Give constant attention to the interest of cheese factory patrons, serving primarily as a medium between the cheese industry, which now consists of farmers who supply milk to these factories, will have power to express itself in any matter pertaining to the dairy industry and their own welfare.

(4) Establish an Advisory Council consisting of the salesman or representatives of each cheese factory. The first Advisory Council shall consist of the salesmen of the members factories for the year 1935. This Advisory Council, through representatives, which it may select, will be the voice of the cheese industry of the county.

The board arrangements through its Board of Directors, consisting of the representatives the Advisory Council elected annually by that body, for the storage, ageing and sale of cheese, produced by the cheese factories under the plan of financing, approved by the Minister of Agriculture, Province of Ontario.

(6) Obtain for cheese factory patrons higher returns, than they have been receiving in recent years, placing them on an equal level with patrons of creameries and so overcome a situation in which farmers, who have remained loyal to cheese factories in order to prevent the abandonment of these valuable community enterprises, have done so at their own expense.

(7) Discuss with other branches of the Dairy Industry equalization of returns according to recognized ratio of values, to all branches of the industry, thus ensuring a stable market for all, and thereby prevent the confusion of interests and conflict in operation now prevailing at heavy cost to farmers.

(8) Co-operate with cheese factory officials and act as a medium, whereby co-operation between neighboring cheese factories may be fostered, in the question of milk routes, in order to eliminate overlapping of routes, and unnecessary expense to the factories. Emphasize in the proper quarters the extremes to which organization have gone in sending trucks long distances and over identical routes owned by other companies, for the purpose of soliciting and collecting milk or cream, thus causing waste of energy and expense.

BOYS' WORK BOARD CAMPAIGN ENDORSED

Lieut.-Governor Pays Tribute to Board

"May the splendid work being done by the Belleville Boys' Work Board never lack the support of all those men and women who have the shape and mold the character of our boys are doing the most important work in the world" is the recommendation which the Lieutenant-Governor is giving the financial campaign of the Trail Ranger and Tuxis organization which continues from Feb. 4th until March 4th.

The remarkable thing about this appeal is the fact that the boys themselves realize the good that have done so for thirteen consecutive years. In this period they have raised over two thousand dollars.

This budget is $6200.00 and is to provide for the services of a secretary, an office staff, which gives leadership to thirty district centres, two training camps for leaders, Provincial Camp Elgiarala and various helps for twelve thousand boys. The Boys' Parliament is again accepting chief responsibility to raise this money for the movement which has done so much for boys.

A great deal of the money raised is used by the Boys' Work Board to the benefit of Belleville Boys in Tuxis and Trail Ranger groups and Sunday School classes. The leadership given to the boys is of the highest character and those who contributes to this work, is contributing to a very worthy cause.

MAJOR SHEPARD FREED OF CHARGE

Found Not Guilty of Fatally Poisoning His Wife

Topeka, Kas., Feb. 11.—(AP)—Major Charles A. Shepard, and retired United States army, Washington's specialist, was acquitted today of charges he fatally poisoned his second wife to clear the way for his marriage to Miss Grace Brandon, Texas stenographer.

"The verdict is right and just," said Shepard, 63, who at his first trial in 1930 was convicted. The Supreme Court granted a new trial.

The jury received the case at 4.12 p.m. C.S.T., Saturday night after a two-weeks' trial. It deliberated virtually all day Sunday and until 2.30 a.m. today.

Mrs. Zenan Shepard, the Major's second wife, was 37, when she died at Fort Riley, Kas., June 15, 1929, after a lingering and mysterious illness, which puzzled all physicians in the army post. Shepard, in his defence, set forth she was a dependent drunkard, who often threatened suicide.

Government testimony sought to prove the Canadian-born medico had gone to San Antonio, Tex., to take a flight surgeon's course in the fall of 1928. There he met Miss Brandon, fell in love with Miss Brandon, then 22, and, he poisoned his wife in order to be free to marry her. They pledged their troth, but government claimed, around Thanksgiving of 1928 although Shepard continued to see her until nearly a year later.

Miss Brandon, who surrendered Shepard's letters and gifts to the prosecution was a witness against her erstwhile lover at both trials. She was not in court today, having returned to her home.

After his previous conviction had been set aside Shepard married his friend and benefactor, the former Mrs. J. Wallace Carr of Denver, who provided a $25,000 bond. Mrs. Edna Carr, accompanied by her daughter, Mrs. Burr Jones of Denver, sat throughout the trial.

SECOND CALL FOR ASSISTANCE FROM THE 'SETH PARKER'

through regular diplomatic channels.

Naval officers pointed out the increase speed the Australia's main tained on its errand of assistance was an important factor in the expense incurred as it required considerably more fuel to run the warship at full speed.

The officers said they had never known of an instance when a British warship had been made the victim of a false S.O.S. They stressed the fact that a strict code of honor governs such action at sea.

Australia to Remain

San Francisco, Feb. 11—(AP)—The S.O.S. call from the "adventure ship" Seth Parker, sent the grey British cruiser, H.M.A.S. Australia, steaming at full speed for the storm early today to the rescue of the battered gaff schooner. It was the second time in 24 hours the cruiser with the Duke of Gloucester aboard, had responded to a call for help on a similar errand of mercy.

The Australia continued on her way after sending out a skeptical report via the Parker's trouble. The S.O.S. came about 14 hours later.

London Express Announces Rescued Parker Safe

London Express, Annoyance at Rescued Parker Safe

The S.O.S. flashing 14 hours after the two vessels parted company the cruiser should not take longer than 10 to 12 hours to re-trace its course. A Chief claim to fame of the adventuring schooner is the fact its crew includes H. Lund, is a widely known entertainer. He uses the name "Seth Parker" in his present-day work.

The point from which the S.O.S. was sent is about 1,000 miles east of the Samoan Islands and almost as far west of the Hawaiian Islands. The Australia was approximately 200 miles away, when it turned about.

Only a few hours after the Australia pulled away Lord began sending out his cry for assistance.

Then came the S.O.S. at 1 a.m. Eastern Standard Time Monday, "Disabled in storm, require assistants assistance," read the S.O.S. reporting gear and leaking badly."

Second later the Australis answered that we on the way.

"Okay, thanks," replied the schooner.

Almost while before the actual S.O.S. came, the Parker warned: "If we lose contact it is sign we have gone over."

Previous distress calls and the report of the Australia gave the world wide belief the trouble was being "staged" by Lord as a publicity stunt. London expressed annoyance the Australis had to go 400 miles out of her way.

Trenton and District

Experience of Being Lost in Arctic Related to Veterans

Flight-Lieut. Lewis Tells of Harrowing 17 Days

Trenton, Feb. 11 (Special)— The members of the Trenton Post 110 of the Canadian Legion heard one of the most thrilling addresses on Friday night, when they listened to Flight-Lt. Lewis of the Royal Canadian Air Force relate his experiences in the Arctic.

In March 1926 the speaker, Flight-Sgt. Terry and an Eskimo crashed in a ninety mile gale with the thermometer at fifty below. The seventeen days that they were lost and the return of the trio to the base at Port Burwell was a headline story in almost every paper on the continent.

Flight Lt. Lewis took off on a clear night day from Port Burwell with Flt. Sgt. Terry and an eskimo, to take planes along the southern coast of Baffin Island, which is situated north of the eastern part of Labrador in the Arctic circle. After several hours of flight they headed homeward, when they ran into a gale. Pilot Lewis headed for Ungava Bay and was forced down after dodging ice pinnacles for sometime. The plane was only slightly damaged and the three escaped unhinjured. As soon as they were forced down they knew that their chances of ever returning were scant. They had a few supplies, such as mallet milk tablets, two pounds of tea, plenty of warm clothing, a small tent, some food and a rifle. The eskimo would sustain the two while men for several days, but ever almost useless for the eskimo. Thinking they were in Ungava Bay they started out on the 640 mile trek to Fort Chimo. Of course the eskimo knew where he was, but never let on where they slept. After two days climbing the ice and snow drifts they figured that land should be sighted after the two day walk. This could not be seen to the west but behind them they could see faintly, what appeared to be the top of mountains. After a consultation they decided to retrace their steps and head westward.

Saved Lives

This they did and no doubt it was a main factor in saving their lives. After two or three more days they struck shore but their sense of reason was becoming dazed with the cold and their sufferings from hunger and thirst. It was not funny to think that with all the ice and snow, thirst would be a big obstacle, the speaker said that it was like taking a piece of salt to just chew snow to their system. Instead of following the shore line they headed inland where fresh water lakes were found and water was obtained. The two white men were weakening from the effects of living of green matter, which was caused by the severe cold in the stomach. They crossed many leads in a rubber boat, which they had also salvaged from the seaplane. Flt. Lt. Lewis then told of a sight which he has likely been unequaled by any other white man. They came to a lead that was swarming with walrus if they are shot in the water they immediately sink, but fortunately they found large ice floes backing in the sun on the ice. This the eskimo killed them with harpoons, cut a large hole in its back from which he sucked the warm blood. The two white men in the party attempted this also but it only caused more vomiting.

Rode on Ice Cake

A large piece of the meat was cut into small squares and about twenty minutes after it was cooked and eaten. This gave them a little nourishment as they ate the small pieces. They became very discouraged and several times had given up hope of getting out of the wilds. The only was one of their chief sources of worry as the eskimo had left the party and called for his brother. A large open lead greeted them but when they went to launch the rubber boat they found that the eskimo had left it back about a day's journey. This almost caused the death of the eskimo, but finally they broke off a large piece of ice, which they mounted and ferried across, with the water to their knees. As they landed Terry had the misfortune to fall in up to his waist. In the below weather the eskimo and his wife and their dog team, who were returning from a hunting trip came up to the three, now almost insane. The speaker related as he told how delicious a raw piece of fresh water salmon was. The fisherman gave them strips of frozen salmon, which they devoured and relished. An insane person to an eskimo is sort of a demigogue and the fisherman did not want to have anything to do with them but finally their pleadings brought results and they were taken to an eskimo settlement. Flt. Lt. Lewis said, that an eskimo woman is certainly far from a beautiful sight, when you first see them but on longer acquaintance they improve. Arriving at the camp, fish was cooked for the white visitors. An eskimo never bothers with the cooking. Their heavy clothing and flying suits were removed and the half-frozen, half-starved party were each placed between two of the fattest squaw so thaw out. After a few days they were taken to Port Burwell, just in time to be present for their own wake. Their belonging had been carefully packed to be shipped to their people.

The next ten days they spent in bed with the exception of the eskimo, who after he was well fed and thawed out he seemed none the worse for the experience.

Plane Never Found

After calculating their trip, they estimated they had travelled two hundred and seventy five miles and that they were forced down sixty miles out in the Cumberland coast of Labrador. The aeroplane was never found, it being a new Packer with seven hundred dollars and the speaker said that it would be made air-worthy in fifteen minutes.

Comrades of the Legion were high in their praise for the excellent address. Flt. Lt. Lewis was introduced to the members by Comrade Sergeant Jordan. Comrade B. F. Joyce extended a vote of thanks on behalf of the Legion and also took the opportunity of wishing Flt. Lt. Lewis many years in which he could carry on as they are leaving for England shortly by air. Flt. Lt. Lewis has been transferred.

London Rumors Say Lloyd George To Carry 'New Deal' Into Cabinet

Rumors are flying about London that David Lloyd George, Britain's famous statesman will soon enter the cabinet of the national government. Making a political comeback, the famous "Welsh wizard" is shown in the above layout in recent poses. Should LLOYD enter the cabinet of not more than five months. The address proved a sensation in England. And it undoubtedly brought about the rumors, however justified, that Lloyd George was preparing to return to the cabinet in some capacity.

These reports, it must be recorded, came despite the fact that the former prime minister started the Bangor speech with the remark that he never would—be a party leader again. To this, however, he added that he would co-operate with any existing party showing a willingness to adopt his plans.

Labor Scoffs

It is said Liberal leaders have "buried a whole armory of hatchets" and have turned receptive ears toward the veteran's "New Deal" program.

On the other hand the Laborites are apparently inclined to scoff at the efforts to solve the empire's economic ills with the public works scheme.

Pro and Con

Wales, of course, appeared enthusiastic in backing its native son. From the remainder of Britain came arguments pro and con. Would a London newspaper editorially:

"Lloyd George's appeal has for a year been at work in Parliament and, at best enthusiastic. His proposals are full of blemishes, but the fact remains that they could have been twice as unorginal and defective and his campaign could still produce a great effect."

Lloyd George's "New Deal", which he admitted, contained "excess and the same proposals" as President Roosevelt's program, is regarded by many as the vehicle on which the reformer may ride back to political favor and popularity.

If he does, it will mean the resumption of a career marked with brilliant statesmanship and achievement. He was first elected to parliament back in 1890. In 1908 he became Chancellor of the Exchequer and served in that capacity until 1915, when he was made minister of munitions. Named Prime Minister in 1916, he headed the cabinet until 1922. OVER 300 REVOLVERS REGISTERED AT STATION

Those Weapons Not in Working Condition Are Destroyed

It is estimated by local police authorities that well over 300 revolvers have been registered since the inauguration of the new law pertaining to the recording of all revolvers and pistols.

Daily, since the proclamation was issued, a steady stream of persons in possession of firearms have presented themselves at the police station to register their revolvers and any arms. Whenever a citizen presents a revolver or pistol that is damaged or broken to the extent that it has become useless, Chief Judd asks the owner for what use the weapon is kept. If the owner can give no reasonable answer the officers ask the owners if it would be permissible to lay charges against him. If the answer is in the affirmative the weapon is confiscated by the police and placed in safe-keeping for the time being, or until such time, when the charges against the owner have been disposed of.

People would be surprised how many revolver owners request that we dispose of or destroy their revolvers, especially if they have become useless and broken," stated Chief Judd. The police have displayed a large drawer full of old useless small firearms, that have been left at the police station to be destroyed by the authorities. In the near future a check-up by the Dominion Government is being contemplated, at which all revolvers that have not been registered will be confiscated while the owners will face charges in the courts, it is believed.

RELIEF COSTS

Relief expenditures in Canada have amounted to $418,214,000 in Canada during the past five years according to an estimate of the Financial Post, this total not including wheat bonus, and coal subventions, but covers the majority of the federal, provincial and municipal relief outlays. Naturally this had led to an increase in the debt of Canada, the provinces and the municipalities. In many municipalities the relief costs were not raised through current taxes but on the strength of credit.

It is pointed out that the volume of employment in Canada during 1934 showed a material increase, the amount of relief money spent did not decrease to the same extent. In December there were 1,235,000 dependent on relief, as compared with 1,370,000 at the end of 1933. Three factors are blamed for the discrepancy, the drought conditions in certain areas of Canada in 1934, the increase in white collar workers, who having spent their savings are now dependent on relief, and a considerable portion of the re-employment is temporarial.

It is argued that a greater part of relief ought to be covered by current revenues, says the Alexander Institute monthly letter.

The million and a third who were out of work in 1933 were through the depression prevented from making their contribution to improvements in Canada. While some person perhaps were better off the nation as a whole, an army of unemployed as great as the majority of the people have suffered. That is the pain of too great expansion of credit and too great a leap into the future. Work projected too far into the future means that the present is eating up the work that might naturally be for men and women in the future.

CHANGES IN MOTOR LAWS

Unsafe travel conditions in the England of the eighteenth century gave rise to the word "highwayman" to signify a robber who held up a stage coach and robbed and often killed the occupants. Highwaymen were also known in the days of the development of the United States West.

But the word has fallen into disuse. There are not so many robberies on highways in this country. Yet there is a greater tragedy being enacted without let-up day in and day out, and at night too—the slaughtering of human life under the wheels or before the bumper of motor-cars. If it were not the fact that the old word 'highwayman' is so associated in the public mind with holdups, it would be easy to see that the public would coin a word like it, perhaps the same word 'highwayman' to indicate the careless motorist who leaves death in his wake. He is at times called the hit-and-run driver but that does not entirely fit the case.

But even if there is no striking name for the death-driver, the fact remains that an awful tragedy is written across the highways and streets of various countries. Britain has had the worst year in its highway history and is determined to bring about betterment of conditions leading to greater safety.

In Ontario more drastic laws are foreseen.

The death toll must cease. There is even a hint that as one of the last resorts governors may be placed on cars to limit the speed. Yet no one wants to see that imposition as in the odd instance it might even lead to tragedy because of the inability of a motor car to get out of the way of an impending crash.

The highwayman shocked the people of the England of two centuries ago. So did the highway bandit of the United States West in stage coach days. But unfortunately death has oft been reported in incidents on the roads that no one quivers a muscle at the thought, except those who participate in the tragedy or their friends, and in the neighborhood where the tragedy occurs and the reckless drivers continue recklessly driving.

SOMEWHERE

At the wedding feast of Andreas Garganty and Ilovna Kuli in the village of Baja-Soe, in mid-Europe, guests consumed 1500 gallons of wine, 700 gallons of beer, 215 gallons of liquor, and 1800 pounds of meat. At Baiaslava, Czechoslovakia, at the four-day feast at a gypsy wedding, three bulls, two horses, 200 gallons of wine and 200 gallons of brandy disappeared.

There is no scarcity there, no talk of depression. It is pleasant to read anent news which is not tinted with the blue of depression. Somewhere in this world they marry and are given in marriage, there is rejoicing; even if not all the accompaniments of the mid-European feasts are to be found.

Here in this country people would like to forget, if they could and partake of the joy of life expressed by these gypsies of another continent, though our standards do not generally stretch to take in so much feasting and drinking.

But somewhere some people are serenely happy even if for the time being. Here our lives seem to be so much dominated by the money motive that we have lost some of the glorious abandon of these gypsy people. And if we have lost that abandon we are naturally more solemn and serious of course and in these days take our pleasures sadly, even the least learned scarcely forgetting economics, and the well-off talking depression.

Does the daily course of our lives look more like the page of a business ledger than it ought to look? It seems that such a description might be levelled at some of us, though our civilization has advantages the feasting gypsy cannot know. But sometimes we look towards him as being so very happy.

USING UNEMPLOYED MEN TO PROSPECT FOR GOLD

Australia and particularly the state of Victoria make no bones about their desire to mine more gold. Prospectors will receive a pound a week in allowances and will be provided with proper equipment for their work, and it is expected that 3,000 otherwise unemployed men will find work in this way. The state of Victoria, in addition to spending £50,000 in this way, will spend an additional £25,000 in the supplying of plant, construction of roads and tracks and in the edu-cating of miners. At a time when gold is of tremendous value, it would seem that the Australian government is doing two sources of gold and providing worthwhile useful things, seeking to discover new work for otherwise unemployed men. Maybe the Canadian government could, with profit, take a leaf out of the Australian book.—Niagara Falls Review.

MASSEY VERSUS MASSEY

Mr. J. Earl Lawson, Dominion commander-in-chief of the Canadian forces in the forthcoming campaign, makes the arresting announcement that his corps commander on the Ontario front will be Mr. Denton Massey. If it seems to us, is almost a touch of genius. For Mr. Denton Massey, as most people probably know, is a cousin of Mr. Vincent Massey, who is Mr. King's chief of staff. So we have a battle of the Masseys, with cousin Denton plying his legions to check the advances or to carry the trenches held by cousin Vincent, a spectacle that should add greatly to the flamor of the conflict.

As to which of the Masseys is likely to prevail, one cannot pretend to know, leave the matter of those heroic souls who indulge in election prophecy.—Ottawa Journal.

TOO BUSY TO THINK

A prominent woman beauty specialist now touring in Canada, after a protracted visit in Europe, says that she observes that women on this continent are drinking less intoxicants than was the case a few years ago and thereby improving their physical appearance. She complains, however, that one of the social shortcomings of the women of this continent is that they fail to take sufficient time to be alone occasionally and engage in constructive meditation. She advises them to do that because she says that if there is not sufficient devotion to serious thought, the woman's conversation degenerates into chatter and she gradually becomes less intelligent and unattractive.

It might be remarked that the beauty specialist's criticism is not alone applicable to the women. Residents of current conditions have frequently said that life on the American continent is lived too much in crowds and that the population has lost its capacity to get otherwise than as a mob. Certainly, the generally organization of society today does not offer much opportunity for either men or women to be alone or to find time for serious thought on any problem. That is probably one of the reasons why so many important matters seem to be at loose ends.—Woodstock Sentinel-Review.

Out where the West begins, continues and never seems to end, there is a lot of hilly country where the fields of one year may be just a rocky slope the next, from erosion. The rain comes, continues and comes again, the wind blows, and that field just washes away down the gully; goes where it listeth and stops where it is not listed, and that farm is short a promising back forty or front twenty, or whatever it was. Well, our Dallas correspondent tells us of an Oklahoma farmer whose farm, the productive part of it, washed away from him in the rains. Terraces were built to stay the soil and temporary ponds were formed in the wake of the heavy rains which attracted wild ducks in great numbers. The farmer now sells some hunting privileges at a lovely dollars per—which again proves that its an ill wind that blows nobody good.

THERE ARE SMITHS IN DALLAS, just the same as there are Smiths in Belleville, and everywhere else, even Heaven. Here's a Smith story from our Dallas correspondent:

A. L. Smith has a brother, G. A. Smith Jr., who operates the Smith Detective Agency, 610 North Akard.

Smith, who admited he was almost as frightened as the thief, advanced and said:

"Do you want me to drop all these packages and blast you one or will you go quietly into the office?"

Awed, the thief obeyed. The detective agency called the police.

The policeman arrived, started to make his report. He turned to A. L. Smith.

"What's your name?"

"Smith."

"O K, what's yours?" turning to the thief.

"Smith. What's yours?"

"Nuts," remarked Patrolman J. Roland Smith, signing his name to the report.

FEAR COMMON TO EVERYONE IN SOME FORM

Endeavor to Find The True Reason For Your Fear

By Louis E. Bisch, M.D., Ph.D., Famous Authority on Health and Psychology

(Copyright, 1934, King Features Syndicate, Inc.)

Everybody is running away! Scarcely a person living is not afraid of something. Every individual is bothered, upset and handicapped by some thought, feeling or experience that he tries to forget.

To forget is to run away! And when you run away you are afraid!

It was once considered sound psychological advice to tell a fearful person to just "shut himself and forget. Now we know that forgetting is impossible.

Forgetting merely means repressing, pushing the idea from the conscious mind into the unconscious! Today we no longer say "forget". We say, "Face your fear and never run away, no matter what happens."

To try to forget makes your fear worse. It gives to your fears an importance which is not really deserved. To find yourself running away makes you afraid even of yourself.

Try, for a change, to think in a different way of the things from which you run. Think of it as the only escape, say to yourself: "If I am to...Moving Day Next Week, there is a reason. Certainly, my mind would not be torturing me for nothing."

And that is the fact! Fears are merely signs or symbols of something else. Fear is the cause left behind it!

Look back and you may be surprised to find that your fear of lightning dates back to childhood days, when, you might say, you knew no better. Perhaps your fear of the dark comes from reading about a fairy tale of the black woods, or a story you were told when you were younger that you go in the dark to devour mad little boys and girls.

And maybe your fears are pure exaggeration after all. not really warranted if you rear them out calmly.

Think calmly about these dread prospects and, more likely than not you will see how absurd it all is, how grossly you have let your imagination run riot and make mountains out of mole hills.

Yes, take your fears in hand fearlessly! Don't run. Face about and fight back.

If you analyze your behavior, you may be surprised and even amused at what a trivial experience in the past is responsible, when the foolish fear is allowed to boss your undoing.

Everyone can banish fear by this newer way of dealing with the problem. Remember that trying to forget is like trying to push down that explode any minute despite your inability to see it.

Remember that the more often you run away the worse your fears become. You must therefore, stop running, stop being afraid. Take an "about-face" attitude, fight your fears, and you may conquer them.

Nothing makes cowards of us all so quickly as fear. Nothing undermines our peace of mind and our health as much as fear.

Conquer your fears if it is the last thing you do!

TAKE ONE! THY'RE SMALL!

Unemployment Insurance in England: How It Works There; Cost to Worker

Comparison of Task Abroad And In Canada

By MARIKA HELLSTROM

Central Press Canadian Correspondent

London, Feb. 8—Canada now turns its attention to social insurance, in such matters Europe has progressed most rapidly. An examination therefore of European methods of meeting unemployment problems is interesting and illuminating.

Unemployment insurance has had a long and varied history in Europe and as far east as Australia. It is a new problem in Canada, although there has been accident insurance paid for by the employer (workmen's compensation). That, however, is regarded by economists as merely a half-way station between private risk and co-operation among employer, worker and government needed for unemployment insurance.

Private Attempts

A few examples of co-operative offers already are in practice in the Dominion on a private basis only. Many more are there in the United States. In the unemployment insurance agreement in the clothing industries of New York and Chicago, the cost is borne equally by employer and employee, amounting to 1½ per cent. of the worker's wages.

This arrangement is found elsewhere in Italy, where it was introduced by Mussolini in 1923.

In New York, the hat and cap industry has a special agreement between its workers' union and employers, whereby the fund is financed by the employers alone, who pay 3 per cent of the total amount of wages each year. The only other example of this insurance system is in the Soviet Union, where the costs are theoretically borne by the employer alone. Since industry there is nationalized, it is the state which pays in the U.S.S.R.

Two Kinds of Insurance

A system of unemployment insurance—if it is obligatory, as the Canadian system may be—makes necessary a well-organized system of employment bureaus all over the country to constantly place the jobless where they are needed by industry.

This line of development has been followed in England, which possesses the best example of "dole" insurance, aiding millions of unemployed. England also was the pioneer in this field of legislation, although it was not the first to try unemployment insurance.

Two kinds of insurance, observers find, are related to the two main types of "economic housekeeping" in the world, especially, highly industrialized countries take to "obligatory" insurance, while the chiefly agricultural nations turn to the "voluntary" kind.

Insurance in England

Thus England, with her great masements, some critics assert, often led Hunger marchers in London.

New legislation enacted by the British parliament increases the number of workers eligible to unemployment insurance benefits, though London has seen many processions by hunger marchers, protesting against the new regulations.

of laborers crowded in cities, decided to try obligatory insurance as an "experiment" in 1911 for all building workers and longshoremen. This was such a success that, in 1916 all unskilled labor was added. That gave England 12 million insured workers.

Those earning less than 250 pounds ($1,200 at par) a year, must contribute 9 pence (approximately 18 cents) weekly. Added to this is 6% pence from the state for each worker, and 10 pence from the employer. The laborer who loses his job because of industrial decline is entitled to 18 shillings 6 pence (approximately $4.40 at par) a week for 26 weeks. In times of extraordinary economic depression, the benefit period can be lengthened indefinitely and the worker receives the "transitional benefit", popularly known as the "dole".

"Abuses" Bring Supervision

The right to such additional payments, however, is carefully supervised by the labor exchanges, to great abuse. Recently the England national-coalition government, dominated by Tory Conservatives, revised the administration of unemployment insurance funds. First Premier Ramsay MacDonald, compelling each worker to show that he has no means of support other than the dole. An unemployment assistance board then was set up to administer the transitional benefits apart from the regular payments.

England is the only country to develop a complete system of state employment bureaus in connection with insured workers. The jobless report once a week to their respective bureaus. The last step in attempting to affect times of stress through government intervention was made recently when Prime Minister Ramsay MacDonald announced that the unemployed would be organized into a movable "army" recruited from the sections of the country most afflicted, to be sent wherever there was a shortage of labor.

CONGREGATIONAL MEETING IS HELD

Supper Preceded Business Meeting of Tweed United Church

Tweed—The annual congregational meeting of Tweed United Church was held on Wednesday evening in the Church parlors with a splendid attendance. Supper was served at seven o'clock. At the conclusion of the supper the meeting was called to order by the Pastor, Rev. R. R. Nicholson and was opened with the singing of a hymn and prayer. On motion Mr. S. H. Connor was chosen as secretary of the meeting. The minutes of the last annual meeting were accepted as read. Reports of the various organizations of the church were received.

The first organization to report was the Sunday School. Mr. W. S. Gordon was asked for this report. He in turn called upon the leaders of the different departments. The treasurer, Mr. W. J. Gordon, teacher of the Young Men's Class stated that eight of the members had moved away in the past year and that the attendance was not as large on that account.

The Cradle Roll Department under Mrs. T. N. Healey is in a flourishing condition with 44 members up to the age of three years. Miss Bessie Gordon, leader of the C. G. I. T., reported an average attendance of 17 at their Friday evening meetings and mentioned some of the activities carried on during the year. In conclusion Mr. Gordon stated that during the year nine teachers had been lost to the school but their places had been filled.

The report of the Young People's Society was given by the President, Miss Bessie Gordon who stated that interesting meetings were held and the attendance averaged 35.

The Women's Missionary Society one of the most active organizations of the church, presented a splendid report through its immediate Past President, Mrs. J. Y. Robertson. The membership is sixty-three, of whom sixteen are life members. During the past three years 12 active members had been lost through death or removals. The sum of $435.33 was forwarded to the branch treasurer, Mrs. Minden Reid under the leadership of Mr. W. J. McCutcheon and Mrs. W. R. Tummon reported a very successful year. Mrs. A. McTaggart reported for the Baby Band.

The Women's Association report was given by Mrs. A. A. Gerrard who stated that the membership was eighty. Tummon, chairman of the Board of Stewards, the financial report of the church was given by Mr. S. H. Connor. Total receipts during the year amounted to $3,339.95 and expenditures to $3,321.45, leaving a credit balance of $18.50. For the first time in nearly fifteen years the year was ended with the church, not with a debt.

The pastor's report given by Rev. Nicholson showed that there was a total of 189 families in membership under pastoral supervision there are 675 persons. During the year there were thirteen baptisms with seven funerals. Resident members are numbered 278, and 7 non-resident members 52. During the year a total of $5,160.00 was raised by the churches for all purposes.

Naturally you would expect to be able to buy tobacco at every tobacco store, at every hotel, restaurant and cafe, at most department stores, at every village or crossroads general store, and at most drug stores. But add all such retail outlets together and there would still be 17,500 other places of business in Canada where you would find Imperial Tobacco Company brands regularly on sale.

TRINITY CHURCH VESTRY MEETING

Reports Are Read And Church Officials Appointed

In the absence, through illness, of Mr. T. E. Keichesen, Church Warden, the financial report was read by the Vestry Clerk which showed a very substantial amount to credit to begin the new year.

Reports were also given by representatives of the various organizations which were very favorably received.

Interesting Items From Ameliasburg

Ameliasburg, Feb. 11—Saturday, Feb. 2, was Candlemas Day, also called the Feast of the Purification the presentation of Christ in the Temple. In olden days the curious opinion became so popular that if the sun shone on Candlemas Day it was unlucky because the new Saviour was the true light of the world. It became the rule, so the people claimed, that the animals, especially the bear and wood-chuck, shunned the sun on that day. In Scotland and some other countries it grew into belief that if the sun shone bright enough for the badgers, bears and wood-chucks to see their shadow that day, winter would last for forty days more. In Eastern Canada Candlemas Day is known as Mid-winter Day and the farmers are accustomed to judge by it how their hay is going to hold out. If they find that more than half of the hay has been used they imagine it will be short and must sell some of their stock.

PLANS TO BENEFIT CATTLEMARKETING

Scheme Will be Explained Fully to Ontario Farmers

Toronto, Feb. 8—(CP)—A plan designed to bring about more profitable marketing of cattle in Great Britain and other European countries was before farmers of Ontario today.

The Ontario Export Association produced the plan after a meeting here yesterday and announced farmers from various parts of the province would shortly be invited to meet in various centres for the purpose of discussing and approving the plan.

The scheme, now before the Federal government, was drawn up with a view to obtaining control of shipping space on Atlantic boats for Ontario cattle and also establishing their own shipping agent or organization in Montreal or other points of export. An overseas marketing agency would also be established.

The directors of the association passed a resolution calling meetings in 10 counties at which a qualified expert will explain the scheme and call for discussion of the farmers attending.

Weddings

MacPHERSON—ROSS

At Danforth United Church, Toronto, at three o'clock on Saturday afternoon a wedding of interest to Belleville took place when Mary Fraser, daughter of Rev. John A. and Mrs. Ross became the bride of Mr. John Wilfred MacPherson, Belleville, son of Mrs. MacPherson, Belleville, and the late Mr. James MacPherson. Rev. John A. Ross, father of the bride, and Rev. John J. Coulter, pastor of the church, officiated at the ceremony.

The bride who was given in marriage by her brother, Mr. John C. Ross, was unattended. She wore a lovely gown of Colonial blue cut velvet with matching hat and accessories, and carried pink roses and lilies of the valley.

Mr. Harold Reid presided at the organ for wedding music and during the signing of the register, Miss Florence O'Neil of Toronto, sang, "Ave Maria" (Bach).

The bride and groom left from the church on a motor trip south, the bride being a Hudson seal coat with silver fox collar. Upon their return they will reside at Belleville.

Among the out-of-town guests were: Mrs. MacPherson, Miss Kathleen, Mary and Clarabelle MacPherson and Miss Lucille Brown, Belleville; Mr. and Mrs. Shelley Denyes, of Odessa; Mrs. Jas. Marshall of Milford; Mr. and Mrs. John C. Ross, of Oshawa.

BARTON—BARDAHL

Rawdon (Special)—A quiet but pretty wedding was solemnized on Monday morning, Dec. 31, 1934, in Bethel Church, Lennan, Sask., when Marvel, second daughter of Mr. and Mrs. John Bardahl, of Lennan, became the bride of Mr. Raymond Barton, of Regina, Sask., son of Mr. and Mrs. Chas. Barton of Havelock, Rev. O. J. Morrison of the Norwegian Lutheran Church, performed the ceremony.

The church was decorated with pink and white streamers, roses and sweet peas, and ushering the guests were Mr. Allen Jorgenson and Mr. Hubert Grand.

The bride, who entered the church on the arm of her father, wore a gown of ivory satin made on long lines and finished with a lace jacket. She wore a bridal veil and carried a shower bouquet of roses and lilies of the valley.

Miss Mildred Bardahl, sister of the bride, was bridesmaid and wore a model gown of powder blue chiffon. Miss Joyce England was the flower girl and wore a frock of yellow and pale green organdie. Mr. Lyle Dreyer of Regina, attended the groom.

Mrs. Ed. Gordon, sister of the bride, was organist and played Mendelssohn's Wedding March for the ceremony, while Miss Victoria Leinan sang, "I Love You Truly" during the signing of the register.

After the ceremony a wedding breakfast with the attendants and immediate relatives present was served. Mr. and Mrs. Bardahl received with the bridal party, the latter wearing a becoming gown of navy blue crepe. Helen Grand supervised the arranging of the wedding breakfast.

Advice to the Lovelorn

By Beatrice Fairfax

CHANGED WITHIN A WEEK.

Dear Miss Fairfax:

What would you think of a boy who said one week he loved you more than anything else in the world, and the next week seemed to act sort of cool toward you? Is it because he is growing tired of me

S. W.

You may have shown too quickly how much you cared. That sometimes has the effect of frightening them away. In these days of economic storm and stress, a young man has to have a pretty comfortable salary before he can consider marrying, and when a girl shows symptoms of becoming serious, they sometimes drop out.

SOUNDS AS IF HE WERE BASHFUL

Dear Miss Fairfax:

I didn't fall for him till five or six weeks ago, when I gave a little informal supper party for our class, but I just can't get him to take me out on a date. He goes to our school dances, but always as a stag. He will dance with me a few times, and then spend the rest of the evening looking at me.

I can't understand why he doesn't invite me out, because he has money and a car, and I've made it plain to him that I'd be glad to have him call some evening. I feel that, as I invited him to my party and he paired off with me, he should invite me out. But after that party he took a whole week before he started paying any attention to me again.

This young man strikes me as having a very bad case of bashfulness, and I think you may have to invite him to another informal supper party before you bring him around. Why not make up a foursome, and go to the movies?

As one girl said to me: It takes a heroine almost to get one of these bashful fellows started.

Mr. and Mrs. Warren Arbuckle entertained about twenty-five relatives and friends at their home on Wednesday evening.

Mrs. Daniel Hagerman spent the past week at the home of her daughter Mrs. Russel Reid.

Birth—On Saturday February the second to Mr. and Mrs. Jack Tracey, a son.

Mrs. Wm. Kerr of Thomasburg, has returned to her home, after spending the past month with her brother and sister, Mr. and Miss Emerson.

Mrs. W. Claspadle spent the past week with her sister, Mrs. J. M. Waterhouse of Ameliasburg.

Jubilee Singers Sing in Church

Carolina Jubilee Singers, James A. Shaver, tenor, Miss Alberta Pope, soprano, Mrs. Roma Russell, piano, Miss Ernestine Lyle, contralto, William O. Sanford, baritone, and Daniel E. Davies, pianist and organist, sang a number of southern hymns at the evening service on Sunday at Bridge Street United Church. The large congregation heard jubilee songs, melodies, spirituals, which emphasized in clearest style the religious aspirations of the race. The fine qualities of voice possessed by the singers were much admired.

It was particularly fitting that at the same service, the birth of Abraham Lincoln was the subject of the address of Dr. James Semple, the pastor.

Making One Child The Favorite

Parents Should Guard Against Danger of Showing Partiality

By LISA GRENELLE

"Be careful of Katie, Frances," her mother cautioned her the very last thing. "Are you warm enough, dear?" she asked the younger child. There was no need to ask Frances whether she was warm enough. Frances never felt the cold. She had always been so strong ever since she was a baby, a pretty, healthy, cheerful child. She never gave any cause for anxiety.

But with Katie it had been a very different story. Poor little Katie she had always been delicate, a puny, whimpering baby—later infantile paralysis leaving her with a limp, and a kind of shrinking from normal companionship of her own age.

Was it any wonder that Katie had always been her mother's child cause for anxiety, her greatest concern? Frances could take care of herself. But Katie must be coaxed and pampered.

Unfair to Both Children

Was it after all too much to expect Frances to give up some of her good times to take Katie out? She had so many. Katie so few opportunities to enjoy herself.

Mrs. Graves meant well, she was such a good, kind mother, so anxious to make up to Katie for the bad time she had had, for all the good times she must miss.

How could she be expected to realize that she was being unfair to both girls? That she was making Katie, naturally clinging, hopelessly dependent upon herself; narrowing her already unlimited boundaries for more than they need have been narrowed? That she was causing everything because of her mother's pity for her, indulged and spoiled, at not only her mother's expense, but at Frances', certainly to the ruination of her own character. Not only an afflicted but a spoiled, demanding and entirely selfish little girl Katie soon became.

Needed Affection, Too

Frances grew to hate her sister. It grew slowly, that aversion. Frances was naturally a kind, affectionate child, only too willing in the beginning to help cheer up little Katie; only too willing at first to give up for her little things, good times, and small luxuries, the love to Katie because she wasn't well. But Katie wasn't grateful. The young she had grown to take all sacrifices on her behalf as a matter of course.

Frances might have accepted that, at least for a little longer, she was a good natured girl, if it hadn't been for her mother's attitude. Anything for Katie, still so little, to take things done for her for granted, but for her mother to allow the older daughter to sacrifice continually for her younger sister's comfort, seldom with praise—that hurt.

And Frances, though fortunate, was not always fortunate. She, too, had her problems, her disappointments, her low hours. She also needed a mother. She needed affection, tenderness, comfort, praise and encouragement. But she didn't get them.

So Frances withdrew and became self-centered, resentful and a little bitter, all natural pity for unfortunate things k ed in her.

Fashion Flashes

It's a treat to see black chiffon coming back. A new dinner suit has a one-button tailored jacket of black sequins over a gown of circ black chiffon that is blistered to look like dull black coal. Shoulder straps and belt are of the black paillettes.

We gather our necklines this season, as so many of the frocks, both for day and evening, are of this style; those for daytear are often worn with a cord. An exquisite evening frock, a sheath of white moire antique, has the side of the skirt slit almost to the knee, while the neck is gathered like a baby's frock all around and close to the throat.

Going away with plenty of smart knitted clothes means that the traveller will always be well dressed. A nice suit is in bluish-grey, handknitted in a fine diagonal stitch that looks like tweed. The jumper is grey with a top of scarlet circles.

Dancing along the path of success is Alaska sealskin, now in favor after many years of neglect. It is being used for charming suits and coats, especially in a glowing bronze shade. A coat of fine tweed in a champagne color has a detachable Ascot and gauntlet cuffs of bronze Alaska sealskin.

Don't copy but be original in your clothes. A charming new frill that manages to be different is in fact always new. Purchase a heavy woolen with a fairly heavy basket weave. The one-button coat shows the front lined on either side with a bold plaid silk liner in crimson, navy and beige. There is a jumper blouse of the plaid silk jersey.

Just the thought of early Spring clothes makes us all eager to be off shopping. For wear with the new navy and grey woolen frocks is a splendid cape of wide dyed fox in deep navy blue. This has a double standing collar and is fastened with a huge antique silver clasp.

DR. BISCH'S DAILY DIET HINT

Persons who habitually suffer "gas" distress after eating potatoes or other starchy foods should cut down the carbohydrate content of their diet to a minimum. Usually such persons do not digest fats readily. Well-cooked cereals may be eaten with skimmed or whole milk. The diet should be augmented with eggs, heats, fish and oysters.

Too Tired at 5 o'clock?

Revitalize your blood stream and the day's work will not weary you so!

When tiredness-turns into torture, when it changes joy folks into glum ones and when it won't be shaken off with sleep . . . it is a tiredness which is akin to a disease. And to find its cause is the first step to securing a remedy.

To be over-tired is to be underenergized. You get your energy from and through your blood. Then build up the blood and your new supplies of energy will overcome your fatigue. The remedy that will do this is one that was recently tested by a competent authority on 40 run-down men and women. Proof of its restorative value was shown by the blood before and after treatment.

Remarkable results in one month

Blood tests are scientific. They can't mislead you. So the competent authority who made the blood tests of the 40 run-down people relied upon tests to show exactly how much progress in health this group of people made.

The treatment he gave was Dr. Williams' Pink Pills (called pink because of their pink sugar coating) . . . two after each meal for about 30 days. At the end of the month each of the 40 people returned for another blood test. Then the microscope told an astonishing story of repaired vitality. Thirty-eight of the forty had now much richer blood. There was more iron-nutriment (haemoglobin) in their blood and more red cells (erythrocytes) of the same nutriment. In every case where the count of red blood cells was found below normal at the first blood test, Dr. Williams' Pink Pills increased it. Moreover, patients in all these cases reported that they felt very much benefited. They had gained vigour and strength. Appetite had improved, nerves were better, digestion improved and they again enjoyed work and play.

When tiredness-turns 40 people irrefutably show that treatment with Dr. Williams' Pink Pills helped them back to vigour and health, you have abundant evidence that you, too, can benefit in the same way. Why risk not a new remedy. It has been known by a Canadian physician, a graduate of Edinburgh University. There are thousands of people in many countries who gratefully ascribe their joyous health to the taking of Dr. Williams' Pink Pills. Haven't you often said that you would give everything to be rid of chronic tiredness? Then here's the treatment, which by actual blood tests has proved it can help you. Start back to health and vitour today. Dr. Williams' Pink Pills are sold at 50c per package.

THEY MAY BE LITTLE, BUT THEY'RE HEALTHY

Life looks just as good to little fellows as it does to big ones. At least that seems to be the sentiment that Day Dream, 14-ounce Pomeranian, and Buzzie, 18-ounce Pekingese, try to express when they romp together. Both are "runts" despite their long lineage of blue blood. Day Dream, three months old, should weigh three times his 14-ounces any minute now and the scales at twice his weight, according to Mrs. Denver Harmon, of Los Angeles, their owner.

Correct Manners

BRIDE'S PLANS

Dear Mrs. Beeckman:

I am to be married soon, I work in an office with about fifteen other girls, all of whom I like very much, but friendly with them as I am, I only intimate with a few. Would it be correct to just invite a few of them, or should I invite them all? I would like them all to come, but I feel that I might be imposing on them by asking.

2. I am going to have a buffet supper after the ceremony. Is this correct?

3. Could we have just a table decorated and with food and dishes, buffet style, or is a table necessary, and if so, who sits there?

4. How soon after the best wishes have been given is it correct for the bride and groom to leave?

5. How soon after wedding presents are received should "thank you" letters be sent?

F.

1. Since you "would like them all to come". I am sure that they would all like to come, and it would be friendly and thoughtful of you to invite them. They are probably all thrilled this minute with your plans for your wedding, and so they are a part of that joy of being your guests on that happy day.

2. Yes, this is correct, and the ofttimes most delightful and convenient to plan for any number that is more than a few.

3. It really is not necessary to have a bride's table, but it is such a picturesque and memory-making part of the Great Event that I hope you can plan to have it. Isn't it? If you can plan the planning...a table set aside from the guest's decorated table, or just a bride's table if you prefer, and if you wish, the wedding cake as the central decoration. At this table sit the bride and groom at the head of the table, the bride at the right of the groom. On the right of the bride is the best man, and on the left of the groom is the bride's chief attendant. The bridesmaids and ushers then are seated alternately, as women and men are seated at any dinner, if there are a few attendants you did not tell me your plans about thus, then may ask your brothers and sisters and the brothers and sisters of the groom and close friends of both you and of the groom.

The bride and groom leave whenever they wish for this depends on their plans. They usually do not stay until the end of the reception, but when they have received their guests just as soon as you can...if possible, write each day notes of appreciation for the gifts received that day.

Write me again if you think of any other questions. And if you wish to have my pamphlets on various details of the wedding, send me an addressed envelope, and I shall be most happy to send them to you.

MATCHING ATTIRE

Dear Mrs. Beeckman:

Is it proper for a woman to attend a dinner at a private home in strict evening wear and her husband in an ordinary dark street suit? The affair is both formal and informal?

E.

No, these type of attire should be consistent. Strict evening wear for a man is tail-coat, but, since this party is apparently not of such strict formality, the man would probably wear dinner jacket, tuxedo suit.

HAND-IN-GLOVE?

Dear Mrs. Beeckman:

I have been told that it is, and is not, correct form to shake hands with gloves on. I have seen very prominent ladies do both, I am very anxious to know which or if both are really correct? If it isn't correct, and you happen to meet anyone, should you prolong the hand-shake by walling to remove your glove? Please give me the details on it.

Anxious.

Etiquette does not require that a woman remove her glove before she shakes hands. Men should remove the glove of the right hand before they shake hands. No comment need be made about not taking off the glove....never, never "Pardon my glove". The woman doesn't remove hers, and the man does...and therefore no comment is necessary.

STREAK OF FLAME SHOOTS DOWN CAR

Windsor, Ont., Feb. 11—(CP)—When a short circuit occurred in the cabin control system of a Detroit trolley pole to the controller at the front of a street-car there a streak of flame shot down the interior of the tram, throwing the passengers into a high state of excitement, and causing burns to Mary Frances Byrne, 16-year-old Windsor girl.

The motor man brought the car to a quick stop and threw open the doors but in the confusion a window was smashed as the passengers hurriedly made their exit.

DIONNE TOUR IS NOW IN THE RED

Promoter Halperin Says Tastes of Parent Quite High

Chicago, Feb. 11 (AP)—Plain folk of you would heed their promoter, is something Ma and Pa Dionne were—not are.

So swift and complete have been their adjustments to the luxuries and their luxurious surroundings, promoter Max Halperin complained yesterday, they have helped run their loss of $900 into the red—and in less than a week.

Estre Dionne, father of the Ontario quintuplets, has learned, Halperin said, casting away an empty package he had opened a few hours before, that the ways of getting cigarettes other than buying them himself.

And the double duty drain on his cigarette supply, the promoter explained ruefully, is only one of his many woes.

Take the nondescript Canadian farmer and his wife who are parents of ten children, have clad themselves in linens in which a decided preference for fine foods at fancy prices and between meals sip a quart or so of soda pop all of which for cash. Apply A-1 Sign Study, 140A Front St. f9-3t

'Lest We Forget' War Picture is Readyfor Release

Ottawa, Feb. 11 (CP)—Following a private showing of Canada's military war film before the prime minister and members of the cabinet Saturday, the government today formally authorized its release. The picture, entitled "Lest We Forget", is being sponsored by the Canadian Legion with governmental approval.

The theme of the film is Canada's part in the Great War but it emphasizes the whole conflict in a wide sweep. Its purpose, chiefly, is to portray the sordidness and stupidity of war and in so doing an effort has been made to "soft-pedal" its horrors. Ghastly engagements bring home the stark tragedy of war and its futility.

All of the film is the property of the government. Some of it is the old, reconstructed from the archives of both allied and formerly hostile countries. Some early battle sequences are re-enactments, made years ago under the authority and direction of the British government; some are of the "home front" and official film taken by the staff of Lord Beaverbrook when he was director of the Canadian War Records in London during the war.

Considerable footage in the picture has been under the direction of a committee of which Major-General A. G. L. McNaughton, C.B., chief of the general staff. The narration, written in the ways of getting action in war, is by Captain W. W. Murray, M.C., of Ottawa.

All phases of the picture have been carefully scrutinized by defence department experts to ensure accuracy both as to technical detail and historical exactness.

The picture is now in its last stage of having the sound effects inserted. These will be the guiding narrative with a background of music appropriate to the sequences.

What Local Theatre Managers Have to Say About Current Offerings

AT THE CAPITOL

"Gentlemen Are Born"

The True Story of the So-called "Flaming Youth"

What the stark realities of life do to the hordes of young men who, filled with high hopes and confidence, are poured forth from colleges and high schools every year, forms the theme of a most powerful drama of life today, "Gentlemen Are Born", which is the current feature attraction at the Capitol Theatre.

To adequately present this unusual drama, the story has been provided with an equally unusual cast of young film stars. Franchot Tone, who has the leading role, is assisted by Margaret Lindsay, Jean Muir and Ann Dvorak, three of the screen's outstanding actresses. Russ Alexander, Nick Foran and Robert Light, all leading juvenile actors of the Broadway stage make their film debuts in this picture and reports from Hollywood indicate that they will be screen stars of tomorrow.

The story, written by Robert Lord Johnson, shows four college chums, each of whom is sure he is destined to success when he leaves college. One intends to be a great newspaper man, another is to be a great architect; the third, a nationally famous college football star is confident that he will make a record as a coach, and the fourth is to follow in his wealthy father's footsteps.

Fate takes them in hand and does things to them. Of the men, one dies a felon; another breaks physically and spiritually when his father and unable to withstand the financial crash commits suicide. The other two fare better.

The picture, however, is not all tragedy. Its serious romances can be imagined than those enacted by Tone and Margaret Lindsay, Alexander and Jean Muir, and Nick Foran and Ann Dvorak.

Rousing college songs, including several catchy familiar airs, will be heard throughout the picture which is highly recommended for every member of the family.

Added Attractions.

A funny comedy starring the inimitable Ben Blue and entitled "All Aboard Up", an interesting Pepper Pot Review "Movie Memories" and a Terrytoon Cartoon "King Zilch" will be shown as supporting features to the feature presentation.

Du Barry to come today.

Shows at 2.30, 7.15 and 9.15.

C. C. F. PLATFORM IS ANNOUNCED

Leaders Claim Capitalist System Has Collapsed

Ottawa, Feb. 11—Reform or reconstruction will be the dominant issue at the next general election, according to the National Council of the Co-operative Commonwealth Federation in session here, if the manifesto issued Saturday, the C. C. F. delegates declared by both parties represented that capitalist system has collapsed.

In order that drastic reforms had not solved economic problems. The C. C. F. believed capitalism could neither be reformed nor restored, and the only solution to present difficulties was to create a new social order.

The manifesto advocated socialization of all financial institutions and the employment of national credit for financing socially useful public works. It urged a minimum income for the farmer as first consideration, and legislation for reduction of farm debts, planned marketing, reduction of price spread between farmer and consumer on his produce and what he pays out, co-operation of producers and consumers on co-operatives.

Public works, a national minimum wage, "an effective voice for the workers in the management of industry, non-contributory social insurance against unemployment, sickness, accident, invalidity and death, socialized health services, the five-day week and the five-day week and abolition of 'relief' camps were other planks in the C. C. F. platform.

HAUPTMANN CASE MAY GO TO JURY EARLY TUESDAY

date of his discovery of the ransom money in a shoebox, left in his care by the late Isador Ptach.

The defence summation will consist of nine points, Reilly will contend all the evidence, purporting to connect Hauptmann with the actual crime of burglary, as the indictment charges, with the abduction of the child, the death and the ransom collection is not only circumstantial (the state, of course, concedes that) but that it is of the flimsiest nature and does not warrant a conviction.

The Brooklyn lawyer will remark the fact that no fingerprints found in the house or on the ladder, were Hauptmann's. He will charge the writing of the notes is not Hauptmann's handwriting, but Isidor Fisch's.

He will tell the jury that Louis Kiss saw Hauptmann in a Bronx bakery on the night of the kidnapping; that Elevert Carlstrom, young Swedish carpenter, saw him there; that August Van Henke, Harlem restaurant keeper, saw Hauptmann on the street with a police dog that night, and that on the 2nd of March that night, Hauptmann was having a first-Saturday-night-Bowl-month singing party in his home with Hans Kloppenburg, and was nowhere near the Lindbergh estate.

Wilentz Speaks for State

Attorney-General David T. Wilentz will sum up for the state on Monday, supreme Court Justice Thomas. Trenchard will charge the jury and the case will be ready for the murder, the state in its last day of rebuttal testimony, ripped at the "impossible" evidence which the defence had presented.

Mrs. Morrow testified that Violet Sharpe, one of the maids employed at Englewood the night of the kidnapping, was in a state of nervous collapse, and that she returned to the home about 10 p.m. on the night of the kidnapping was from the Lindbergh home at Mountain View, miles distant.

She testified to Mrs. Morrow there were witnesses to tell that Violet had been in her company the night of the crime; that she had accompanied two men and another female known as Agnes, to a movie; that she drank coffee; and that she returned home about 10 p.m.

One of her companions of that night, Ernest Miller, said he met the girl on the evening of the 1st of March, the day before the kidnapping and murder, and the defence counsel wanted to know from him if that wasn't what is known as "picking up a girl."

"She was walking along the road and she asked me for a ride," Miller said. "I gave her a ride. There was nothing more for someone else."

Another witness, statement of the March 1, 1932 party at the "Peanut Grill" speaksany where Miller said he and the others went with Miss Sharpe was Catherine Minners. It was she who said that Violet had ordered coffee. Violet moved out of defence counsel to remark:

"Coffee. She had left the Morrow estate to come over to a speakeasy to drink coffee. Her condition was such that she required coffee, was that it?"

The question drew objection and was withdrawn.

Recalled Only One Night

The cross-examination of Miller this witness concerned itself for the most part with seeking to show that Miss Minners could not recall events on any other day or night of 1932 except on the particular March 1.

That's the only night you can remember in your life, isn't it?" Reilly asked, and the witness replied, "Yes sir, distinctly."

The expert in wood, Arthur Koehler, whose earlier testimony linked the ladder from the kidnap ladder to Hauptmann's home, was recalled to rebut testimony of defence witnesses which had contradicted his Koehler reiterated his previous testimony, amplifying it in places.

As a result of Koehler's reappearance there remains little change in the "number" situation. The state, through the scientific investigations of Koehler, contends that a board in the kidnap ladder came from the attic of Hauptmann's Bronx home, while the defence, on the testimony of "a practical lumber man" contradicted this.

Empire's Gifts May Bring About Change in Crown

The Imperial State Crown of England

By CENTRAL PRESS CANADIAN

London, Feb. 9.—Jubilee gifts from the British Empire overseas to King George may clutch the imperial state crown of England.

Gold from Canada and Australia, platinum from New Zealand, diamonds from South Africa, emerald, sapphires and diamonds from India, rubies from Burma, aquamarines from Ceylon and there are many others—may be moulded into the crown worn by His Majesty the King on state occasions, such as the opening of parliament.

Has 3,093 Jewels

The crown was made in its present form for Queen Victoria and has been altered for each occasion so as to fit the successors to the throne. Many historic gems are set in this crown, some of them being the Black Prince Ruby, the Stuart Sapphire, a sapphire set in the coronation ring of Edward the Confessor, Queen Elizabeth's pearl earrings and one of the diamond stars of South Africa. There are 3,093 pearls and precious stones in the crown.

The new materials, if they are included, will join five rubies, 11 emeralds, 17 sapphires, 277 pearls and 2,703 diamonds.

Although the suggestion has not yet reached the stage at which an official proposal can be made, it is hoped that the empire gifts may be officially accepted during the jubilee celebrations.

The King has three crowns: The sacred crown of Edward the Confessor; the imperial state crown, most valuable and beautiful crown in the world, and the Imperial crown of India, which has been used only once—at the Delhi Darbar of 1911.

Defeat Hawks And Tie With Boston For Second Place

MAROONS DIVIDE

Leafs Win 4-2 From Montreal on Saturday Night

(By A. E. Pulford, Canadian Press Staff Writer).

It seems more likely than ever now that New York Rangers will climax the most amazing comeback hockey has seen in years playing off—with Toronto probably—for the National League title.

A 2-1 victory over Chicago Black Hawks last night, while Boston was taking a 7-3 lacing from Americans brought Lester Patrick's team back to a tie with Bruins for second place in the American Division, just two points behind Black Hawks and with one game less played.

Flaring as they did and with Chicago doing little to improve during the closing minutes, Rangers at the moment look like the best to finish on top, winning the right to clash with the International Division winners for the N.H.L. title.

How they have improved in the last month is clearly brought out in comparison of the standings then with today's. On January 11 the New Yorkers had won only seven games, lost 19 and tied two. Now their record reads won 17, lost 12, tied four.

Rangers' Only Change

Rangers move up was the only change in the standing resulting from the five games played between Montreal Maroons, the only team playing twice, lost 4 to Toronto Saturday night and then took a 2-1 decision from Detroit in overtime last night. Canadiens kept their one-point lead over Americans in the International Division's third spot by beating St. Louis 4-2 at Montreal, Saturday.

Iron man Murray Murdock, who has not been too prominent in the Ranger comeback picture broke into it with a bang last night at Chicago. He scored both the New Yorkers' goals, one in each of the first two periods.

Norman Locking thrilled the 17,-480 spectators with the hope of a Hawk victory when he tallied for his goal was the only one a determined Chicago attack could shove past Lorne (Gump) Worsley's net-minder.

There were two goals Chicago men scored, that were disallowed. An offside spoiled one by Art Jackson and Joe Lamb, Bill Kendall lost one in the second, when the official's clock ran fast.

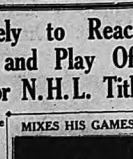
Much the same thing happened in Toronto where three goals were declared void by Odie Cleghorn and A. Smith. Ebbie Goodfellow beat Lew Connell in the first period on a penalty shot but it was ruled he had dropped the puck out of the circle before shooting.

Larry Aurie flashed the light later but the referee said the puck had hit the goal post and had not gone into the net. Montreal's turn to protest came when Lionel Conacher scored a rebound and Leafs' goal was disallowed because Hooley Smith was standing in the crease.

Gus Marker scored the first goal that counted in the second period and Joe Primeau added another in the third sent the game into overtime. Herb Cain got the winning tally on a pass from Allan Shields.

Many Penalties

Four third-period counters, that more than wiped out an early lead Carl Voss had given Detroit, featured the game in Montreal for Canadiens. George Hainsworth opened the rally with the tieing counter and closed it after Wally Kilrea and Jack Shill had added to the Habitant total. Ossie Asmundson got the second Black goal that in the third period, that saw seven minor and two major penalties imposed.



Lorne Carr, Americans, and Paul Haynes, Boston, were top scorers in the wide-open affair at New York, each getting two goals. Rabbit McVeigh, Ott Heximer, Red Dutton, Sweeney Schriner and Alex Smith each got one for the Americans and Dit Clapper, Babe Siebert and Nels Stewart notched the rest for Boston.

A packed rink saw a thrilling game when Maroons played Toronto. After Charlie Conacher had scored a goal in the third minute, that Hooley Smith tallied when the puck had not crossed the goal line. Bob Gracie tied it up before the period ended.

Flash Hollett put the Torontonians ahead in the second with a spectacular solo goal, that climaxed an end-to-end rush and Red Horner made it fairly safe for Leafs five minutes later.

Harvey Jackson, who had given Horner the pass for his goal, got one himself in the third, when Gracie accidentally knocked his rebound in and Cook and Red Horner came combination, that got the winning goal for Detroit after Hollett scored Maroons second counter.

MIXES HIS GAMES

Frankie Parker, fourth ranking U.S. tennis player, shows as a member of the Lawrenceville, N.J. basketball team. He plays guard and finds the fast court game keeps him in excellent condition for tennis battles.

QUEENS PLAY ON WEDNESDAY

Intermediate Game Should Be Thriller From Start to Finish

Local patrons of the cage game can be assured of a thrilling contest when the Queen's Juniors play the Quint takes on the Queen's Intermediates. Unless the Deacon A. C. players suffer a decided reversal of form, they should win rather handily from the Queen's Juniors. The latter, although they lost to the Deacons in their home game, nevertheless showed enough smart basketball to stamp them as an up and coming team and no junior aggregation can afford to take anything for granted when opposed to them.

The nightcap fixture between the two intermediate teams has all the indications of a battle royal. Both Queen's and the Y have lost two games and neither team can afford to drop another at this stage of the race and hope to remain in the running for the group championship. In their game at Queen's, Intermediates topped the Y by a second edge on the tri-color players throughout the first half of the game but with a weakened defence due to the loss of one player through disqualification, and near loss of a second, the locals were outplayed 24-16 in the final half of the game. From the very start of the game here Wednesday night, plenty will be several Queen's players, who will be marked men and it is extremely doubtful if any of them will be allowed to remain on the floor for the double-header there will be an hour or two of dancing for the patrons and members of the team.

CIACO WINS CONTEST

In a friendly inter-company hockey game between the Orr-Wilkie CIACO sextette downed the Belleville Sargeants aggregation by the score of 6 to 5 at the Belleville Arena on Saturday night. The CIACO team forged to the fore in the initial frame, but the "Hardware" boys knotted the count in the second frame only to have the CIACO crew run home extra goal in the last stanza.

The line-ups: CIACO—Eves, Tufts, Kokesh, Latchford, McDonald, Johns, Simpson, Smith, Downey and White. Belleville Sargeants—Robinson, Bennett, J. Simpson, Secord, Harrison, Barnett, Grant, Darvell and Baker.

Referee—Ted Whalen.

GRILLS GARAGE EASILY DOWNED

Tweed Wins Loosely Played Fixture by 10-1

Tweed, Feb. 11—Special)—Handicapped by the absence of three members of their best players including their goal keeper, Grills' Garage improved no match for Tweed in a regular Central League fixture on Saturday night, and the locals had overwhelmed them by a score of 10 to 1. It is doubtful if the visitors could have stopped the locals even had they been at full strength as Thompson in goal, though bombarded from all angles, kicked, threw and batted them out in sensational style. The win further strengthens Tweed's chances of landing a play-off berth.

The first period saw the visitors playing their best hockey as they restricted the locals to one lone tally from Harvey's stick. Close checking and air-light defense work resulted in the goalies having a fairly easy time. The play speeded up in the next frame as Tweed banged the fast Garage sextette seven times without getting any reply. Lesl, Merawand Maguire were the successful marksmen. Belleville secured its lone tally in this period when Bill Heron found the only vulnerable spot in Thompson's armour and tucked him for a counter.

The final period saw the locals add an even half-dozen to their outstanding score as the visitors, notably the goalie, collapsed under the persistent onslaughts of the locals. In this frame several easy goals were secured as Stead proved weak on long shots, Maguire and G. Gerald each tallied twice while Quinn and Bell secured one apiece in this frame. Ehler, St. Dennis and Canning looked best for Belleville while Thompson, the star on the local line-up, every man playing good hockey, although to Thompson a good should go a lion's share of victory. Only four penalties were handed out by Goyer of Belleville.

Hacking came to the front not only last week when the club was threatened with relegation and the fact that the managers were able to induce the steady playing Hacking to join the club was responsible to a great extent for retaining the Manchester United berth in the first division. THE BIG SEVEN

Harvey Jackson, Toronto, Maple Leafs brilliant winger got back into second place in the National Hockey League's big seven today. He scored a goal and assist Saturday night to regain the place Frank Boucher of the New York Rangers usurped for a time. Up-and-coming Conacher, Toronto Maple Leafs' Chicago who stars with New York Americans brought his goal tally up to nine in Montreal for Canadiens. George Hainsworth opened the rally with the tieing counter and closed it after Wally and Jack Shill. Gill had added to the Habitant total. CURRENT SPORT

(Day By Day)

When the local juniors take to the ice next week the Napanee kids tomorrow eve they will no longer enjoy the services of Cy Barrick, who graduated to the intermediate ranks last week. There had been rumors about, to the effect that Barrage was being played under a false or forged birth certificate and a lot of other talk, that eventually urged Eddie Thomas to do a little investigate the matter. Last week Don Thomas, secretary of the local O.H.A. clubs, was in Toronto and he straightway went to the Parliament Buildings and looked up the records of Barrage's birth and found that he was slightly over the age limit. As soon as Skipper Thomas learned this fact he immediately elevated Cy to the intermediate ranks. Let it be understood, however, that personal home records showed Barrage to be under the age of 20 years. Zack Hold, who played one game for the Colts will be used in Barrage's position on Tuesday night, when the locals clash with the Napanee kids. Alan Lamore and perhaps young Lott or Trenton, will also line up with the Colts along with the usual contingent of juniors. Incidently goals count in this series.

"If the games are played according to the general hockey ethics, we'll have the first intermediate play-off game here in Belleville about Wednesday night", predicted Eddie Thomas this morning. When asked why the first game would not be played at Picton or Campbellford as the case might be, Eddie replied—"well, you see it's generally like this, in basketball and like has the choice will play the first game at home and endeavour to play out the first win, but in hockey they seem satisfied to generally play the first game on the road and then travel back home, where they try to pull down the lead, if such is ever accumulated." Eddie's contention, of course, we would say his advanced theory, may be perfectly true, but either the Petes or the Mohawks are not play the game according to hoyle, but reverse matters looking as they are in the first semi-final game at home and try to establish a margin lead which they would endeavor to protect in a return game. There's another angle to hockey that goes something like this—"a two goal lead is far better than a two goal deficit to overcome even on your own ice." At any rate Eddie intimated, that he preferred the latter theory and would play his first game here, as the club's logical choice, but he hasn't so well have to wait until after tonight's game for the proper answer to the problem.

During last week's Peterboro-Belleville game there was quite a crack to our-Peterboro contemporary, that Fred Ingram was the pick of all players in the "big six" group. That choice still holds good, that is after witnessing the Petes' game in the league in action. Fred Ingram carries a scoring punch equal to most forwards and is regarded as a tower of strength on the Maroons' defence. He is a clever stick-handler packs a terrific shot and has more than the general amount of knowledge of the pastime. "Yes, we pick Fred Ingram as the most valuable player in the "big six". Our Peterboro blother-scribe differs with us, Bill Callaghan in his column, Callaghan failed to impress when the Petes played here last week, and we understand that Fred Ingram, practically single-handed, defeated the Petes in their regular group game odds.

Game of Feb. 1st. The Peterboro scribe informs his readers that we picked Campbellford to win this group, each, however, is no, the case. We did say, tjrst the Marcos would take the Petes well into camp unless they displayed a far better brand of hockey than they showed here last week. This annual selection of group winners is the bunk and we're through with it, even when we happen to guess 'em right, but it's still plenty of amusement for which we always pay dearly, the bronx cheer, the well known raspberry and what-have-you, thanks ring in our ears for days to follow.

Owing to a lengthy lay-off in the schedule "Toots" Holway, of the London "Free" is a visitor to Belleville. Toots popped in town Saturday and will remain over long enough to see the Quints and Y-ers in action tomorrow eve..... Vinny Utronki, who was moved to Niagara Falls last autumn, when he bid in a signal job on the C.N.R. is back in the old post in Brighton once again, and will be available for baseball next season. Two games of E. C. B. A. basketball are on the books for Wednesday night at the Collegiate when the undefeated Deacon A. C. kids tackle the fast Queen's juniors following which the Belleville "Y" intermediates clash with the Queen's Inter's. According to past performances the Deacons should win by a small margin, but beg the usually wrong, even if E. C. B. A. basketball are on the books for Wednesday night at the Collegiate when the undefeated Deacon A. C. kids tackle the fast Queen's juniors following which the Belleville "Y" intermediates clash with the Queen's Inter's. According to past performances the Deacons should win by a small margin, but beg the usually wrong, even if the Queen's juniors are a hectic last period play in Kingston, so naturally the "Y" squad are out for revenge.... Up at the O.B.C. the students have organized basketball and hockey teams and are willing to take on all and sundry at both pastimes..... The Arena "Mice" who hold sway in the C&I League this year, will have challenged the world at hockey..... The local lacrosse players enjoyed a keen night's competition at the Armouries on Saturday, while the spectators got a free look at the skating given by the members of the Belleville Figure Skating Club before Orr-Bourg on Friday was the feature of the night's carnival 'tis rumored.

So the Maroons won by the score of 4 to 2 in overtime last night, they say, well we wonder how the Peterboro scribe feels about the prowess of Fred Ingram now? Jay Worthington, of course, has a good lead to carry into the Liftlock Town this eve. Incidently that's just the advantage the local intermediates enjoyed in a play-down two seasons ago, when they overcame the Petes. So what? The Combines are still very much in the running, eh what?

FAVORED TO REPEAT

BRIGHTON AND WOOLER STILL ON TOP RUNG

Both Teams Win by The Shutout Route in Trent Loop

FRANKFORD WINS

Defeats Co-operative 2-1 in Ten Minutes of Overtime

Trenton, Feb. 11 (Special)—Wooler and Brighton hockey teams remain on the top rung of the Trenton and District Hockey League, after both the two their games on Friday night. Wooler defeated the Carrying Place puckisters by the while Brighton trimmed the Airport Tigers a 5-0 shellacking. In the other game in the circuit Frankford eked out a 2-1 win after ten minutes overtime with the Co-operatives.

The first game was fast throughout with the Carrying Place team having the best of the play for two periods but could not get goals every man was off the net. The first score came in the third when Adams missing many chances. Anderson, Johnson and Scrivens carried the play in the Wooler territory but were checked close by the whole Wooler aggregation. Rosenlof got the first counter after several minutes of play in the second period. He shot and the puck crossed before it net but he stabbed across to pick it up and beat Lamore. Just a minute before the period closed Roy Smith, hard shooting defence star, drilled one from the blue line scoring making the count 2-0. Woolers opened the last stanza with more speed and combination to the delight of the fans. Carrying Place territory. Roy Smith drove another from centre ice after the period opened. Norm Johnson was carrying the puck when Lamore moved across but the Wooler management saw that Norm was well checked. In the last scored on Yum Yuttan's rebound to make the score 4-0 as the bell sounded. Brighton 5, Tigers 0.

Packing too much speed and combination for the Airport Tigers to cope with, Brighton walked through them with a 5-0 win on Friday night and could have been well checked for two periods. Doug Powers set the pace for the locals in a Brighton uniform as he was drawn by them from the Imperials of the Belleville City League. Powers turned out to be the winning factor in the shutout. He scored three goals and assisted in the fourth. The Tigers missed the services of their main forward, McCoy, who has left town for Building purposes in the government department. Preachy Richardson in the other net was the star performer in keeping the score as low as it was. Pafford played well on the defence with Bolton and Wilson doing the biggest share of the forward duties. Brighton—Goal, Richardson; defence, Pafford and Utronki; centre, Smith; wings, Lambert and Powers; subs, Cheer, Chapman, Purdy, Harper, Waddling and Lindsay.

The last game was more of the shinny type with both teams checking close and missing dozens of scoring chances. Rosenplot scored for the Workers about nine minutes after the opening bell when he drilled the puck past Lobzun following George Barr's pass. This was the only tally for the unassisted. O'Malley and Johnson made an almost impassable defence. Both teams combined had plenty chances the blue line ahead of the puck carrier and this caused most of the trouble. The Workers lacked condition and their combination fell down. Rosenplot was the only man who seemed to keep up with the play but he could not get into scoring position on his many rushes. Keech, for the Workers' net, had to do all although the Frankford players were in plenty to make the net when they had golden opportunities. Lockwood beat Keech in the second frame but it took overtime to win the game after McLeod scored from a scramble in front of the Workers' net. Keech was struck in the face by a second period shot but he was patched up before continuing. P. Loney, Lockwood and Lockwood looked the best for the Frankford forward line. Rosenplot, Barr, Adams and Curry were the pillars of the losers.

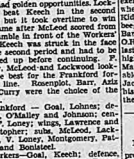
MANAGER EXPECTS A TORRID SERIES

Napanee And Belleville Juniors to Meet in Playoffs



"Both teams will be at full strength and we expect a torrid series," stated Eddie Thomas, manager of the Belleville juniors in reference to the opening game of the Belleville-Napanee junior O.H.A. play-off series that opens at the Belleville Arena tomorrow (Tuesday) night.

With the Napanee team finishing second position and the local Colts pulling up in third position at the end of the regular playing junior O.H.A. schedule, these two teams now meet in a home and home game series, goals to count on the round, for his right to meet the group leading local juniors in the group finals.

Manager Thomas will put his Colts through their final workout exercises at the Arena this evening when all players will be out. Jack Kidd and Jim Lott of Trenton have been added to the fold, while Cy Barrage, who played intermediate O.H.A. hockey with the "Combines" last week, will remain with the higher category team from now on. Manager Walt Greene has a formidable team of fast skaters, with the Jackson brothers and Tompkins at his scoring threat. The latter has the markings of a natural.

Spite Wife

by Ann Forester

The thought drew him out of his chair. Nick pulled Judy into his arms, and his voice was pleading.

"Oh, Judy . . . darling, come with me! It's a new life, Judy. I'll be in China for the next five years, at least. It will be a new start for us both, dear. Nothing to remind you of the past. You will start fresh. The Orient, Judy . . . all different. We'll be happy, darling, you know I set in space—watching something he could not see. Then it came up to meet his own. Eyes, grey-like and very sad. But somehow remote. As though she looked at him through a veil.

"Not that way, say more. Nick. Not . . . the way a woman loves when she marries. . . ."

He dropped his arms. Drew a long breath. "That's pretty hard listening, Judy!"

Again she made the little helpless gesture. "I'm sorry! . . . so awfully sorry, Nick, dear. Oh, I didn't mean to hurt you. That's why I stopped, writing! . . . So it would run . . . taper off . . . easy. . . ."

He was so tall and strong and brown. Impossible that she could hurt him like this! She so weak—so frail . . . She had grasped one of his hands and held it tight against her breast.

"Oh . . . poor dear. Don't look like that. I love you the way I did at first — when you were Brother Nick. . . ."

Nick's eyes were narrow grey slits. His mouth was tight. "That isn't the way I love you, Judy. I haven't changed if you have."

"It isn't that I want to change, Nick. But everything's different."

"And you're going to send me back to China, alone? You don't care that much, Judy?"

"I can't! I can't, Nick! It's all dead . . . His everything dies!"

"Judy . . ." he had her by the shoulders, his grey eyes holding her own as in a vice. "I mean it. You're sending me away forever? You won't rush you . . . but if you send me away I'll simply go. Do you mean he don't love me any more? That you won't marry me?"

"Nick, I can't!" It was a cry of agony.

He was gone. The apartment seemed strangely empty, now that Judy stood in the living room alone. Now that Nick-shy was sniffing at the closed door, whining dejectedly.

EMPTINESS

CHAPTER SEVENTY-SEVEN

The Garden of Prosperine . . . she had reached it, Judy told herself drearily. The land of dead dreams and withered loves . . . the country where nothing seemed to matter.

Nick was going back to China. She would not see him for five years, if ever . . . Well, it didn't matter . . . Nothing really mattered. She was tired. She wanted to be left alone. If she went softly through life nothing would harm her again. Just keep from feeling and hurting . . . Love? Once she had loved Stan and Stan had been killed. Once she had loved Nick . . . she had thought she would be happy forever if she could be with Nick.

And now the path was free—she could go ahead and no one would become entwined and tender as Judy broke down and cried.

"Judy, darling, I didn't mean to hurt you, but I do adore Nick so! And he loves you so much, Judy."

"I know! I know!" . . . Judy's beauty wringing her hands. "Oh, I would if I could, Mary. But I don't love . . . everything's changed. And Nick will go on back and after a while he'll meet someone else. Oh, I know he doesn't think so now, but he'll meet some girl. Some girl with all her life ahead of her, not a lot of bad dreams like me . . . and he'll love her . . . and I'll be glad, Mary. It's all lived out. All I want now is to rest . . . to be left alone to rest."

Nick is the finest, squarest, most sincere man I've ever known, my darling mother . . . of course, I accepted." Mary went on. "You've given him a death-blow to love, Judy."

"Oh—Mary, dear—please . . ." She her own.

"It's even hurt! So did crack up his plane—that was what gave me the idea. But it was a terrible shock. Nick wasn't hurt. But it made me realize what might have been. And I knew how you'd feel, and I thought if I could make you feel it was . . . now, when you could have Nick—instead of waiting until something awful happened . . . Nick, you did love him! You finished-faint dead away when I told you he'd cracked. Judy, you do love him!"

They were sitting on the couch now—arms tightly about each other. Mary's face was as wet with tears as Judy's face and hair. It had taken courage to do what Mary did, and no one was ever to know how frightened she was when she saw the girl crumple in a faint at her feet. Mary had much the sensation of one who finds she has been smoking cigarettes on a powder keg.

"Love him . . ." Judy choked on tears. "Oh . . . of course I love him, of course . . . Oh, Mary, I want him so!"

It snatches it to unreckonizable smithereens, pronto, pronto, ma said, ma said, No it dont, either, ma, because if it did why then it wouldn't of been a immovable body, could it?

I suppose not, ma said, and I said, And yet how can a irresistible force be resisted?

That's what I was thinking, ma said, But what's the answer? she said and I said, There is no answer, that's just the answer.

Well such an answer, hoe hee that's very clever, I'll serpize you'll be sorry with that one, ma said.

It would be quite disappointing when out it wasn't as terrible as it thawt it was, pop said, and ma said, Well terrible isn't quite the werd, I meant some umheard of force.

It would be heard of very soon if it struck an immovable body, its terrific crash would attract quite a crowd, pop said, Let's go to bed, he said, and ma said, I must of left something out, and that reminds me, I want to leave a note out for the milkman, what a help thing I started this conversation.

Then she and I heard an account of going to sleep again just then.

FINANCIAL MARKETS
NEW YORK - TORONTO - WINNIPEG

TORONTO STOCKS

Toronto, Feb. 11 (CP) — Sellers were confronted by a thin demand in the industrial section today and sales were transacted at prices generally under Saturday's closing level. Intertitled leaders took their cue from New York's unsettlement which evidently resulted from further delay in clearing up the long-expected decision on the gold clause appeal and losses of one-eighth to one-half were recorded for Nickel, Steel "A", C.P.R., Brazilian and the Distillery group.

Oil stocks held better in fair trading and the gold and miscellaneous groups clung to the up side. Recessions precipitated in the food group with Canada Canners floor the only active trader, holding unchanged at 6.

Goodyear Tire Common was in demand at a gain of 2 points to 147.

TORONTO MINES

Toronto, Feb. 11 (CP)—The mining list reacted moderately today from its high levels in the week's rally, the golds particularly feeling the effect of a waning demand for shares. Delay by the U. S. Supreme Court in handing down a decision on the Gold Clause case evidently imposed the main restraint on trading for the long day.

While the senior gold group held quite steady, profit-taking was general in the secondary list. Little Long Lac dropped 35 cents, Pickle Crow 6, McKenzie 5, Gunnar Gold 5 and Gold Lake 5 before the markets developed a firmer tone.

WALL STREET FINANCIAL

New York, Feb. 11 (AP)—Financial markets' further digestion judicial and economic doubts today and most prices pushed lower in extremely dull dealings.

Another effort to announce adjudication of the Gold Clause cases was given as the principal excuse for some disquisitional setting.

In the Canadian list McIntyre yielded a major fraction while International Nickel and Dominion Steels were each a shade lower. On the curb, Hiram Walker ruled steady but Lake Shore eased. Dominion Government 4's improved a trifle. Canadian dollars were 1/32 of a cent lower at noon levels.

The preferred shares of American Chain got back a point and dropped fractions to 2 or more included the preference issues of Commonwealth and Southern United Corp., American and Foreign Power, American Power and Light and International Paper. Among other firm spots were Celanese Preferred, Union Bag and Liggett and Myers "B".

Numbered among the losers of fractions to a point or so were Santa Fe, N. Y. Central, Northern Pacific, General Motors, Chrysler, Du Pont, Montgomery Ward, American Smelting, Case, Johns-Manville Preferred and American Rolling Mill. Such utilities as American Telephone, Consolidated Gas and Public Service of New Jersey were only a trifle lower.

NEW YORK CLOSE

New York, Feb. 11 (AP)—Except for a Preferred issue, stocks were inclined to drift to lower levels in Trading that was extremely dull throughout. The Preference shares of Commonwealth and Southern United Corp. advanced 2 and 1 points respectively. Fractions to around a point were suffered by Santa Fe, New York Central, U. S. Steel, Duponts and Sears Roebuck. The Utilities were only slightly down. Transfers approximated 330,000 shares.

CHEESE PRODUCERS COMPANY FORMED

as soon as possible, centralized purchase of cheese factory supplies by tenders submitted to the Board of Directors with a view to assisting cheese factories to reduce the cost of operation.

Resolved: That the member for Prince Edward-Lennox be asked to urge upon the Minister of Agriculture, Dominion of Canada, that he introduce in the next session of parliament an Act whereby regulations will be established for the grading of cheese produced for domestic consumption.

Proposed Organization

The company will be incorporated under Part 12, Ontario Companies Act, as a co-operative company under the provisions of Part 12. Shareholders will consist only of cheese factories, one share being allotted to each factory. In the case of privately owned factories the share will be allotted to the Patrons' organization of that factory. Shares will not be issued to or held by, private individuals. Shares cannot be sold or be issued. The names of cheese factories will be recorded in the books of the Company as members of the Company upon application and upon payment of $5.00.

The fact that a cheese factory is a shareholder of a company places it upon it no obligation to use the services of the company.

Advisory Council

Advisory Council will consist of the salesmen or official representatives of the cheese factories who will have power to act in council for their factories.

The Advisory Council will establish the general policies of the Company. It will receive and consider the annual report of the president of the company and will meet at such times during the year as may be necessary to consider matters of general interest.

Executive control will rest in the Board of Directors, who will be given power to appoint and administer by-law approved from time to time by the Advisory Council.

Manager

The manager of the company, who will also act as secretary of the Board of Directors, will be chosen by the Board of Directors with mind the following essential qualifications:

Sincere interest in and understanding of the affairs of the farming community and the quality which will retain its confidence—Integrity of character—Executive and organizing ability, good judgment, secretarial ability—Ability to represent the president of the company, if necessary, in discussing matters of interest with Government officials or other branches of the dairy industry, also meteorological matters.

He will at all times be under the direction and control of the Board of Directors, as an employee of the company, and will be directly responsible to the president of the company. He will attend all meetings of the Board of Directors, except where matters relating to his capacity as manager are under discussion.

Preliminary Plan of Operation

Until the operations of the company are properly established, it is considered advisable to restrict its activities to selling cheese in the domestic market. Attention should be in the meantime using the usual channels for distributing cheese abroad. The company will move slowly in developing its activities, not attempting to do too much too much, and avoiding disturbance of the existing organization in the spirit of strength in the market. Its operations will be carefully handled with every expectation that home consumption will increase rapidly through the company's storage and ageing facilities higher net returns be obtained for cheese produced.

The manager will, in advance of opening of the season, make direct contacts with the wholesale and retail trade in Canada, and have their requirements, endeavouring to make sales in advance, keeping in constant touch with the president of the company in this activity.

He will also keep in touch with the Department of Trade and Commerce, the Ontario Dairy Products Association, or other marketing agencies, as to research in the British market with a view to acquiring intimate knowledge of the market to which a large proportion of the cheese of the County is now exported. He will co-operate in all directions with export houses and buyers, and should visit the British Market if research is recognized as one of the outstanding requirements in foreign markets in the world and a valuable asset to all these producers. It is not a primary purpose of the company to neglect that market but to supplement the services and be willing to co-operate with its buyers.

The Department of Agriculture has offered the services of their expert to Picton to consult with the manager and with Prince Edward County Fruit Growers', Limited, with a view to establishing a fruit method of storing and ageing cheese.

Cheese, colored or white, No. 1 grade, not below 93 score, will be received from cheese factories for ageing, payment being regularly based on prevailing cheese board prices. No cheese will be received under ten days from date of manufacture.

Payments will be made to cheese factories from time to time, payment at such times as the Directors may decide, and after the first year of operation, not less often than once a year, prior to the 15th. of November, with the object of extending to cheese factory patrons the benefits secured from co-operation on their account. Cheese factories may deliver their cheese to the company at the cold storage plant of Prince Edward County Fruit Growers, Ltd., for storage and subsequent sale, receiving payment as provided above. At their option, based on cheese account, they may store the cheese with the Cold Storage Company and receive in exchange a warehouse receipt, issued to that Company, whereby they can on production of the warehouse receipt, receive the benefit of a convenient financing and may themselves arrange for subsequent sale. It is under this arrangement the company shall have no responsibility. Where cheese factories notify the company that cheese is being stored under this section and at time of delivery receive a warehouse receipt issued in their name, it will be understood that it is delivered to the company for sale and payment in accordance with the plan of the company outlined above.

Arrangements will be made with Prince Edward County Fruit Growers, Limited for storage of cheese at reasonable charge.

The company expects to achieve higher returns than have been obtainable by cheese factories and by its services enable these factories to operate on a profitable basis. Consideration will be given to an effective method of centralizing in the company the purchase of supplies for cheese factories with a view to the greater benefit of these factories quantity discounts.

A draft of the constitution by cheese factory officials followed. Mr. O. W. Hicks of Bongard's Cooperners; Mr. R. Rose, Mr. Wagstaff of Royal St.; Harold Huc of Ben Gill; David Hoard, Bay of Quinte and Northport, all felt that they should obtain vote for the formation of such a company without laying the matter before the boards of their factories. Mr. Will Bedell had already called a meeting of patrons of the Hillier factory and the suggestion of that factory had been empowered to accept or reject the scheme above outlined, and also the proposals of the Cheese Factory Patrons' Association.

On a motion moved by Mr. David Hicks and seconded by Harold Huff it was decided to send a copy of the resolutions to the Co-operative company to each cheese factory for their consideration and a meeting of the patrons to be called inside the next ten days to discuss the same.

Mr. T. G. Bowerman, M.P.P., pointed out that they had very good reason for thanking Mr. Dunbar who help them out on financing the first year and had also been instrumental in promised money for the company at a low rate of interest. Mr. Howard Leavens had been interviewed re storage cost and had not been able to give a definite price but he assured them it would be just practical. Mr. Leavens left the room during the handling.

Mr. A. E. Patterson made the advantages of the proposed company very clear. The advantages were obvious, possibly lose more than the $5.00 membership fee with the government grant which would be paid to the company. The company would be a central body to look after the best interests of the patrons directly to the factories at a reasonable cost. It would also be able to market to advantage properly aged cheese. Each factory would be paid for their cheese delivered at the storage plant at the current price prevailing at that time.

After some discussion it was arranged that the meeting of the Advisory council, with a representative from each factory, be held in the council room of the local Department of Agriculture office, Main street east, Belleville, on Feb. 19th.

Mr. Joss then gave the report 6f the Belleville Cheese Board Cheese Factory Patrons' Association, recommending that a meeting be called and that the association would this year send their own commercial representative to the Belleville Board to regulate the British market, and hoped that a similar Cheese Association was formed in this country, they would then link up with the C.P.F. Association.

Mr. Maybury explained the benefits of Cheese Boards. Cheese factory patrons had derived by forming Cheese Boards and Associations. It thought great good could only result from doing away with the middle way and that the men of the west and men of the east must get together and co-operate. Mr. Maybury left the committee room.

Mr. Ben Mallory, secretary of the Belleville Cheese Board, asked the committee to favor co-operation, and of all associations of an equalizer from Ottawa. At least 90 per cent. of the cheese produced must ask for it before it would be granted.

Mr. T. G. Bowerman spoke of the newspaper accounts of the farmer's trade treaty with the United States. Only lowering of the duty on milk and cream was mentioned and Mr. Bowerman suggested the committee write Ottawa for explanation asking Mr. Bennett to keep them in touch with developments in duty.

It was moved by O. W. Hicks and seconded by G. Brancombe and the resolution carried that "this meeting endorse the plan of the National Dairy Council to create a Canadian Board to control Canada of export cheese and a copy of this resolution be sent to Mr. Bennett."

The meeting then adjourned with a very decided spirit of optimism that the formation of the proposed Co-operative Company.

'Judge Not' Says Reilly

Placing of Wood

"We showed you that this defendant had a plane," Hauck asserted. "And that very plane was used to plane the wood in the ladder."

Hauck dwelt at length on the similarity of all the ransom notes with Hauptmann's handwriting. "We have shown conclusively the writer of every one of the ransom notes was Bruno Richard Hauptmann," he declared and reviewed the testimony of the eight State handwriting experts.

A ransom note offered to produce it. It was sent to Dr. Condon and Mrs. Lindbergh identified it as the one she had purchased.

Hauck told of the old man, Amandus Hochmuth, seeing the man with the ladder on the car on the road to the Lindbergh estate.

Med y Story

He referred to Hildegrade Alexander, New York model, who saw Hauptmann with a ladder and Jafsie during the ransom negotiations.

"That testimony", he shouted, slapping the jury rail. "Has not been denied."

The board in Hauptmann's closet was revealed next by the prosecutor. The board on which Dr. Condon's telephone number and address were pencilled.

Dr. Condon identified Hauptmann", Hauck declared "as the man he talk to in the cemetery—the man he paid the $50,000 ransom to."

Col. Lindbergh provided another identification, he went on, in the voice of the ransom collector.

"Hey Doktor", the kidnapper had called in St., Raymond. Hauptmann and Col. Lindbergh identified that voice as the voice of Bruno Richard Hauptmann", Hauck insisted. His voice rising.

"As soon as Bruno Richard Hauptmann received the $50,000 ransom, he went on, describing the arrest of Hauptmann.

Flies Were Fiction

"The story is like fiction," Hauck went on, describing the arrest of Hauptmann.

"We have proven by overwhelmingly and conclusively this defendant had all the $50,000."

Hauck then swept up his hands in a gesture and cried "Figures, figures, figures that don't lie", as he recounted the testimony of the Federal government expert on Hauptmann's accounts.

He had $50,000 which he could not account for. The very day the money was paid over, he resigned from his job. He became a gentleman of leisure. He became a "stock broker".

First arrested, Hauptmann said he had "100 more of those bills at home". Hauck said. When more were found buried in the garage the defendant said it was reasonable for him to be told "the Fisch Story".

In a determined voice he concluded:

"I don't have shown beyond a reasonable doubt that Bruno Richard Hauptmann is the murderer of Charles Lindbergh, Jr."

"Thank you," he said, and walked rapidly to the State table.

Reilly began to set the stage for his summation. With his aide, James Fawcett, he moved the round table to the jury box rail and stood surveying the arrangement, a long wood on pointer held in one hand.

Reilly Opens Address

Reilly, whose appearance has helped him win so many victories in the 2,000 murder cases he has defended, walked slowly to the round table immediately in front of the jury box. He was low and confidential.

"I approach this task with the feeling of the deepest responsibility."

"I can carefully appreciate," he said "after listening to the prosecution that in your minds there may be a feeling of bitterness against the defendant.

He asked the jurors digest any such thoughts and judge the case on the evidence.

"I know there is a distinguished family involved in this case," he said. "But the case must be decided on the evidence."

He said he could not think of a better way to open his summation than with a text from the Bible.

"Judge not," he opened, "lest ye be judged."

"I ask of you in consideration of this case that you bring into your deliberations nothing but the facts, weighing that which you cannot give back once you have taken away his life."

Reilly picked up the indictment and declared on it.

"It is the pattern by which you must go," he declared.

The indictment, he asserted, said that on March 1, 1932, "at my other home in the East Amwell Township, Hunterdon County, the ... young Lindbergh baby was killed."

"What do I mean by a pattern?" he asked.

"It is the rule you must follow at you would in playing a game. It is the pattern for this crime, the pattern for a dress. You can use no other."

"That is the pattern," he added. "They must follow in proving guilt."

Proof of Instant Death Needed

The state's case, to support a conviction must have shown, he pointed out, that the baby died instantly.

He reminded the attentive jurors that man is presumed to be innocent until proven guilty.

"This is what is very apparent that since the defendant was arrested, there is a growing fin innocence allotted to him."

Reilly smote the table.

"This is the crime of the century.

"You'll have that hoveted into your ears by the gentlemen who will reply to my words."

There is no doubt it was the crime of the century, I'm not here to fool you.

"It's come down to horse sense. We will take the witnesses one by one and weigh their words with common sense against the testimony of a lot of technical and expert swearing for so much a day," he said.

"This is the crime of the century" he went on. "The worst crime, the lowest crime that the books hold. But the defendant is not guilty."

Reilly said he admitted a sympathied with Col. Lindbergh and his family. He said he was impressed with the Colonel's trans-Atlantic flight.

"But," he shouted, "we cannot be swept off our feet when there is a trial."

Reilly pointed to the diagrams of Col. Lindbergh's home, "built for his wife and baby."

"Bruno Richard Hauptmann never drove a car in that house," Reilly said. "He never stopped near the driveway gate. He never went on that estate."

Master Mind a Fool

"They would have you believe," Reilly went on, "that Hauptmann was the master mind behind this and in the next that he was the worst fool in the world.

"They want you to believe he wore gloves when making the ladder and then set for an hour and a half talking to Dr. Condon with his face exposed.

Reilly spoke contemptuously of Charles B. Rossiter, the man who said he saw Hauptmann driving a Princeton airport the Saturday before the kidnapping.

"Shifty-eyed" Reilly snapped, as he spoke of Rossiter on the stand.

Reilly then turned to the matter of proof in the kidnapping case, declaring him. Without you knowing him."

He said Rossiter was a typical character for "this wonderful scenario".

Wonder Scenario

"This wonderful scenario," repeated Reilly. "It is not found on honest facts."

"How is Charles Rossiter any more than I believe Whited because Hauptmann was never near Hopewell.

"There are certain concrete facts that you have to deal with in this sore thumbs.

"One of the first things you must ask yourself when you enter the jury room is:

"How is God's name did Hauptmann in the Bronx know anything about the Lindbergh baby?

"Col. Lindbergh was stabbed in the back by those who worked for him," Reilly declared.

"No one could get into that house unless someone inside aided.

"It is in the evidence that the family was staying over for the first time on a Tuesday night.

"No ons outside the household knew that.

The Household

"No one but Col. Lindbergh, his family, the Morrow family, the nurse, Betty Gow, the Morrow servants and 'Red' Johnson knew that."

Betty Gow knew that the Lindberghs were staying at night before, he pointed out.

"Betty Lindquist," he added, "cannot have all the confidence in the world in 'Betty Gow'."

Betty Gow, he said came from Scotland when they gave her $700. Col. Lindbergh knew she wouldn't have come?

"I say this to you: Nobody in God's world knew that the baby was going to be there that Tuesday night, except the Gow girl," he shouted.

Reilly then turned his guns on the ghost of Ollie Whateley, the Lindbergh butler who died a year ago Christmas.

"There was one agency in that house that would respond only to its master and that was the fox terrier," Reilly said.

"Who controlled that dog's movements that night—the butler? A dog whity declared smell any stranger who stepped on the grounds."

Reilly declared he didn't know much about these people—the servants—but there was evidence pointing to them, he said.

Betty Gow, he declared, said she had "locked the baby" that night but it was ill she remained away from it that night from eight o'clock until ten.

"Keep before you these particular facts," he told the jurors, "therefore you consider the other matters that have been charged into the case, the handwriting, the fingerprint, the board.

"You've got to place Hauptmann in that nursery," he thundered.

"You've got to place him in that room. Let's see if he was".

Study of Nursery

He then launched into a study of the nursery on the kidnap night, recalling how Betty Gow and Mrs. Lindbergh went around closing the windows and shutters.

Reilly inquired rhetorically how Hauptmann got in the nursery window, the only one unlocked, because the shutters and windows were closed the house to have committed the crime.

"Hauptmann," he asserted, "would have had to have climbed a shutter to get into the house to have committed the crime.

"Hauptmann is not going to be drawn to his death through the square of Flemington because you are influenced by the prominence of people in the case.

He turned then to the kidnap ladder and told the jurors the State expected them to believe the ladder was placed against the window by someone using reaching a point about 30 inches below the nursery window sill.

WILENTZ CALLS BRUNO HAUPTMANN 'ANIMAL: PUBLIC ENEMY No.1 OF THE WORLD'; ASKS FOR DEATH PENALTY

NEWS BRIEFS AND ODDITIES

Brighton, Eng., Feb. 12 (CP)—May Etheridge, one time musical comedy star and former wife of the Duke of Leinster, was found dead today in a bungalow at Rottingdean here, a bottle which authorities believed contained a sleeping potion lay near the body.

Miss Etheridge was divorced from the duke of Leinster in 1930. The same year she was charged with attempted suicide, but quashing of asphyxiation, convicted and placed on probation for two years.

Key Harbor City, N.J., Feb. 12 (CP)—Snow may be an act of God but that's no reason, says the Rev. Henning Von Rosse, that a clergyman should clean it off the town's streets.

The Minister has presented a bill for $33.50 for scraping the snow off Hamburg Avenue—or rather, 22 inches of the stuff—at $1.50 for repairing his rubber boots, and $25 for impairment of his health.

Two Rivers, Wis., Feb. 12 (CP)—"To his knowledge," Carlton Warner has been known for years as "Chalkeye," but Uncle Sam has revelled at how widespread the use of his nickname had grown.

The postoffice received a clothespin with a tag bearing only the inscription, "Two Rivers, Wis." Postal clerks guessed they ought to deliver it to Wagner.

They guessed right. They did. The pin had been mailed by a friend then East of Rhode, Wis., visiting in Port Lauderdale, Fla.

Washington, Feb. 12 (CP)—All the clerks at the United States Capitol have been ordered to avoid "morning" now whether they know each other or not.

Secretary Frances Perkins started it recently when her department was moving into new quarters. She called the workers together in the new auditorium and made them a little speech in which she suggested they use the cheery "good morning" to each other.

She promised them a hearty warming with music and dancing, and perhaps tea, "if the budget holds out."

Jackson, Wyo., Feb. 12 (CP)—Elk steaks are Jackson Hole's contribution to the menu.

State game wardens and their assistants have begun a drive, which will last a month, to feed frozen and dressed, for relief purposes.

From 20,000 to 25,000 elk are estimated to be in the herds.

Leigh, Neb., Feb. 12 (CP)—The birthday anniversary of the three daughters of Mr. and Mrs. Theodore Lehnhoff of Leigh, is a simple one. All three children were born on the same day of the year.

Gaylia June, 3, was born Feb. 10, 1932. Jeanne Joy was born Feb. 10, 1934, and Sunday the third daughter was born.

Chicago, Feb. 12 (CP)—Life is nothing but dreams, philosophized Judge Edward S. Scheffer in women's court Monday, but most people live them instead of only dreaming.

The case was that of Roselyn Kessler, 21, a masseuse, charged with defrauding a wealthy lover by posing as "Lady Creighton of Nottingham, England."

"What's life but a lot of dreams anyway?" the court soliloquized. "The only difference is that we build their air castles on a soft parlor chair and others carry them into execution."

The girl's Attorney's paid the $50 fine and left the court "all right."

Roselyn said she was sorry and the Judge continued the case.

CHANGE MAGISTRATE SYSTEM

Regina, Feb. 12 (CP)—Under a plan being worked out by Hon T. C. Davis, Attorney-General, 14 full-time Provincial Magistrates will work in Saskatchewan. The Justices of the Peace will be retained but their duties will be limited to taking information and issuing summonses for which they will charge the usual fees. The Magistrates will conduct the preliminary hearings and do the court work now done by 1,300 Justices of the Peace.

ADRIFT ON FLOE IN GEORGIAN BAY MAN IS RESCUED

Farmer Has Narrow Escape From Death on Ice Floe

BORNE FARTHER OUT

Authorities Were Preparing to Use Airplanes in Rescue

Owen Sound, Ont., Feb. 12—(CP)—Jack McKnight, sent adrift on an ice floe in Georgian Bay, was rescued this afternoon. He was about five miles off Leith, about five miles north of Owen Sound, Wesley McKay, farmer in the neighborhood, reported having noticed the man from his home and at the time he was being blown rapidly northward.

The Owen Sound Fire Department immediately left the city this afternoon had hopes of reaching the man but there was a stiff south wind blowing which would carry him farther out in the lake. The authorities then endeavoured to get in touch with Capt Borden and hoped to have an airplane locate the man.

EVENTFUL DAYS AHEAD OF GOVT

Conservatives in English Parliament Bubble With Discontent

By GEORGE HAMBLETON
Canadian Press Staff Writer

London, Feb. 12—(CP Cable)—Eventful days lie ahead for the national government, whose difficulties are increasing. Rumors of an impending crisis multiply while the Conservatives who furnish roughly 90 percent of the government's strength in parliament bubble with discontent.

Political correspondents are at a loss and nervous. A crisis of first-class importance has developed for the national government during the week-end," writes the political correspondent of the Daily Mail. "Rumors of a political crisis developed," run black headlines in the Daily Telegraph. No ministerial shuffles for some months.

Encouraged by the Waverites' by-election in which Labor recaptured the seat as the Conservative vote was split between the government and anti-government Conservatives, the Conservative "die-hards" are fighting like mad. The conciliation bill with all their might.

The younger Conservatives are plainly disturbed over the two millions of unemployed and general elections at the most only 12 months ahead. They are constantly urging a drive for social and labor action.

They now "dole" regulations have proved tricky hurdles for the government. An emergency bill to restore the old rates has to be rushed through parliament, but despite the government's announcement of relaxation, the demonstrations against the regulations continue.

SALARIES AS LOW AS $525 PAID

Upward Revision of Wages in Province Saving Bank Forecast

Toronto, Feb. 12—(CP)—Further re-organization of the Ontario Government Department and an upward revision of salaries of many employees in the Province of Ontario saving offices were forecast by Premier Mitchell F. Hepburn.

Mr. Hepburn gave instances of married men in the savings offices receiving a yearly salary of only $525. Many employees in these offices, Mr. Hepburn said, had not received an increase in pay in seven years.

Re-organization in the Treasury Department will likely result in additional dismissals, Mr. Hepburn said.

Nine of Crew of 'Seth Parker' Taken Aboard the 'Australia'

Philip Lord's Schooner Will be Towed to Port

San Francisco, Feb. 12.—(AP)—Nine of the 13 sailors, who set out for an adventure cruise in the Schooner Seth Parker were aboard the Cruiser H.M. A. S. Australia today after their rescue in the South Seas.

Phillips Lord, radio Irrepressible skipper, whose trouble calls once before had brought the warship to the schooner's aide and four others still were aboard the round-the-world adventure ship, apparently awaiting a "hitch-hiker" tow from an American naval vessel expected Thursday.

The Australia, with the Duke of Gloucester aboard, stood by in what radio men here took to be "stony silence" while Lord continued to send out his messages, that have distinguished his appearances on the air since he first reported his ship in trouble because of heavy seas.

In a message to the Australia he said the Duke, third son of the King of England, naturally would be after him "with a shotgun".

He wirelessed to the Associated Press voluntarily a message declaring how he was staying with the ship, in best maritime tradition, and four other crew members had refused to leave him.

Lord, known as "Seth Parker" of broadcasting fame, the now-celebrated cruise in 1933 to satisfy his publicity-announced craving for adventure.

Radiomarine here picked up a message from the Australia had accepted on the most only 12 months ahead. They are constantly getting a distress call and ready for action.

The new "dole" regulations have proved tricky hurdles for the government. An emergency bill to restore the old rates has to be rushed through parliament, but despite the government's announcement of relaxation, the demonstrations against the regulations continue.

GRAND JURORS RETIRE TO HEAR CROWN EVIDENCE

Vermilyea Murder Charge Case of Chief Interest at Session

INTEREST IS UNUSUAL

Witnesses in Readiness to Appear Before Grand Jury

"If you are satisfied after hearing part of the witnesses," said Mr. Justice Riddell, addressing the Grand Jury presiding at the Spring Assizes of the Supreme Court, "you can return them forthwith in this city, when there is sufficient evidence, but if you are not satisfied, on his side for the charge of murder preferred. It is your duty, if you are not sure, to not impede the progress of this case. Should you require more witnesses shall be by heard, the trial proper will take some time."

Grand Jury Absent

When court opened today the court clerk, John H. O'Connor, newly appointed to this office, the Petit and Grand Jury were called and it was found that M. Switzer and A. Leech were absentees of the Grand Jury. Mr. Switzer's excuse was produced—Mr. Leech had no excuse—neither had been received from Mr. Switzer. His Lordship stated a bench warrant would issue for Mr. Leech's arrest, to show cause, why he absented himself and then instructed the court clerk to poll the Grand Jury. Messrs. Dave Whitton and Dan MacIntosh, who were absent when the Grand Jury retired and elected Mr. Whitton foreman, were called as foreman. They then returned to the court room for instruction and evidence on the murder case of the docket.

Judge is Welcomed

During their absence His Lordship was welcomed to the Assize by the President of the Bar Association, Mr. Wallace A. Cameron and then proceeded with the civil cases on the docket.

Counsel moved in the two civil cases marked that both had been settled out of court.

His Lordship instructed the Grand Jury on the law and their duties in the case, paying particular attention to the case before the court Justice Riddell reviewed the evidence that he believed the Crown would submit on the charge of murder against Vermilyea, Carmen and Mrs. Vermilyea. He stated it was believed that Vermilyea killed Dr. J. A. Vermilyea visited this city on October 6th and that he was in his mother's home, 14 Bleecker Ave., talked to the nurse of Dr. J. A. Vermilyea, that a shot was discussed, with his mother and that evidence would be produced, that a man and woman were seen on the premises and that the Crown would show that Carmen was in this place, which resulted in the death of Dr. J. A. Vermilyea.

"There will also be evidence", continued His Lordship "that something was found, which it is alleged was the hatchet which is alleged to have been used in the cause death. The Crown will like-wise produce evidence that the hatchet was purchased in Toronto. That it is presumed the accused left for Toronto and went to the home of Mrs. House and there displayed some interest. You will be told of him purchasing a morning paper and subsequently arrangements to travel it to Hamilton by train. That is the argument over the "fare". The Crown will produce a witness, who identified this man as the one, who purchased the ticket, proceeded to Chicago and on the way telegraphed for reservation on the plane from Chicago to Los Angeles, Glendale, California. Evidence will consist that Carmen, who proceeded to California he secured his car and came back to his home in Ontario, California, where he was later arrested.

Long before the opening of the session the court room was filled but not one was allowed to stand Constables placed about the room kept perfect order. At 2:40 p.m. Mr. Justice Jeffery resumed the court till 9:30 Wednesday morning.

R. H. Greer, K.C., of Tweed, and Charles A. Payne, K.C., of this city, acting for the defence were not present in court when His Lordship addressed the jury. It is expected the grand jury will report some time today or early Wednesday.

Two handbell specimens, rapidly interested in the proceedings of the Vermilyea murder trial at the court house in this city this afternoon rose with one accord as Mr. Justice Jeffery, presiding, dismissed the petit jury until the sitting of court on Wednesday morning. They filed out slowly, and in perfect order, guided by the doors and the outside corridors by the guards in attendance.

During the day the halls and corridors were filled with the attendance of curious throngs waiting for the court to open.

Early this morning, differing from his usual hours, Harold W. Vermilyea performed his usual exercise under the walls of the court house, going through a period of active exercise under the watchful eyes of the guards.

RINK BURNS AT SPENCERVILLE

Favorable Wind Saves Buildings Situated Nearby

Brockville, Ont., Feb. 12 (CP) — With a loss of $15,000 to $20,000, the community skating rink at Spencerville was completely destroyed by fire early today. It was owned by Mrs. Maggie McQuade, acting executrix of the late David McQuade. Insurance of $6,000 being carried.

But for a favorable wind the town hall, St. Vincent and Mrs. J. R. Dunlop, together with St. Andrew's Presbyterian Church and the Canada Post Office would have been endangered.

Spencerville's fire fighting equipment is limited to a chemical engine and hose and the Masonic Temple

Stocks of skates and hockey outfits were lost in the blaze, which quickly swept through the metal-clad building. The possibility of rebuilding is already being discussed by the directors of the company operating the rink but no definite decision has been reached.

The electric and telephone services to the Dionne hospital quintuplets were cut when the lines in the fire burned. Hydro officials declared they are now engaged at restoring the lines and they will not complete the work before this evening.

3 BURNED WHEN HOUSE DESTROYED

Third Fatality in District Within Space of 3 Weeks

Kirkland Lake, Ont., Feb. 12 (CP) —Northern Ontario today counted nine dead within three weeks. The three latest victims of which two took the lives of three children.

The bones of Mr. and Mrs. Arne Hamalainen, in Ebey Township 15 miles northeast of here, yesterday were identified by fire that took three children were burned to death.

Long almost identical, the three children of Mr. and Mrs. Thomas Dupuis lost their lives, when fire levelled their home at Cooper Cliff.

In each family the youngest child, only just over two years old, and the eldest was just under six. Each fire broke out when the parents had left the children alone in the home for a short while, and in each instance the distracted parents discovered the fire and tried vainly to rescue her children.

Flemington, N. J., Feb. 12— The state, bringing the murder trial of Bruno Richard Hauptmann towards its end today, charged the defence counsel raised by "cranks, fools and fools," called Hauptmann "public enemy No. 1 of this world," and asked the jury to show no mercy.

"This murder of the Lindbergh child," cried Attorney General David T. Wilentz—"would shrink into absolute insignificance in comparison to the crime that would be committed if this man were freed. That would be a crime at which humanity would shudder again, that would be a real tragedy, an American tragedy."

Lower Than Lowest

The Attorney General characterized the Bronx carpenter, who is accused of kidnapping and murdering baby Charles A. Lindbergh, Jr., as "animal, lowest in the category of human life, animal kingdom."

In answer to defence counsel Wilentz charged Inspector Breckmann framed the evidence from Hauptmann's home board from which the telephone number and address of Dr. John F. (Jafsie) Condon was ranned. Interrogated, Breckmann read transcript of Hauptmann's examination by the District Attorney of the Bronx, when he answered "yes," to admit he had made the notations.

Flemington, N.J., Feb. 12— The state asked the jury to "show mercy" for Bruno Richard Hauptmann, if they can't compromise with murder and murderer" said Attorney General David T. Wilentz in final summation in the trial of Hauptmann to the electric chair for the kidnapping and murder of baby Charles A. Lindbergh, Jr.

"If you get the feeling that this is what the defense J.J. Reilly and a perfect case, it is your solemn duty to find a verdict of murder in the first degree."

He described what he called a perfect case for mercy and declared the Hauptmann case was not of that type.

"There may be some questions you can't answer," he told the accused Hauptmann. "But there sits a man who can answer them. He is the lawyer and we will see that he will be thawed out when he throws the switch—that's the time he will talk."

First Death Plea

Flemington, N.J., Feb. 12—(AP)—Attorney General David T. Wilentz pleaded before Bruno Hauptmann's jury today to ask for the first death penalty he has ever requested.

The state has already claimed it has proved Hauptmann "conclusively" guilty.

Wilentz asked the defendant and his wife be admonished not to interrupt with any demonstration such as they made earlier in the trial. Justice Trenchard so charged Hauptmann and Mrs. Hauptmann. Hauptmann solemnly turned to his wife.

"If there is a clamor for the life of this man, as indicated by the delightful adversary, it comes not from you or me, but from the refrains," Wilentz asserted, his voice low, a serious gaze fixed on the jurors.

"If there is such a clamor from the American people, as my adversary says, the American people haven't savaged as easily as all that. There must be a good basis for it and we all you as the judges," he declared.

'He That Killeth'

He referred to Reilly's admonition to "send him back home to live to be judged," and said the defence chief had overlooked the other biblical text, "and he that killeth any other man shall be put to death."

His voice started rising.

"For all these months since last September something has come to the surface that indicates clearly that this defendant, Bruno Richard Hauptmann," he declared.

If Not Guilty Will Oppose Extradition Move

Flemington, N.J., Feb. 12 (AP)—Bruno Hauptmann—if acquitted of the kidnap-killing of the Lindbergh baby—will fight attempts to take him back to the Bronx to face a charge of extortion, Egbert Rosecrans, one of his counsel, said today.

Rosecrans expressed the opinion his client could not be extradited because he was not a fugitive from justice.

New York may not be able to bring Hauptmann to trial in the Bronx he said; "because cause for extradition would not apply in his case."

PATHETIC CASE IN ANIMAL LIFE

"Faithful even unto death", rather pathetic case in animal life confronted local police authorities yesterday when two mongrel dogs were found lying alongside of each other, one being dead and the other keeping a close vigil over the body of his dead friend.

Local police yesterday were called to the alleyway directly north of the Collegiate Institute, where the pathetic scene took place. Judging from appearances the dead canine had been struck by a motor car and had crawled away to die. His dog playmate sensing the situation had stayed with his canine friend and was still guarding him, even in death, authorities believe.

Dog catcher Thos. Thorne was summoned to the scene and removed the body of the dead dog, while his live canine friend, walked, head bowed, slowly away from the death scene and disappeared northward on John street. The dead dog's body was buried.

SNOW REMOVAL COST IS LOW

Cost of snow removal on roads throughout Hastings County this year will be materially reduced as less heavier falls than those so far experienced are encountered, it was reported today by Mr. Sim. Fox, county road superintendent. Little difficulty has been experienced by the county so far this season in keeping the roads open for traffic throughout the county.

POLICE COURT

Activities in local police circles were at their lowest ebb during the past 24 hours, not a single arrest or major motor accident being reported. Local police, however, are investigating previous crimes that are still unsolved.

Only three transients appeared at the police sergeant's desk in quest of a warm night's lodging last night. The influx of transients to Belleville has noticeably fallen off during the present month.

CONSERVATION OF WILD LIFE URGED

I. Thomas Outlines Methods Used by Entomological Bureau

"The conservation of wild life in Ontario" was the interesting subject that the members of the local Y's Men's Club was privileged to hear at the weekly meeting held at the Y.M.C.A. last evening. Mr. Irwin Thomas of the Dominion Parasite Laboratory, was the speaker of the evening and in a clear manner definitely outlined the methods being pursued by his department towards the preservation of wild game and fish throughout the province.

The speaker referred to the rapid disappearance of Canada's wild game and gave for an example of the work being done in the matter of conservation, the Wainwright Park experiment in the preservation of the buffalo. In closing the speaker urged the members of the club to inform all individuals of the penalty that could be played by ordinary citizens in the matter of wild life in Ontario being saved from extinction. Mr. Thomas brought forth many examples of his address in literature that was being published, urging all Canadians to assist in the preservation of our country's wild game.

The speaker was introduced by Dr. Allan Gordon while President Alec Weir occupied the chair during the evening's meeting. It was announced that the club, and their friends, had accepted the invitation of the Quinte Rotary Club to attend a skating party to be held at the Quinte rink on Friday of this week.

The club was divided into three groups whose duties are to be responsible for attendance and programs during the year, one in office, each group being allotted one week per month for the year. March 15 was named as the date for the Y's Men's semi-annual gala dance and frolic.

MUSIC

Carolina Jubilee Singers Sing At Bridge Street

The Carolina Jubilee Singers, a group of six talented artists, charmed a large audience at Bridge Street United Church on Sunday evening when they again visited the city, under the auspices of the Young People's Association of the church and presented an evening of splendid music. The solo numbers, the merits of each individual voice were instantly recognized as of the highest standard, rich, full, melodious, and in the ensemble singing the harmony of the voices blended together in favourite selections was delight to hear. The audience was unanimous in the opinion that the singers were the finest that had visited and the program was one of unqualified merit.

The first part of the program was devoted to harmony numbers, well-known negro spirituals taking on new meaning and beauty when rendered by this group of singers. Solo numbers and readings completed the first part of the program and the singers proved that themselves true artists in their rendition of difficult classic numbers. Mr. Daniel Davies, the talented pianist, distinguished himself in the solo numbers he played.

A plantation scene closed the interesting program and the old plantation airs were sung with haunting sweetness. In typical costumes of cotton pickers the singers provided a merry ending for an evening that will live long in the memory of its hearers. One of the most striking numbers on the program was the rendition of O' Man River by Daniel E. Davies.

The Carolina Jubilee Singers include James A. Shaver, tenor and leader; Miss Alberta Hope, soprano; Roma Russell, basso; Miss Ernestine Lyle, contralto; William C. Sanford, baritone, and Daniel E. Davies, pianist and organist. The group is much in demand for concert work and their programs have met with remarkable success.

The Singers were introduced to the audience last evening by Mr. Taylor Pandin, President of the Young People's organization.

FAREWELL PARTY FOR MISS SHEA

Stirling Catholic Women's League Honors Member

Stirling—On Thursday last the home of Mr. and Mrs. Michael Shea was the scene of a delightful gathering which took the form of a surprise party to pay tribute to their daughter, Patricia prior to her departure for the west.

The party opened by the secretary of the Catholic Woman's League, Mrs. J. J. McGee, calling upon Mrs. Jas. E. Lagrow to read the following address to their departing secretary.

My dear Pat—

We, your friends of the Catholic Woman's League have gathered at your home on this, the eve of your departure for Toronto to say au revoir, and with God speed to the new life that is ahead of you.

We also hope that every success that is conducive to your well being will be yours, and that the paths you tread in the future will be as smooth and pleasant as those of the past.

We ask you to accept this little gift, hoping it will convey in its small way the very great affection we hold for you, as well as appreciation for all the thoughtfulness you have shown as we mingled with you in church and other social affairs.

Undoubtedly you will meet many new friends, but none who will be more sincere than those of the Catholic Woman's League.

Following the address Mrs. W. J. Whitty made the presentation of a very dainty bed lamp. Patricia arose to the occasion and responded in a few well chosen words thanking her friends for their token of remembrance.

The remainder of the evening was spent in playing bridge and euchre after which a dainty lunch was served. The party broke up with the singing of "For She's a Jolly Good Fellow" and "Auld Lang Syne".

The Stirling Woman's Institute is recalling to mind the remodelling of the kitchen in the community hall. The additions include quite a spacious warming oven, completely equipped for serving hot meals, modern cupboards for dishes and linens, and adequate serving tables. The improvements add immensely planned, beautifully finished, and will facilitate serving to both banquets frequently held throughout the year.

The new kitchen will be used for the first time, on Tuesday evening when the Community Welfare Club of that thriving village will look after their monthly banquet for which the Institute cater.

The Women's Institute has always taken a keen interest in the community hall, and have assisted financially since its construction. The donation of a kitchen to the community by the Institute is commendable and generous. The president, Mrs. L. Rodgers, officers and members are to be congratulated.

ZION HILL TEAM STILL WINNING

Good Hockey Played in Centre League at Stirling

Stirling, Feb. 12—It was difficult to find a parking place around Stirling arena on Friday night when four teams of the centre hockey league again put on a first class display of hockey. Zion's Hill continued their winning streak by defeating Bethel 2-0 in the second game of the double header. But superior hockey was displayed in the first 15m. when Thurgwin put forth a splendid but futile effort to lift themselves out of the cellar position by a win over West Huntingdon The West Huntingdon boys are out for the league leadership, and gained themselves two points by winning the hard fought game by the score of 3-2.

First Game

Evergreen the team that has yet to win its first game, were determined to shake the jinx and score a win. During the first drop of the puck they turned on the steam and kept it up for the entire sixty minutes. While on a solo rush, Chuck Wright of West Huntingdon collided head on with L. Magee, and play was held up for five minutes, because of the injuries received by Wright returned to the game with a bandy cut eye that required three stitches to close the wound.

Brinkley and Rodgers turned in some great work in fine rushes, and many times came close to scoring. Ted Cranston turned around their opponent's net, but Sarles was on the defence. Great headway was made, brought greans from the Evergreen crowd. It was then that Mott intercepted a pass from Bell in the corner and raced away with Kerby, who passed it back to him, right in the mouth of the goal. Mott banged it home for the first counter, shortly after off, Dickey, Stanley sifted through, only to over-skate the puck. Evergreen combination had a busy few minutes, being called upon to stop no less than six shots one by six minutes of the first period to go, Rodgers' brothers and Reid rushed a nice passing play, and Don Rodgers scored on a pass from his brother Jack. Before the close of the game, and they received a great hand. The period ended 1-1.

Second Period

The boys from West Huntingdon made their last bid to cop the game handed to them while they rested. This they were much better in this frame, and only the great work of Broadworth in the Evergreen net, saved his team from a goal. The luck was with Mott. After several attempts, Mott finally succeed to make it 2-1. Rodgers, the pivot of the Evergreen attack, got his second goal on a solo effort. Skating like a fiend, he crossed to the far wing and with a fine drive out of position, he cut out to centre ice, Broadworth had no chance to get it up again. A few moments later Judd McGowan, sturdy defenceman of the West Huntingdon team broke from centre ice that caught Broadworth napping, and, to make the score 3-2, for West Huntingdon.

The last period failed to make up for the rest of the game, being filled with close calls for both teams, and Bethel looking and skating right to the last bell, gave their crowd plenty to cheer about. The game ended with the jinx still digging the trail of Evergreen, leaving them still in the cellar. They are a great team, regardless of their position, and the fans are all for them.

Lineups:

West Huntingdon—Sarles, goal; McGowan and McGowan, defence; Wright and Kerby wings; Mott centre; Bobs, Thompson, Cook, Bray and Henderson.

Evergreen — Broadworth, goal; Stapley and Gibbon, defence; Magee and D. Reid, wings; D. Rodgers, centre; Bell, B. Heath, L. Magee and Rodgers.

Referee—Earl Wallace.

SECOND GAME

Realizing that West Huntingdon was one point ahead by virtue of their win in the preceding game, Zion's Hill had to win their game against Bethel to regain the leadership which they have held since the league started. Bethel's only desire was to topple the (big) team from Zion's and this they have attempted. They failed, however, and because of their loss, their chances for a play off position are very remote.

Early in the game, Bethel played superior hockey. E. and R. Dickey had several nice shots on Kerby in the Zion's net. Culhane was good in spots. This fine looking boy is capable of playing better hockey if he had more practice. He remains cool at all times. The Dickey stuck around Zion's net for a minute and had several good trys on Kerby. After twelve minutes of play Townsend broke loose, and racing around the defence he slipped one in to make the first count. Zion's began to find themselves and displayed a great combination throughout the remainder of the first period which ended 1-0 for Zion's Hill.

In the first part of the second period, play was all at Bethel's end. Cawerly and Parks got through several times, but Dickey came out of his net to save. Hedger got a fine from the crowd when he spilled Townsend, and he also got the thumb for the first penalty of the game. With a man short Bethel fed Culhane, who tried some nice long shots that were right on the net, but Seeley turned them away. Dickey and Townsend matched their speed many times; how these boys can skate. After Hedger came on again, Cranston got the gate for tripping Townsend and again the crowd cheered. Townsend scored on a pass from Hayes to end the period 2-0 for Zion't.

The third period was featured with plenty of fine efforts by both teams, and Bethel fought all the way. The game ended 2-0 for Zion's putting them on top again with one point more than West Huntingdon.

A Personal Message:
ONLY once in a great, great while is a theatre manager so impressed with a motion picture's excellence and superiority, that he is tempted to make a simple, sincere statement to his patrons and back it up with his personal signature.

This desire never was greater nor more justifiable than it is now—in the case of "BROADWAY BILL". Indeed it does not often so deed does a better opportunity to underwrite a picture's greatness present itself.

"BROADWAY BILL" is such a picture —worthy of guarantee without reservation. "ONE NIGHT OF LOVE" charmed you; "IT HAPPENED ONE NIGHT" gave you happiness! This glorious comedy co-starring Warner Baxter and Myrna Loy will win your acclaim!

C. C. F. LEADER URGES SCRAPPING OF OLD SYSTEM

Woodsworth Speaks at Length in House of Commons

ECONOMIC SLAVERY

Insurance Bill Comes up For Second Reading

Ottawa, Feb. 12.—(CP)—After a general airing of the ills of capitalism the House of Commons today turns to one of the government's reform measures. A part of the programme by which Prime Minister Bennett hopes to eliminate some of the weaknesses and injustices of the economic order. Today the unemployment insurance bill comes up for second reading.

Yesterday J. S. Woodsworth, C.C.F. leader, urged a complete scrapping of the Capitalist system and the setting up of a "Co-operative Commonwealth in which the profit motive would be subordinated to that of public service and ruthless competition replaced by collective ownership under Democratic control."

Prime Minister R. B. Bennett, said Mr. Woodsworth, had declared the Capitalist system had a great deal of good in it and served well but had ended in a "nuisance", and that it should be judged on its merit. While Mr. Bennett believed the system had "served its purpose", Mr. Woodsworth said, he believed it could neither be reformed nor continue much longer.

"The case rested as long as there was an expanding foreign market. This no longer existed. The home market could not function under Capitalism because the people lacked purchasing power to buy back the things they had produced.

Mr. Bennett had said if the Dole could not be abolished the system should be scrapped. He (Woodsworth) wanted to know what steps the government was taking to abolish the Dole, Unemployment Insurance, he declared, was no use as far as doing away with the Dole was concerned.

Economic Slavery

The C.C.F. leader said there was economic slavery long before the very few people free today, free to speak out in fear they will lose their job. Until a man is free economically, and Liberals can speak on this until they are black in the face, political freedom is a mere sham.

Mr. Woodsworth said he believed he had the right to ask the Prime Minister what he was going to do about it. "The only thing he has brought down is an unemployment Insurance scheme, one that will not touch the neediest of the unemployed, that excludes several numbers of the workers and if carried out 100 per cent will only bring up to date with Great Britain in the Lloyd George regime and where a great number of the nations of Europe now are." The Insurance Bill, he said, did not touch the fundamental evils of the Capitalist system.

"Does the Prime Minister even know the meaning of the words and phrases he has been using?" asked Mr. Woodsworth, quoting extracts from Mr. Bennett's radio speeches.

Impossible to Reform System

Mr. Woodsworth said he believed it was impossible to reform or regulate the existing system and it was necessary to set up a new system patterned on a co-operative basis.

For one thing, he said, the profit motive must be subordinated to public service. He did not want State socialism but if railways could be operated by the Dominion, why not the banks, for instance? Because the provinces now distribute liquor why could they not also distribute bread and milk?

Another plank in the C.C.F. platform, continued Mr. Woodsworth, was collective ownership under Democratic control to get rid of uncontrolled competition. The party would attempt to foster co-operative organizations.

Liberals and Conservatives joined in an attack on the C.C.F. the main tenor of which was economic planning practical or constructive suggestion had come from the southeast corner of the House. They impressed for a definite statement of the meaning of the proposed co-operative commonwealth.

Lacking In Logic

Despite all their speeches C.C.F. members had done nothing to change the capitalist system, said J. F. Pouliot, Liberal member for Temiscouata, if all the bills presented to the House by Farmer-Labor members in the past 10 years had passed, the capitalist system would not have materially changed. They have never made a single move to change the social order, he claimed.

Dr. C. C. F. members, Mr. Pouliot charged, looked upon the House of Commons as "a stage for actors". All they did was make dramatic speeches and read extracts from the books of noted economists. They offered nothing constructive or concrete. The resolution before the House was so vague Mr. Woodsworth could not explain it himself.

Mr. Woodsworth, the Liberal member claimed, was basing his faith in the failure of the faculty of making distinctions between facts. With the facts before him he could not analyse them.

Mr. Woodsworth talked of doing away with profit, he said, and yet proposed to enlarge social services and raise the necessary money by taxes. How could people pay taxes, he asked, if they did not make profits. If they did not have an excess of money over their immediate needs.

From the Conservative side J. R. Stitt of Selkirk, took a similar line. He said Socialism was nothing new. It was an old doctrine and the relic of a more primitive social order. Capitalism had brought great advances in living standards and comforts. Everyone admitted there were injustices and weaknesses but they had not been eliminated in the countries, which had adopted socialism or extensive government control of industry.

E. J. Garland (U.F.A. Bow River) levelled a general attack at capitalism and particularly at state interference with, view to patching up the system. State interference in the United States under the NRA, he said, had merely increased the incomes of the millionaires and continued the decline in the incomes of the middle and lower-paid classes.

Free Trade No Hope

Liberalism and free trade offered no hope, he argued, since to obtain the full benefits of lassies faire international free trade would have to be established, all tariffs would have to be levelled, and absolute freedom of exchange in all branches of economic activity established. Not even the Liberal party would dare to undertake such a task for Canada alone and there was no hope of its being done on an international scale.

H. K. Anderson, Conservative member for Halton, started to laud operation of the Ottawa trade agreements but was called to order by the speaker. He then made a general attack on C.C.F. policies, referring to average incomes in Canada.

Angus MacInnis, Labor member for Vancouver South, said the greatest question in the world today was whether the capitalist system could be reformed or not, if not, what should replace it.

Capitalism, said Mr. MacInnis, could not be reformed. It was "dead from the neck up." It was not operating in the best interest of the people of Canada and should be replaced by a co-operative scheme. He quoted various economists and from a pamphlet distributed by the United Church to know the inequalities of the capitalistic system.

It was claimed, said the Vancouver Laborite, the C.C.F. policies would affect private property. That might be so. The freeing of the slaves, however, also affected private property; but it was a boon to mankind in the end.

Only Attacking Abuses

John T. Haig, Liberal, Conservative member for Toronto Northwest, denied Premier R. B. Bennett had pronounced capitalism, claiming he only attacked the abuses, that had crept in.

Not once, since he entered the House in 1930, had he heard one constructive suggestion from the C.C.F. corner, to relieve unemployment in Canada, said Mr. MacIntosh. He believed if private initiative and the profit system were removed from the social system it would be detrimental for the world.

The Toronto member did not believe the capitalistic system was at the bottom of the world's distress. He believed thrift was necessary to a social order, that would create happiness and that initiative should be encouraged.

The object of the government in its reform legislation, continued Mr. MacIntosh, was to strengthen the social order and remove abuses. Some of the greatest abuses originated with stock exchanges and company incorporation. That was not the fault of the system but of governments and he was sure the present administration would prevent further stock exploitation.

Heat and Thirst Worst of Fighting Says Adventurer

Santiago, Chile, Feb. 12.—(AP) —It took Ralph Codina, young English adventurer, one month to convince Bolivian authorities he was not a spy, then they made him a Lieutenant in the army and sent him into the Chaco Boreal to fight against Paraguyan.

"What is the worst of the fighting?" I asked him.

"The thirst and the heat," he said.

He called the Chaco a solid waste of brush, shadeless trees, and giant cacti. Nature takes 60 per cent. of the war's thousands of dead, preying on the men with heat, mosquitoes, malaria, cholera, dysentery, unbearable thirst and venomous snakes and insects.

There is danger from the enemy bullets, said Codina, but there is worse danger when you hack your way through jungle, from the cactus, coral snakes, no bigger than a pencil, whose bite is regarded as certain death. Not so deadly but much more numerous are rattlesnakes and the reptile called the Aspi.

About 80,000 men are fighting in a climate where Codina has seen the thermometer reach 131 degrees, then change within a few hours to freezing.

"Most of the fights are between patrols," Codina said. "One generally never see the men you fight. You go by your hearing, listening for the other fellow cutting his way through the brush with machetes just as you are doing. When he sounds to be within 30 or 40 feet of you you blaze away through the trees with machine guns and submachine guns like gangsters do.

"If you hear a yelp, you hit something. If bullets come back at you, you did'nt."

Time for Great Endeavors Says Rev. Robt. Hall on Trend

"Do Not be Stampeded by Issues" He Advises Club

HURTFUL EXPEDIENT

"The Trend of the Times" was the subject of a very interesting address by Rev. Robert Hall before Belleville Rotary Club Monday at the Hotel Quinte. Asked to speak on this subject, Rev. Mr. Hall said he would have welcomed almost any other topic than this of which so much has been said and so many different opinions held. There was also the possibility of being misunderstood and misquoted, for he spoken word lends itself so to many interpretations and misunderstandings that questions such as these should be approached very cautiously and in a serious manner by public speakers. Panacesa, to cure all the ills of humanity, real and imaginary, were being announced from the housetops, figuratively speaking—communism was being tried in Russia, Fascism in Italy, and something else in Germany—Stalin, Mussolini and Hitler, were experimenting in Europe—Huey Long and others were preaching panacea in the United States—a jumble of voices. The old order must pass away and be succeeded by—what? All these would-be reformers have a different system.

Many Ills

The speaker warned against being stampeded by isms, on guard against overestimating the times and rapidity of the changes said to be taking place. We are passing through a testing time, a time of storm, and the storm is not over yet. Weaknesses have been revealed in the social structure which must be repaired. It is a time for intelligent relations between nations, extending international good fellowship, affecting international rivalry with good will and friendly hands across international borders. Time is to remove not only the threat of war but the underlying causes of war. There are many indications of sections of the population being misled and misguided, never to forget the lessons of the past—but it is not the veterans of previous wars who will be called upon to fight the next war if there should be one. It will be the youth of today—and the youth of today are not military minded; they have read Remarque's book "Cry Havoc" and Lloyd George's startling revelations of soldiers sacrificed to criminal incompetence, also other books showing the inner politicos of war and what goes on behind the scenes. Hence the youth of today will not be in such haste to flock to the colors as their forefathers were.

Human Life Sacred

Youth has a new regard for the sacredness of human life, and believe that the young men of other nations have the same right to life and happiness and peace.

Brotherly good will is rooted in sound economic common sense.

The speaker had no patience with those who call Jesus and his teachings idealistic—not idealistic, but practical. Present conditions show the crude absurdity of great wealth linked with great poverty and possibly the cause of it. Wealth of production coupled with present day absorption and distribution produce conditions which the best knowledge of the time must analyse and remedy.

New Ignorance

The great danger of the time lay in the possibility of foolish and hurtful expedients being resorted to, for while there is a new knowledge there is a new ignorance which must be guarded against. This new ignorance is shewing itself forgetting old tried and true knowledge, and leads to disaster.

There is much in the old knowledge handed down from generation to generation to guide safely in these new conditions and this new knowledge, and it is well to ponder the lessons of the past, before plunging off into new and untried experiments in the attempted reconstruction of the social order.

Rock Foundation

Rev. Mr. Hall reviewed present conditions and tendencies in an interesting manner, and cautioned against rushing blindly into new and untried changes which might lead to disaster. He urged that the wisdom of the ages be not forgotten. That was like the building up of new systems, and concluded by asking contemplation of the parable of the man who built his house upon a rock which survived the wind and the rain and stood secure after the house built upon the sand had been swept away.

Past President R. J. K. Graham introduced the speaker, and President Jamieson Reid and Bob Dewar expressed the appreciation of those present for the address.

Leo Riggs presided at the piano, Charlie Spalding acted as song leader and W. B. Deacon was sergeant-at-arms. An interesting interlude was the singing of Pauline Payne and the tight words were not being used in the singing of the National Anthem, coupled with a request for an examination at next meeting to see if Rotarians are singing it correctly the correct wording of "God Save the King."

Long Trial

One of the longest trials on record in the United States has been the Hauptmann trial. So much was it covered by the press that the people of this continent can almost feel that they were in the little court room at Flemington where Hauptmann was on trial. In no case of late have there been so many witnesses.

The trial covered a very wide canvas, through the prominence of the Lindbergh family bereaved through the kidnapping, the surprise which the arrest of Hauptmann had caused as it was first believed that a gang was involved, and the ramifications from the inland of New Jersey to as far away as New York Bronx section to as far away as New York Bronx section and even reaching to Germany. The case had been marked by two sudden deaths.

Now the world waits a verdict and the long drawn out course of the trial the though during the course of the trial the question of guilt and innocence has been freely talked of over radio and in the press by all the public, the jury must decide.

Learning About Canada

Recent trials in Canada in which kidnapping and the writing of threat letters were the charges cannot but have a salutary effect upon the persons who are inclined to infringe upon the rights of others provided there is the slightest possible chance of gain with a minimum of possibility of detection.

A man who signed himself XXXX Spike was sent to prison. So was David Meisner who is to do "a long stretch" for kidnapping of which he was found guilty.

Just why certain witnesses who came to Canada to testify in a trial and left before one could be called and the other fore one could be called and the other could finish his story under cross-examination, may not be quite clear but the public will probably reach a decision as to the reason. Whether their guess will be correct is another matter but the expressions the two made in an interview and their hurried departure may lead many to think they did not quite like the courts in Canada. Some evidence as to what the country thinks of them was voiced in the court.

Anyhow whatever the reason this case and the other have not lessened respect for Canadian law.

A Monastic Republic

"In sight of the windy plain of Troy to the east and of Mount Olympus to the west a little theocratic republic within the Greek Republic seems destined to disappear, says the New York Times. For a thousand years the united monasteries on Mount Athos have in male seclusion maintained a virtual independence, perched on the towering cliffs of one of the three promontories that thrust themselves out into the Aegean Sea. In its beauty, said Professor Mahaffy, the giant Greek echo whom American visitors and writers from the days of the first lecturing here, it surpasses all description, in its history it is unique both for early progress and subsequent unchangeableness, and in its daily life it is a faithful mirror of long-past centuries. It is a fragment of the Middle Ages set down in the midst of the world of to-day, for the ships pass below in their voyages to and from between Greece and Istanbul.

"Despite the attractiveness of their beautiful and remote cloisters as places to which one might flee the vicissitudes and temptations of the secular world, their population dwindles. Financial difficulties have mounted even to these heights. Before the war there were 5,000 monks living in the cloisters and hermitages; there are now fewer than 2,500 monks, and the lay brothers have been likewise greatly reduced in number. They occupy themselves tilling the soil, keeping bees, fishing, working at various handicrafts and making wines. But their time is spent largely in prayer and in the observance of religious rites. They are accustomed to pass eight hours a day in prayer and to fast frequently. Such has been the life for ten centuries in this group of picturesque lofty sanctuaries. No woman has ever been permitted to mount their lonely cliffs, across the narrow sea from which Turkish women were yesterday voting with men.

"The explanation of the waning in their population is that the monasteries have been deprived of their most fervent and richest pilgrims by the Greek disasters in Asia Minor and by the anti-religious attitude of the Bolshevist regime in Russia from which most of the pilgrims came. The seizure of the Russian estates of one of the greatest of the monasteries has cut off another source of support and the Greek Republic is evidently not disposed to take on the extra burden of support for the colony, whose property is exempt from taxation. There is a further reason given by a recent historian of Greece, William Miller, that nowadays the young Greek shows less desire for the monastic life than in the Middle Ages, and that the holy men taken a keener interest in the last political crisis in Athens than in the history of their own institutions. The Greek youth in the nearby American Farm School, also within sight of Mount Olympus, are better expressing the spirit of the new Greece. Soon, no doubt, Mount Athos will be opened, as other famous medieval monasteries, to the visits of world tourists."

Canada's Insurance Plan

The unemployment insurance measure that Prime Minister Bennett proposes for Canada is conservative. Like the British plan, it provides for equal contributions by employers and employees. Contributions and payments are not based on a percentage of the payroll or the wocker's wages, but consist of a flat rate. The highest contribution by men workers is 25 cents a week; the highest weekly rate of benefit is $6. A nine-day waiting period is provided before benefit payments begin for any unemployed individual. Benefit payments are normally to run for eleven weeks; under the British system they run for twenty-six weeks.

It is not easy to compare the proposed Canadian plan with our own pending legislation, because the latter merely lays down a framework of Federal conditions with which detailed State plans are to comply. The Committee on Economic Security, in submitting the American program, declared that its actuarial calculations were based on a waiting period of four weeks, a 50 per cent compensation rate, and a maximum of $15 a week for a maximum of sixteen weeks.

While technically the States are left free to pass a wide variety of unemployment insurance legislation, it seems pretty certain that in actual practice the differences will be small. This applies particularly to the central question of benefit payments. The bill calls for a 3 per cent Federal tax on payrolls, payable by the employer, and a credit allowance against this, up to 90 per cent, to employers in States which levy a similar or higher payroll tax. This means, in effect, that employers in the United States will pay a 3 1-3 per cent tax on their payrolls to finance practically the whole of the insurance payments and their administration. It is true that a State would be "free" under this provision to tax payrolls less than 3 per cent; but it would obviously be foolish for a State to do so for the employer would have to pay that amount anyway, while the Federal Government and not the State fund would get the difference. It is true also that a State would be "free" to ask for an equal or at least a supplementary contribution from the worker, but it would again be unlikely to do so, as a 3 per cent tax on total payrolls is usually considered adequate for an unemployment insurance plan.

This is the weakest feature of our own Federal unemployment insurance measure. That measure differs in this respect not only from the British and Irish plan but from practically all the major national unemployment insurance plans.—New York Times.

His Wagon to a Star

The twenty-four-year-old son of an English farmer has discovered a new way of hitching his wagon to the stars. He has actually wangled part of his farm wagon into an astronomical telescope. Mr. C. H. Leake, of Hereford, wanted a telescope, but farming is none too prosperous even in Hereford, so these days purchase was out of the question. So he constructed a metal tube fifteen feet long from some old metal drums used by his father for the storage of oil, sprayring powder, collected a few split pins from a worn-out farm wagon, some odds and ends from scrapped plowshares, a bit of wood from a wheelbarrow, and with these and some other oddments, disappeared into the barn which he used as a workshop. After nine months, working in his spare time, he actually mounted a magnificent reflecting telescope in the kitchen garden. "I did have to buy a piece of glass for the mirror," he explains, "but I silvered it myself." Most telescopes have a clock-work movement for following the path of a star and Mr. Leake went up to London to look for a second-hand clock. The cheapest he could get of the required size would cost $450, so he came home and invented a water-clock mechanism instead. And it works perfectly, with a little glycerine added on cold winter nights to prevent freezing. So there he is, with a real telescope of 140 inch focal length, that brings the stars some five hundred times nearer to his Hereford garden.—New Outlook.

Wisdom

The sunlight fell through the tall, clear pane
And spread on the pages a yellow stain,
An amber color that gave the book
A strangely faded and time-skimmed look.
Where a lad sat reading the bright hours through,
Forgeting the gold of the sun and the blue
Of the sky's high arch, light slanted and slid
From the youth's fair head and the book's worn lid,
From the chair and the floor, to creep back on the wall,
Till at last he looked up at a shadow's fall.
Then he closed his book and he cried, "how soon
Has the morning changed into afternoon!"

He turned away from the quiet room
Out into the sunlight's warmth and bloom;
He left the city far behind
To run on the hills in the sun and wind,
And he laughed as he lifted his eager face,
Out there in the sun and the wind's embrace.

"What book," he asked, "ever made men as wise
As the gold of the sun and the blue of the skies?"

DID YOU EVER GO to an old-fashioned banquet where the toast list was cluttered up with the names of a dozen or two budding statesmen, each one of whom imagined that his speech was to be the gem of the evening. The lads who come last face a depleted audience as the guests have a habit of sidling out in ones and twos and threes, with the air of "we'll be back in a minute, maybe." Some speakers flunk it, while others determinedly inflict the entire speech upon the few brave survivors who light up pipe, cigars or cigarettes and grit their teeth determined to see it through like Mr. Britling. All of which is remindful of a speech made at the eleventh hour at a great public dinner of the British Association for the Advancement of Science. A famous engineer was on the program for an address. He came last and the hour of midnight had just passed. After a lengthy and eulogistic introduction by the chairman the famous engineer delivered the following speech:

"Ladies and Gentlemen, at this late hour I shall illustrate the Law of Application of Science by applying a lucifer match to the wick of your bedroom candle. Let us all go to bed."

Needless to say that speech was the hit of the evening and has survived long after the other speeches and who spoke them have disappeared into the oblivion of forgetfulness.

NEW DEAL FOR OLD DEALS. Good Deals for Old Deals, said all the isms and panaceas to make this old world over along new and supposedly better lines may lead somewhere or nowhere. Probable is that the easiest part of New Deals a formulating them, the hard part is in fitting them to a humanity which is as wide apart as the poles in its tastes, character and prejudices. The human consideration is generally overlooked until the last, when it should be first. Edward Bellamy's "Looking Backward", publish'd 50 odd thirty years ago, painted a beautiful picture of a world in which competition was eliminated and folks were reduced to the same drab commonplace level. Our statesmen tell us that the old order must pass away—let us hope that any new order adopted proves itself as an improvement and that a world is not created just for lazy folks who have no wish to make the world better, themselves better, or create anything but a society content to draw rations contributed by the gods, for all they know to the contrary. Let's not take all the joy out of living and achievement.

COBRA SNOOZED BESIDE HER BED

LONDON, Feb. 12.—(CP)—The New Chronicle has been giving prizes for gruesome fish stories, and includes this one written by a Mrs. Nankin of Middlesex:

"My home was for some time in Ranikpur, India, and 14 days out of every month my husband's regiment took him away, and I was left alone with our young child (Alfred). Naturally there was a great storm and, feeling nervous, I got down in the bed beside my child, T., strength of the wind blew open a door, and the only light, the candle, was blown over and shattered.

"I was about to get off the bed and replace it when I heard a hissing noise. I recognize Poem with fear, for I knew that somewhere near me, in the dark, was a snake. It was no use calling out; no one was near. How I lived through that night I do not know. I could only sit and pray for the dawn. When a servant came a great cobra was found sleeping in the folds of a curtain near the bed."

REILLY DENOUNCES AGED DR. CONDON IN FINAL TRIAL

'PLANTED WITH THINGS'

Hauptmann's Lawyer Refers to Uncovered Face in Park

By WILLIAM A. KINSEY

Flemington, N.J., Feb. 12.—The final defense plea for Bruno Richard Hauptmann today turned into utterance of charges against Reilly and the dead Ollie Whateley, and denunciation of the aged Dr. John F. (Jafsie) Condon.

Condon stands behind something in this case that is unholy," Reilly said of the defense counsel, told the jury which is trying Hauptmann for his life as the kidnapper and murderer of Baby Lindbergh.

"I hope it not. I believe by his testimony and his actions here in this court."

He expressed his skepticism of Dr. Condon's entrance into the case.

"Here, come in the Bronx is that man," he said, "living close to City Island, close to the waterfronts. He says have all the college degrees in the world and have many of the great scientists in our prisons."

Condon and Under-Dog.

"There's no criterion," Reilly said, "because you come from one school or another.

"There's one thing that sticks out in the case. I'm reading from Dr. Condon's testimony. Condon of the famous Bronx type, the under-dog, son unless he had connection with him."

He read Condon's statement he entered the case because suspicion attached to "one poor woman, Hemsi 'Red' Johnson."

Dr. Condon testified, Reilly read on, that he always tried to help "the under-dog."

Dr. Condon "found out Johnson was that kind of a fellow," Reilly read further. "Building up an alibi for a man." Reilly declared, "who was never brought back for this trial."

Continually to ponder away at Condon, Reilly read from the intermediary's testimony he "knew the night of the kidnapping" Johnson had phoned Reilly Gow.

Dr. Condon corrected his testimony, explaining he knew later the call had been made.

He spoke next of Condon's advertisements in the Bronx Home News which brought his designation as intermediary.

"I don't believe there ever was such an advertisement," he shot at the jury.

"No one saw that letter. They didn't see fit to introduce it here. Another thing that's been kept out of the case."

The Jafsie letter in the Bronx paper was a signal, Reilly shouted.

"It was the same kind of a signal that passed between Johnson and 'Red' Johnson at eight o'clock that night. When Dr. Condon was in small ad in an obscure paper, instantly from Brooklyn comes a reply for Dr. Condon."

He said next Condon delivered to Reilly the police immediately after the receipt of the letter.

"Not all the letters received by Condon nobody ever saw him receive them," Reilly continued, emphasizing his words with a pointed finger.

The Second Find.

"Condon alone. Condon alone. I don't know anything about this man but the attorney general's people say ably say he was a fine, patriotic old gentleman."

Reilly turned to Betty Gow's discovery of the baby's thimble guard a month after the crime.

"Found it by a scout 14 or 15 days as the day it was put." Reilly declared. "Out in the fog and rain of Sourland Mountain. A little bit later. I suppose Condon could see it on it.

"Where's the other one? The baby had one on each thumb."

Reilly went on to discuss the construction of the box the kidnapper ordered as the container for the ransom payment of $50,000. He emphasized that Condon had the ransom box built and could not remember the cabinet maker who constructed it for him.

Face Uncovered in Park.

"Imagine" said Reilly, "a man who wrote the ransom notes, a man who stole the Lindbergh baby, sitting and talking on a bench with his face uncovered, talking to Dr. Condon for an hour and a quarter."

He referred to the first rendezvous course at Woodlawn Cemetery when the kidnapper sealed the contact with a call after being frightened by the noise made by a cemetery guard.

"Or does" believe any such fairy story," he said: "Col. Lindbergh places too much confidence in the people who he believes should be rightly disposed toward him."

Col. Lindbergh, Reilly declared, was required to remain down in silence while the ransom was paid.

"It would have gone there and torn the kidnapper limb from limb," Reilly shouted.

A Sound Heart.

"Of course," he commented, "they got around that. They say Colonel Lindbergh heard something falling. His night very well have been a limb of a tree snapping for there was a howling gale that night.

"The colonel didn't think enough of that sound to investigate. It was a tree limb cracking.

"The ladder," said Reilly, walking slowly back and forth between the ladder and the jury box, was "found in the mud. They would have you believe Hauptmann put up two sections and climbed up. The top of the second section was 20 inches below the window sill."

Reilly described the ladder climbing procedure as though it was an impossibility.

He said the State wanted the jury to believe the kidnapper reached from the top of the ladder opened the shutters and window, reaching five feet higher.

State's Theory of Entry

The State's theory, he said, considered it possible for a stranger to climb in, not knock over the beer bottle on the sill, not bump against the table, pick up the child, who gave no outcry and go out.

"The person who picked that child," Reilly declared in loud and emphatic tone, "out of its crib knew the child and the child knew that person."

"He goes back with a 30-pound child in his arms, swings himself out of the window in the darkness, and is able to find the top of that rickety old ladder, three feet below the window.

"They'd have you believe that he climbed down to the dowel pin and off down the broken brick. That's what they say but what they say is not evidence."

"That ladder was a plant," he asserted. "No one climbed that ladder. When it fell, if it did, it would have dug up mounds of earth beside those holes. Do you see any mounds?" He showed the photograph to the jury and pointed out the holes were undisturbed.

One Footprint.

There was nothing else to show the man had fallen, he argued. "I say that points out very strongly that no one went up that ladder." Reilly went on. "Only one footprint. They would have you believe the kidnapper walked through the night to the house, as the sailors say, by dead reckoning. He only found no footprints but that one."

"I say that ladder was a plant. I say it was never up against the house that night." Again the fist pounded the table.

Reilly stalked over to the kidnap ladder. He took it and smashed it against the wall with a resounding bang.

He was demonstrating that the ladder would have hit the house wall when it broke, and have left a great gash on the house wall at the spot given with the weight of the kidnapper and the child.

"Then guess work," he said of the state's theory that the kidnap ladder was used and splintered under the kidnapper's weight.

Kidnapper's Burden.

Reilly sought to allow the difficulty the kidnapper would have in carrying the ladder and baby.

"Folding it up nicely," he went on, "carrying it down the hill and leaving it some place else."

Someone who knew the baby took it, he reiterated. He pointed his accusing finger at Betty Gow.

Betty Gow's friend, "Red" Johnson.

"A telephone call came for Betty Gow" Reilly asserted. "From 'Red' Johnson that night only two hours after she had left him to go to Hopewell."

He poked his finger at Mrs. Stockton, juror No. 5.

"What do you know about 'Red' Johnson?

"What do I know about 'Red' Johnson?

thousands of dollars, your money, to bring the slayer of the baby to trial, and only put one of them on the witness stand.

His face flushed and his voice was raised to a shout.

"Nothing hiding things here?" he demanded.

"Who's hiding the truth?"

Reilly swung back to the signal he said was given from the kidnapper to Betty Gow the kidnap night.

"They got the signal: the coast is clear."

"Then that child came down one of those two stairways in the arms of some person the little child had confidence in and trusted."

That's why the child did not cry out or scream."

"That's the first point you've got to hurdle. You've got to place Hauptmann in that room," he said.

He said the state's "theory" was that the skull fracture ordered by Col. Lindbergh the baby. Theories, he asserted, were not enough. "Direct evidence" was necessary.

Date of Death.

"Whenever the child received that blow," Reilly read from Wilentz' opening statement, asserting the child might have lived several days in any one of the hundred hiding places near Hopewell. "Whenever," Reilly declared, "does not mean March 1st. That's the pattern. That's the indictment."

Reilly raised doubt the ransom note could have remained on the ledge on a night "such a gale howled as it." He asserted it would have blown away instantly.

"But when they entered the room," he went on, implying again the crime was an inside job, "the note was there. The window was closed. The shutters were drawn just as they had been and the beer stein was undisturbed."

Hauptmann Absorbed.

Hauptmann was absorbed in Reilly's recital as the bulky Brooklyn lawyer again investigated against Betty Gow's failure to visit the sick baby between the hours of. eight and ten.

Reilly emphasized again nothing was disturbed in the nursery except on the floor, but it's just as conceivable that the kidnapper left Lindbergh's shoes as off anybody else's."

Reilly said he believed the Colonel got mud on his shoes when he dashed to the nursery after the child and then left the mud on the nursery floor. Hauptmann's shoes were not the ones, he said.

The defence attorney questioned the plausibility of a kidnaper slipping on a suitcase under the window and then leaving it.

Finger Prints Missing

"That baby was taken down those stairs," he declared, indicating the diagram of the house floor plan, "and whatever mud may be wiped off the fingerprints in the nursery, Reilly declared.

"They didn't even find a finger, so they can have his the board of wall when it broke, and have left a great gash on the house wall at the spot given with the weight of the kidnapper and the child.

"Then guess work," he said of the state's theory that the kidnap ladder was used and splintered under the kidnapper's weight.

On Thursday night, the locals visited Marmora to play a shield ued game in the Central League. The home squad held them to a 2-2 tie in overtime. The players served up an excellent brand of hockey. Maguire and Quinn secured the markers for the locals who have won two games and tied one other. Tom Beatly assumed the managership.

Tweed juniors turned in their best game when they defeated Napanee on the latter's ice by a score of 3-0 on Monday last. Almost hopeless all out of the picture when the final period opened with Napanee leading 6-2, they ran in four goals within five minutes to even the score crowd, "Tip" Tummon securing two of th.: and Maguire the winning tally. Tweed showed in a remarkable effort in goal. A number from Tweed accompanied the team and are loud in their praises of the "garrison finish" of the locals.

There is a strong possibility that the G.N.R. weekly train service between Tweed and Shannonbridge may be withdrawn as the Canadian National has made application to the Board of Railway Commission to do away with the service and remove the rails on the ground that the line is being operated at a loss. The chief centres affected by the proposal are people clamored for "blood", he asserted.

This brought a protest from Wilentz there was no such evidence.

Hauptmann could not be convicted of murder, he declared, because he had ransom money.

"The bungling of the police," he asserted, went on. They could have called out the National Guard of this great State when the child of the greatest flying American had been kidnapped."

Turning to the jurors he said he wanted to leave two thoughts with them as they went to lunch.

"There is no evidence in this case," he declared, "that Hauptmann was in the nursery that night and there is no evidence whatever the child was killed that night!"

It was on this note he closed and Justice Trenchard ordered adjournment.

Have you found the SUNNY PACKAGE on your grocer's shelf?

It's a delicious ready-to-eat cereal. Millions of Canadians have found Kellogg's All-Bran a safe, effective means of correcting common constipation—relieved by the "bulk" of "bulk" in the meal.

Laboratory measurements show that All-Bran provides "bulk" to aid elimination. All-Bran also supplies vitamin B and iron.

The "bulk" in this tempting cereal is more effective than that found in fruits and vegetables because it resists digestion better. Within the body, it absorbs moisture, and forms a soft mass. Gently, this cleans out the intestines.

Isn't this natural food better than taking patent medicines? Two tablespoonfuls of All-Bran daily are usually sufficient. Chronic cases with each meal. If this fails to give relief, see your doctor.

Enjoy All-Bran as a cereal, or cook into appetizing recipes. Kellogg's All-Bran contains much more needed "bulk" than part-bran products.

Use Caution In Opposing Adolescent

Intelligent Reasoning Usually Does More Good Than Threats

By LISA GRENELLE

Alice wanted to leave college and go on the stage but Aunt Laura didn't approve. She took Alice in the back parlor and gave her a lecture on the subject.

Every possible argument was used, every threat, even.

But Alice remained silent and unmoved.

Aunt Laura went on, pacing the floor, eloquent, passionate, furious. Alice was a little fool. "Did she want to ruin her future? Had she no consideration for her family? etc.

Alice flushed slightly and the corners of her mouth tightened, a stubborn, determined look came over her face.

Aunt Laura began to threaten. If Alice persisted she was through with her—forever!

Alice persisted. Alice went on the stage. Alice never darkened Aunt Laura's doorstep again, or ever cared to.

And the funny part was that Alice had not really been so set on the stage as her aunt supposed. The night-early hours she conferred had Aunt Laura handled the situation differently, had she been less vehement, more sympathetic.

Appeal to Common Sense

Now here's another case and how a sensible woman handled it.

Louise was living with her grandmother. Her problem was this. She was growing up and pretty excited about it. She had beaux and an evening dress, and just to prove how free and adult she was she had occasionally have a cocktail. No one was going to tell Louise that was Louise's attitude. She was old enough to do as she liked.

Then Louise's grandmother said, "that...you take a drink now and then?"

"They all do," Louise answered defiantly, and settled herself for the lecture she was going to last.

"Yes, of course," the old woman agreed unexpectedly, "but you're different, Louise—"

"Here comes the family honor," Louise thought.

"You get so excited, laugh so much, getting yourself about—if anybody saw you take a drink no one would suspect. Mixed drinks aren't it's pretty easy for lively girls to collect a reputation they may regret later on."

Louise waited.

The lecture brought it over, and came to the conclusion grandma was right. Nice boys didn't drink girls who drank mixed drinks. Maybe it would be better not to drink at all. Mixed drinks were out of style and made a bigger hit than anybody.

And so grandma's advice was taken because she didn't threaten, but simply appealed to Louise's emotions, simply presented an intelligent reason.

Correct Manners

By Mrs. Cornelius Beeckman

LETTER OF APPRECIATION

Dear Mrs. Beeckman:

It is necessary to resign my office position because of my mother's ill health. My mother has passed away, and after being away from the office for a year and a half, my former employer, through a friend of mine employed in the same department, asked me back. I would be glad to have me back to work, and to begin with at a salary a little higher than the minimum wage. He is not sure of the higher wage, but will try to do all that he can for me.

I am left alone now and have to shift for myself and I would like to go back to the office. Would it be proper for me to write a letter of appreciation? I cannot see him personally for I live over a hundred miles away. Will you please word a letter of appreciation for me, if you think I should write it?

K.

I am happy that you have the urge to write this kind gentleman a letter of appreciation of his generous thought about you and your welfare. By all means do it, for kindly gestures are too rare and precious not to be acknowledged by grateful words of gratitude. Your letter might be worded something like this:

Dear Mr. Brown,

May I tell you, please, of my deep and special thanks to you for your kindness and thoughtfulness to me? I needed so much the position which, through your goodness, I now have, and I cannot begin to tell you what a relief and comfort it is to me to have it. Thank you, Mr. Brown, for giving me this opportunity of returning to your organization.

And do please let me assure you that I shall try in every way to do everything in my power to fulfil the requirements of the position.

Best wishes to you and deepest appreciation.

Yours very sincerely,

Time to Leave

Dear Mrs. Beeckman:

I have a young lady goes to a theatre or dance with a young man, who makes the first move to go home?

2. When a young lady has been introduced to a young man, or clearly man at a gathering, does she say to him, "I am very glad to have met you" upon leaving?

3. Is it proper to wear a wool plaid dress to a school dance?

4. Is it still correct to say "Yes, Ma'am" and "No Ma'am" or should "Yes, Mrs. Smith" be used instead?

1. It is the young lady who makes the suggestion of leaving a party.

2. First, let's record your question—for it is the man who is introduced to a woman, never the woman, young or elderly, is introduced to a woman at a party, and the woman, leaving, is saying her good-bye, it is perfectly correct for her to say, "Good-bye, Mr. Allen, I am very glad to have met you" by the man may say this pleasant comment. It's just a friendly remark that one individual may graciously say to another individual.

2. What a girl wears to a school dance depends entirely on the decision of formality of the dance. Usually an evening dance frock is the appropriate thing to wear.

4. "Yes, Ma'am" and "No, Mr. Brown"—this is the polite way to answer. It's grand to get the habit early in life, of using the other person's name.

Anniversary "At Home"

Dear Mrs. Beeckman:

I am to celebrate my tenth wedding anniversary very soon. I have a small apartment, which is too small to have a party in the evening. I would like to know if I may have an open house party from three to nine p. m. on the Sunday following the date of the anniversary? I would like to serve a buffet supper.

It would be a very sensible and thoroughly proper plan to have your anniversary party at a time when it would be most convenient to you and to your guests.

Widow's Signature

Dear Mrs. Beeckman:

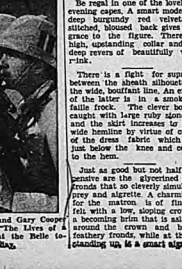
I'm a widow. Assume her own initials when her husband dies, and drop his? Does Mrs. John Brown become Mrs. Mary Brown

Widow.

Correctly a widow uses exactly the same forms of name that she used when her husband was living. For instance, her visiting-card still reads Mrs. John Alan Brown. A letter addressed to her reads also in her formal name: Mrs. John Alan Brown. She still signs her business letters like this:

Very truly yours,

(Mrs. John Brown) Mary Smith Brown (or Mary Brown)



Wife's Gift

Dear Mrs. Beeckman:

Will you please tell me if it is right for a wife to give presents to her husband on a first wedding anniversary?

C.

Yes.

Advice to the Lovelorn

By Beatrice Fairfax

Copyright, 1935,

How Shall She Treat Him?

Dear Miss Fairfax:

Someone has said that life begins at 40. But I really thought it had begun for me the other night at a party, and I'm not yet 24. I've never been attractive to men, as I'm rather shy and lack brass. But I met a man who fell for me at first sight, and he seemed to fall for me too. I was perfectly happy, as I danced and danced with him till the we small hours.

He made a date with me two days later—and he could not have misled me more honest or street, as he saw me home after the party—but he never showed up for the date. He had not even the excuse or apology. How shall I treat him if I ever see him again? Answer him completely, or pretend I didn't notice?

Don't you think it would flatter this young man's vanity if you ignored him on meeting him and came back in rudeness equal to his own? Perhaps he will be one to learn a thing or two by such means. But I shouldn't make any more engagements with a youth so lacking in good manners that he doesn't know enough to phone some sort of an excuse when he breaks an engagement.

Trying to Get Away from Herself

Dear Miss Fairfax:

I married a man before I was married, when I went to an office every day, that I just couldn't stand it. I wanted a home and a husband and a baby. But now that I have those things, I'm no happier than I was before.

When I was single I dreamed woman in a mink coat. I feel sick with envy when I see a glittering creature. I want I want to eat there, and I want a house instead of a flat. I want to be dressed as the best he can, but I'm restless.

Sometimes I wonder how pretty I am, and I should like to try for the movies. My mother would take care of the baby if I do this.

Restless.

You are bored with yourself, my dear, because you allow your emotions to sway you. No one can be happy who is like a leaf in a storm and is blown by every chance wind. You wanted a home and a baby and a husband, and these best of gifts are not appreciated. You weren't happy when you were in an office; you would not be happy even if you succeeded in getting into the movies.

Happiness comes from an inner serenity—from seeking happiness and finding it, from coveting everything that glitters.

"Faint Heart Never Won Fair Lady"

Dear Miss Fairfax:

I'm 18 and a senior in high school. I love a certain girl and have loved her ever since she entered our classes. She's popular and I'm afraid to tell her how much I like her. I'm afraid to ask her to go to any senior activities, because I believe she will turn me down.

Jimmy.

Suppose she does turn you down—try, try again. The men who succeed are those who will not take "no" for an answer, either in love or seeking better business opportunities. Brace up, James

Wonders What's the Matter with Her

Dear Miss Fairfax:

Here I am just 18 and as lonesome as ever. I'm not at all quite popular, and I'm a nice person, as good dancer and can be the "life of the party." Yet boys are not keen on me for my company. When I go to a dance I get every dance, but no one takes me out on a date.

A certain man once told me he wouldn't see me any more because I was a nice kid and he might fall in love with me. Are men afraid of love, or of me? I'm perfectly harmless.

Just Eighteen

Eighteen is entirely too young to imagine you're not popular. Probably you've not met the right type of young man yet. The young man who told you you were "nice", was most likely looking for a wild-time girl. At your age, you can afford to wait till you meet young men who will recognize and appreciate your qualities.

Finds Her Mother a Burden

Dear Miss Fairfax:

My mother lives with us and keeps "our hands tied." My brother is in a camp and sends her money every month, but she doesn't want to spend that because she thinks he will need it to go into business when he returns. I hardly think this is fair to my husband and me. We have to go into debt each month for necessities, as my husband's salary is not large enough.

I have mentioned moving into a smaller apartment to cut expenses, but it won't work. Please tell me how I can get her to leave us.

Have you ever tried to put yourself in your mother's place and imagine the bitterness of being old and dependent? She is wanting the small amount your brother sends her to help him get on his feet, even when he's away from home.

Like the Chinese, I have immense sympathy for the old people. And if you want someone to back you up in putting your mother in an institution or the poor house, I'm afraid you'll have to go to someone with less compassion for age than I have.

Colds Leave Impurities in the Blood

Announcement

That is one reason why you are often tired out and weak after a cold.

To disperse these impurities, take a bottle or two of Feldene Syrup Compound of Hypophosphites.

Feldene Syrup contains the "Vitality" of Feldene, phosphorus (zinc) and other blood purifiers that science has discovered to be effective in helping to reduce blood impurities. It aids in enriching the blood corpuscles with new energy and vitality.

To get complete effect of the "Vitality" on blood, nerves, muscles and bones is so important that you'll associate yourself with your quick "pick-up" after taking a bottle or two of Feldene Syrup. 2tG

Nerve Force — Digestion

Worry and anxiety often upset digestion. The nerve force required in the process of digesting the food

Is consumed by these enervating emotions. The gastric juices fail to flow in the stomach And nervous indigestion develops.

Men are especially subject to this form of indigestion,

Which tends to become chronic.

Under the strain of modern business life. It is necessary to build up

A reserve of nerve force.

This is not a mere relief but a means

Of completely restoring the depleted nervous system.

"Lives of a Bengal Lancer"

Four Years in the Making of this Film

The Soldiers of the King, not as Kipling sang of them, but as Hollywood has since described in his remarkable book, "The Lives of a Bengal Lancer" are the heroes of the most spectacular and colorful picture of warfare and heroism in India, which was four years in the making and is the feature attraction at the Belle Theatre Saturday and Wednesday, matinee and evening.

Produced by Paramount, "The Lives of a Bengal Lancer" features Gary Cooper, Franchot Tone, Richard Cromwell and Sir Guy Standing in the leading roles.

It is a picture replete with the sounds and sights of the mysterious East, as authentic as the Himalayas themselves and equally thrilling. And, although it has more to offer in the pictorial line than any recent Hollywood offering, "The Lives of a Bengal Lancer" is particularly remarkable for its fine dramatic story of four great soldiers.

The plot of "The Lives of a Bengal Lancer" revolves about the conflict between Sir Guy Standing, hard smitten, crusty colonel—and three of his subordinate officers, one of whom is his son.

Their differences come to a head when the son, Richard Cromwell, is carried away by a warring chieftain and Standing refuses to pursue because he cannot endanger his regiment. Disregarding his orders, Cooper and Tone don disguise, are captured and thrown into a dungeon with Cromwell. Tortured for information on the whereabouts of a tremendous supply of ammunition, Cromwell finally breaks down and blurts out the regiment secret.

The chieftain captures the ammunition train and prepares to lead a revolution against the British. The Lancers ride to attack him, although they know that they will be destroyed, because it is their duty to stem the revolution.

He and Tone plan to blow up the fortress. They draw lots for the job which means sure death to the one who gets caught. Tone wins, but Cooper beats him to it and racing through a hail of fire, succeeds. Finally they reach the arsenal. A terrific explosion follows and the Lancers are saved.

Cooper and Tone contribute the outstanding portrayals of courageous and romantic soldiers. Add to "The Lives of a Bengal Lancer" and the entire cast, including Monte Blue, C. Aubrey Smith, Douglas Dumbrille, Kathleen Burke and Akim Tamiroff in their supporting roles, render sterling performances.

AT THE CAPITOL

"Gentlemen Are Born"

A Surprising Story Vividly Convincing

In his latest picture, "Gentlemen Are Born," now showing at the Capitol, and in this he is the hero, apart from college with no more tangible riches than conception of endless legal tender value—and Franchot jumped at the chance to get away from wealth and aristocracy on the screen.

As one of four boys who set out from their alma mater to conquer the world, Franchot Tone's problem is the most difficult. That the reverse of those he has had to solve in his recent pictures.

Instead of being a rich young man braving the displeasure of an aristocratic father to marry a beautiful daughter of the people, Franchot is a penniless commoner who finds himself in the unfriendly hand of a Wall Street magnate's daughter.

In "Gentlemen Are Born", he doesn't have a chance to get fed up in rapid succession with penthouses, long, inland mansions, flaming bridges and steam yachts. Franchot is tickled to death to leave a boarding house room, a job as a cub reporter on a newspaper, and enough money to pay his fare to a Fifth Avenue bus.

And—as said before—he's getting a tremendous kick out of his screen poverty. The added drama of it appeals to him, perhaps for the first time, that Franchot Tone is the son of an industrial magnate, a graduate of the exclusive High School and Cornell University.

"Gentlemen Are Born," is a picture of romance and thrills, treating of the battle of four college boys to get ahead in life, and all star cast which includes besides Tone, Jean Muir, Margaret Lindsay, Ann Dvorak, Rosa Alexander and Rick Foran.

In addition to this highly entertaining feature a number of specially picked short reels will be shown. Entertainment, "All Sealed Up" is a big Vitaphone-comedy hit, featuring the antics of all seal cause endless merriment. "Dan Dunn, Secret Service" and "Du Barry" ten cups will be given away Thursday, Friday and Saturday 9.10. Be sure and take in "Broadway Bill," a picture worthy of the tremendous publicity it has been given—it's superlative entertainment.

DACHSHUND IS POPULAR BREED

Name Means Badger-Hunter in German Tongue

New York, Feb. 12 (AP) — The Dachshund, a dog long on brains and in body, is the most popular breed at the Westminster Kennel Club show. Several Dachshund families are showing their dogs to explain the popularity, admitting to the unlimited ferocity things might be perplexing. For example:

As dogs go, the Dachshund is no beauty. In fact, he looks rather like a candidate for some giant bologna equipped with accessories for barking, running and expressing pleasure—his entire tail through a clothes wringer.

"But," said Victor E. Straae of New York, who is exhibiting "Hexial Von Hexial", there is nothing funny about the Dachshund when you judge his looks by his occupation. He is rarely, if ever, specialized, physically perfect animal.

Mr. Straae means badger-hunter in German, and that is his original purpose. His job is to go into burrows and pull out badgers. Hence, his short, strong legs, fitting him for underground work.

Capt. Freeman Hatfield

Capt. Freeman Hatfield claims that his ship was torpedoed off the Irish coast by German submarine in July, 1915

The Charge

Briefly the charge against Hatfield is that he collected more than $71,000 from the Canadian government by representing that his ship was torpedoed, Queen, sank off the Irish coast in July, 1915, when torpedoed by a German submarine. The Canadian government alleges that in so doing Hatfield committed a fraud on the grounds that his ship was not torpedoed, but sank during a storm.

Captain Hatfield was paid for the loss of his vessel in 1931 from a fund provided for compensation of the victims of "illegal acts of warfare" by Germany during the world war. Accused with Hatfield in this fraud charge is Premier Hance Logan of Parrsboro, N.S., a barrister, who represented Hatfield in the submission of his claim.

Captain Hatfield maintains his ship was sunk by a German submarine, and gives the following description of the disaster on the morning of July 31, 1915:

"As I came on deck" he said, "the cook called my attention to a speck on the water, some distance off the port bow. We stopped for a second or two and then saw that it looked like a periscope. We kept our eyes glued on it. Next thing we knew, we saw the white streak coming at us. That was the torpedo's wake.

"Rolled Over and Floundered"

"She hit us a little way forward on the port side. There was a terrific shock, and the vessel rolled over to port and floundered. I took a sounding and ordered the pumps into action, but the torpedo had left a gaping hole in the ship and filled rapidly."

With a load of lumber, the ship floated for hours and Captain Hatfield with his crew, was picked up by the White Star liner Symric and taken to Liverpool. The accused man denies his ship sank during a storm. He insists that although there was a light rain, there was hardly any wind and no sea to speak of when the Gypsum Queen went down.

Captain Hatfield said he didn't rile his calm until many years afterwards because he did not know that there was a special reparations fund at the time. As to the charge that he is a fugitive from justice, the former skipper said that he was in command of boats out of Jacksonville and Pensacola, Fla., to Brazil and the West Indies for a number of years and was also in command of a small boat plying Long Island sound. He says he always cleared port but was then named and Canadian authorities could easily have found him by looking up registration records in eastern seaboard ports.

HOWE, BOWMAN GO TO DETROIT FOR $50,000

First Step in Re-organizing Punchless Red Wings

BIG CASH DEAL

Both Players Will Add Strength to Motor City Team

Detroit, Feb. 12.—One of the biggest hockey deals in several years was consummated Monday with Detroit Red Wings sell-and trade to the National League's American association sending a bonus of $50,000 each and Defenseman Teddy Graham to St. Louis for Syd Howe and Scotty Bowman.

In announcing the purchase of two of the most promising players in the circuit, Manager Jack Adams of the Red Wings declared the deal was the first step in a reorganization designed to make the Wings contenders in the 1935-36 campaign. Graham, however, is the only player being disposed of at once.

Adams went to the weakest club in either division for Howe, a sensation at left wing this season and Bowman, former Toronto Maple Leafs star, Ont., amateur who already ranks with the best defence players in the sport. The Blues have won only seven games this season while they have lost and tying six.

With Leaders.

Howe stands fourth among Canadian section goal scorers with 14 and ninth among the division's point getters with 27. Only Charlie Conacher and Harvey Jackson of Toronto Maple Leafs and Earl Robinson of Montreal Maroons have begun more goals this season than Howe. Flashy Ottawa youth who started his N.H.L. career with the Senators moved this season to St. Louis.

Bowman, also defenseman of Niagara Falls Cataracts, senior Ontario champions in 1933, turned professional in the 1932-33 season. He left with Ottawa and quickly became an outstanding performer. He and Irvine Frew have averaged 90 minutes a game on the St. Louis rear guard positions, carrying virtually the entire defence burden.

Wings Lose Hope.

Adams has put slender hopes that the acquisition of Howe and Bowman will lead the Red Wings into the N.H.L. play-offs this season. The Wings have been in a prolonged slump, slipping from second to last place and then steadily losing ground. They are nine points behind Boston Bruins and New York Rangers, tied for second place, with 16 games remaining to play.

But the pudgy boss of the Wings, N.H.L. champions in 1932, said that the club will fight to the last ditch in an effort to dislodge one of the leaders. Howe is expected to contribute greatly to a punchless Detroit attack. Bowman is also effective on the stick.

Changes Doubtful.

Just who Adams will send down to the Detroit Cubs of the International League to make room for the newcomers remained in doubt. Johnny Sorrell and Yip Foster will play for the Olympics tonight and on Thursday Earl and Desse Roche will line-up with the minor league team. Adams will be definite which of the four will stay down.

Howe and Bowman will be here in time to line up for the Red Wings against Chicago Black Hawks on Thursday night. Adams announced definite that Bowman will play defenseman, and Lorne Duguid, forward, will be sent with the St. Louis League club for the rest of the season.

With McDonald, Walter Buswell and Ebbie Goodfellow for defence duty along with Bowman, the Wings may not recall Foster from the Olympic ranks. Adams decides to leave Goodfellow at centre.

(Day By Day)

Some time over the week-end unknown persons entered the Belleville hockey teams' dressing room and stole a dozen hockey sticks or more. "After the Peterboro game the other night we had 27 hockey sticks in the locker and yesterday afternoon there were but ten when we called the arena," stated Manager Jones after the robbery was discovered on Monday. No person was seen leaving the dressing room with a bundle of hockey sticks, making the disappearance of the hockey outfittings all the more puzzling. The "worst part of The entire affair is the fact that they took the choice sticks and left us with the culls," lamented Eddi.

During the regular playing schedule in the local Intermediate loop home town referees were employed throughout. When making reference to the matter today, however, Commissioner Jones said, "I've notified Bill Hewitt to send along neutral referees for all play-offs in our group." So we find "Army" Armstrong of Oshawa named as the referee for tonight. While on the subject of junior hockey tonight sees the opening of the play off series in the local junior O. H. A. group when Walt Gerowy Napanee kids meet Oshawa in exhibition sticks with the local contingent of juniors. The Napanee crew have two verdicts over the locals in regular season play, but now that the money series is on, Manager Thompson expects the change to go some through. Both squads will be at full strength this evening and the advance sale of tickets is the largest on record yet this season.

The sympathy of the sporting fraternity is extended to Harold Cowlin, member of the Deacon A. C. basketball team, on the recent loss of his best friend, his mother.

In Montreal, Leo Dandurand confirmed earlier stories that the Canadiens and one other N.H.L. team will tour Europe in the spring and play eight games with various cities against another league club yet to be named. The players will number ten players, a manager and a trainer. A referee will also be taken along, Mr Dandurand said.

Did you know that more than 500,000 hockey sticks were manufactured in Canada during 1934 and had a value of approximately $130,000.

Recent press dispatches from Toronto confirm the fact that John "Bud" Murray, who cavorted about around the keystone sack for the C.O.B.L. Interprovince Pros last summer, is to receive a try-out this spring in the training camp of the Toronto Maple Leafs. Murray always was a shortstop in the field and a scrapper out of a player, the kind who usually goes over in professional baseball. Murray previously played for the Toronto Riverdale Grads and the Hollywood Vanity squad in California. In all probability he will receive permission from the O.B.A.A. to try out with the Leafs.

While making comment of the possible dropping back to intermediate baseball ranks of the Belleville Athletics, head of the Picton club's action, our Peterboro Examiner contributor hands out a rather double-tail bouquet in his sport column that reads:

"Yeah, that's quite true of both Belleville and Picton who are foolishly thinking of taking the softer way out—but what about Napanee? Are they still going to meet around in intermediate company with their packed outfit pushing over the stumblebums or are they going to step up where they belong in the senior company? They must be stepping up or the kettle would never be calling the pot black, in this case.

No matter how you look at it, local O.H.A. hockey teams are in for four games this week, the juniors playing here tonight and back in Napanee on Thursday night. The "Combines" play the first of the "big six" semi-finals here on Wednesday night with the return game scheduled for Friday night in Percy Corbon.

FLASH—Eddie Wright, manager of the Peterboro intermediates, notified Manager Thomas early today that the first semi-final game in the "big six" loop would be played between the Petes and the locals at the Belleville arena on Wednesday night. "What a come-down for the high and mighty Petes who, a short week ago, had the group championship all but tucked away in the bag." With the Petes and Belleville clashing and a twin bill of basketball on our hands, Wednesday night looks like a red letter sport eve, for all patrons of sport locally.

Employer Resents Neglect of Personal Appearance

It was a bitter surprise to Tom. He never realized that his personal appearance was objectionable. But the boss had politely but firmly told him: "You'll have to spruce up — keep clean shaven — or get out!"

Two Points for Scorer Creates No Enthusiasm

New York, Feb. 12 (CP)—Suggestion of some critics goal scorers in the National Hockey League be accredited with two points and the play-makers only one meets with little enthusiasm among a number of star centres of the Calder loop, many wingmen, and some coaches.

Local hockey men and various players from out-of-town fans have been questioned and should the N. H. L. adopt the old fashioned system the reaction would probably resemble a minor rebellion.

Joe Simpson, coach, Art Chapman, Norman Himes and Sweeney Schriner, forwards of the Maroons; Ann-Mac Kaminsky, Dit Clapper and Paul Haynes, Boston Bruin snipers; Frankie Boucher, Captain Bill Cook, Charlie Mason and Bert Connolly, New York Ranger front linemen; Syd Howe and Scotty Bowman of Detroit Red Wings and Glenn Brydson of St. Louis Eagles, all answered with an emphatic no to the suggestion that goals be doubled.

Simpson summed up the general objection and was concurred in by Frank Patrick, Brian Shaughnessy and George "Buck" Boucher, who has put new life in the lowly Eagles since taking them over.

"To give a scorer two points and the man who sets him up only one," Shuffled Joe, "would mean we will go back to the old days when a man who featured consistently by individual rushes and was gradually losing popularity."

Now after a player like Chapman or Boucher or Scotty Bowman has nearly a whole team, pulls the defence and sometimes his goal keeper out of position then passes to a team mate for a goal, the latter player could score behind folded, would it be fair to take credit away from the man who set up the play for the goal and give it to the man who merely poked the rubber into the cage?"

BELLEVILLE TO MEET PETERBORO

First Game in Play-off to be Staged Here Wednesday

With the O.H.A. group play-offs at their height it was announced today that Belleville Intermediate "A" would be treated to two group playoff games on consecutive nights, the Napanee Juniors appearing at the Belleville Arena Wednesday in the first Junior O.H.A. group No. 2 play-downs, while on Wednesday night the first intermediate "A" tilt off in the "Big Six" group will bring together the Belleville team who were beaten by Campbellford for the group leadership and the Belleville Intermediates.

Tonight's junior game and Wednesday night's intermediate "A" fixture game are the only O.H.A. fixtures scheduled to be played in Belleville this week and goals are to count on the round, the loser in each series being eliminated. The play in the first semi-final play-off game on Wednesday night at the Belleville Arena with the return game being staged in Peterboro on Friday night. Goals will count on the round.

Limit Fixed For Hundred And One Mile

New York, Feb. 12 (AP)—The best that any money-looted professional can hope to do in future attacks on world's records is to clip only 27 hundredths of a second off the time he sent record of 9.4 seconds for the 100-yard dash and 1.6 seconds off the 5:04 seconds off the existing standard of 4.06.7 for the mile run.

In other words for the first time in athletic history theoretical limits have been set for the human being can accomplish on foot as well as in other mechanical aspects of track and field sport. The ultimate in the two events with which the world's keenest debate for years is 9.13 seconds for the 100-yard spring and 4.04.9 seconds for the mile.

The figures are based on scientific research made by Dr. Pinnih mathematicians and developed into definite conclusions by Herbert Hamilton, head track and field coach at the University of California. Hamilton regards the hire-second-a-100" as an impossibility and the much-discussed four-minute mile as beyond the reach of the present record-holders Glenn Cunningham, as well as his two domestic rivals, Bill Bonthron and Gene Venzke. The golden Days of Cunningham, concedes we will some day see 15 feet negotiated in the pole vault and 27 feet cleared in the broad jump.

Whitton Stars As Campbellford Finishes First

Peterboro, Feb. 12—Campbellford Maroons won first place in the Big Six O.H.A. intermediate "A" group by defeating Peterboro Petes here tonight 4 goals to 3 and taking the round by 11 goals to 6. Local entry the Petes will now play off with Belleville, the first place team, and the winner of the round will meet Campbellford in the final round for the group championship. Campbellford Peterboro finished the regular season with even terms representing a play-off.

Campbellford, playing defensive hockey and waiting for the breaks, easily held their lead on the round after scoring three goals in the first in front 2 to 1 at the end of the first period and 4 to 2 at the end of the second and although the Petes ganged up on them with all thoughts of a victory in the last they only succeeded in scoring twice while jibe Maroons hung up their counter.

Whitton, dropping back to the Maroons defence to replace Harry Ingram who is ill, was the Campbellford star, figuring in most of the goals and Clarke while Fred Ingram was always prominent. Ellis got two of the Petes' goals.

Whitton Stars.

Campbellford outscored the Petes two goals to one in the first period dashing plays by Hunter Whitton being responsible for both the Maroons' counters. At the end of the first on minutes' play he went down centre ice, gave Shut a pass to beat Ellis and shot from the right. Fred picked a corner neatly. A minute and a half later dashed down and rounded the defence and beat Foley with a shot from the side. The Petes' fought back hard and Ellis finally scored when he went through almost the length of the ice to corner the net with a swift shot.

Campbellford began the second session the Maroons increased their lead when Whitton, taking a pass on his own rebound after he and Ingram had gone through together, Orville Corneville from a scramble while Bleckman. Means, scored two apiece for Campbellford, Ellis and Clarke scoring one each.

Referee—Jack Latchford in centre and Ab Eaves in goal were the best with Eves and Bleckman next best with Eves, Beare and Buskard being the victims of his goal tending.

RANGERS CAN MOVE TO TOP

Providing They Win From Eagles And Maroons Drop Hawks

For the first time since this National Hockey League was very young Lester Patrick's New York Rangers have a chance tonight to take over leadership of the American section.

It will be quite a trick if they do it, however, for they must defeat Detroit in exchange with the league leaders. The Rangers have been knocking them all off lately.

Then they must arrange with the Montreal Maroons to have them beat Chicago Black Hawks in Montreal. If Patrick can swing the deal the would leave the New Yorkers tied in first place. Odds for the latter to be nearly as good as they will have played one game less than the Hawks. It would be a happy climax to the astounding Ranger comeback. But the brothers Pinnigan, Frankie, veteran right winger, and Odie, stellar defenseman, recruited from amateur ranks, will line up on the Rangers' side for the first time when the weakened Eagles take on the Rangers, Boston Bruins' last hope. Lewis will probably have Graham in their line-up too.

Boston could complicate the American division leadership race by trouncing Toronto Leafs in Boston tonight. They held them 4-4 in Toronto last time. Tonight's game is followed with Rangers for second place now but have played a game more.

Herb Cain, who scored the winning goal Sunday night when Maroons beat Detroit 2-1 in overtime and also got a clever tally against Toronto Saturday, will take Dave Trottier's place when Maroons meet Chicago.

Cain will work with Russ Blinco and Earl Robinson on Maroons' first line. Trottier is out of the game for the rest of the season with sciatic fever.

Aajmaa Athletic Weekly Chronicle

The Aajmaa Club during the past week had a big program with a better and larger one to follow next week.

The next euchre will hold euchre on Monday evening and Prize Winners, Mrs. Jones, Mrs. Johnson, while the club is rented to Blue's Club Wednesday and 2-14-15 on Thursday evenings. Friday the members will resume their weekly euchre parties.

HOCKEY—The club has organized hockey teams during the course of the next week or so. The Belleville Hardware Ltd. Hockey Club of Aajmaa are anxious to get a crack at our team. Last Thursday the Aajmaa Club defeated Corbyville 7 to 1. Dean Ford making his first appearance for the Aajmaa's was easily the high light of the game, making several clever rushes while Pred Ingram was always prominent. Ellis got two of the Petes' goals.

FRANKFORD H.S. BEATEN BY TWEED

Run up Score of 11-0 in Scheduled Game

Tweed—Tweed Army and Navy Veterans had a social evening on Friday night in their hall. It is unfortunate that the attendance was large as the game was not up to the public. The evening was spent in cards. Lunch was served at the conclusion.

Ray Quinn's youngsters won their second consecutive shut-out victory by a score of 2-0 on Friday evening when they defeated Bill Wood's Hope Swayne's boys in a juvenile fixture. Don Courneyea and Vincent Sills turned in the honors for the winners.

Cecil Olsen, A Swede, who has been cutting wood on Tom Casidy's ranch in Hungerford, had the misfortune to have his toe some time ago. It is feared that it may have developed into a case of gangrene has developed.

Dr. M. J. Salisbury of Plainfield has been visiting her daughter, Mrs. S. H. Connor for a few days.

Dr. M. J. Dalton went to Newmarket on Saturday, having been called on account of the serious illness of his father, Prof. J. N. Dales, who suffered a paralytic stroke on Saturday last.

Tweed High School defeated Frankford High School in a schedule game on Friday evening by a score of 11 to 0. Tweed has one of the best class for their less experienced opponents. To the credit of Frankford boys, they never gave up trying and earned the plaudits of the small crowd for their gameness. However, their diminutive centre, was easily the visitors' best. Johnston is good, although his guard was penetrated eleven times, stopped the proverbial bullet. Tadoe and Courtigan were also good.

For Tweed, Tip Tummon was the star performer with four goals to his credit. This boy who intelligently is one of the stalwarts on the junior team appears to be the find of the season. Loftus and Bracey scored two each and Arber, J. Tummon and J. Courneyea secured one goal apiece. The first period Tweed placed five forwards on the ice, remaining there two only for defence on Arber and heal, who incidentally divide three hundred and eighty minutes almost equally between them. Mouck in goal played perfect hockey to record the shut-out.

In the final period referee "Mickey" Ryan called the penalty box well decorated with local players and Frankford players for the rest. After the game the visitors were entertained at the High School.

SAILING INTO THE MOON
CHAPTER, SEVENTY-EIGHT

Nick was here again. Nick was holding her in his arms — holding her as though he would never let her go.

"How could I have been so blind! And I thought I knew what I was doing," Judy was saying.

"I thought so, too, and, it was an awful break, Judy! I knew you were all upset from your letters—and from the fact that you quit writing. Mary had me that you were like some cute wilting lily who'd sleep—that I must be careful how I walked you. But I couldn't walk you. That was the trouble! I believed you when you said you wouldn't go back with me."

Judy did not answer, only clung closer to him, feeling the comforting roughness of his lapel under her cheek.

"I told Mary it was no use. That you were through. I was pretty cut up over it and she knew it. I suppose she decided that her advice about walking you gently was the best. And she decided to shock you awake."

"She did!" Judy tried to laugh. Buried her face for a moment against his shoulder. "It made me realize what you meant, Darling. It was as though I woke up! I suppose my mind sort of looked—and numbed lockjaw. Oh, dearest—if it had been true——!"

Judith Carter was being married. She stood with Nick before the altar of a small, old-fashioned church near the apartment house.

A simple wedding . . . Only Mary and her stout blonde Tom, attending them. Only Martha, the Faithful, to watch. Out of the question that Martha should be left out. Earlier that morning she had confided to Judy. "It's for all the world as if Madame could know and see you, Miss Judy. Land's sakes, wouldn't she be pleased if she could be here watchin' you and Mr. Nick gettin' married!" Something like sad sheepishness would have been missing, thought Judy, if the old servant had not been present at the ceremony.

And Judy Carter was being married.

She wore a tweed sport suit of bronze and tan. A brown and orange silk scarf. A small brown felt hat pulled down over her brown hair. A plain travelling ensemble for she and Nick were sailing for China on the afternoon steamer. It was not even a new suit—she had bought it earlier in the spring, never dreaming that she was buying her wedding suit.

Judy found herself remembering a girl in a white crepe wedding dress, a glamorous, romantic girl who had stood under a white tissue paper bell and promised to love and honor a man about whom she knew nothing at all save that he was handsome and fascinating and could stir the young untried heart of her.

A strange pathway in which she had set her feet on that other wedding day long ago! A path which led to pain and shame, to ecstasy and tears and death. A path which led—in the end—to Nick and happiness.

Presently, before, we are gathered here today—" The deep voice of the minister waking soft rumbling echoes in the carven arches of the vaulted roof.

Married . . . she was being married to Nick. No doubt about this marriage! No lurking fear or sense of mystery. This was Nick, good kind dependable Nick, who would always see her through difficulties . . . Nick—true as life itself.

"I, Judith, take thee, Nicholas—"

Her voice firm and warm, her eyes sweet and unafraid meeting Nick's steady gaze. Her heart leaped in answer to that understanding look. Oh, she and Nick were one already! This ceremony was only a ceremony. Their hearts were already wedded. There was a little like a song in her voice as she spoke the words; a note which flashed Mary Lockerbee's eyes to her husband's face with a glad "I told you so!" expression.

It was over! Nick was kissing her warmly, tenderly—and for a brief moment Judy's mind brushed the thought of that other ceremony and she gave a savage defiant kiss.

An almost heady sense of lightness and freedom had seized her when she and Nick sat down to a wedding luncheon with the Lockerbees. She looked radiant, vivid as Mary had never seen her. It was as though some sparkling wine ran through her veins, glowing through her cheeks, trilling through her laugh.

"Oh, darling child, it's glorious to see you like this!" Mary confided in time before ma took both our plates away and chained them to Nick's anything funny to laugh about.

"It's glorious to be like this!" Judy said happily. "I feel as though I'd moved out of the shadow into the sunshine, that I've brought a weight back to the real me. Nick always gave me the feeling of freedom and escape. And now that I have him I share in it. Mary, it's true. Nick and I really are each other at last! It's perfect. Everything's perfect, isn't Martha!" she finished a trifle incoherently.

Mary understood. Martha, the Faithful, was going into Mary Lockerbee's kitchen. Everything was as it should be.

The white and gold China steamer. Deep rugs. Sandy Stanley . . . Judy's acquaintances and visitors crowding up the steep companion. Cheering, good-byes and milling decks. The excited feel of the far ends of the world. Sadness at Mary's being celebrated.

Walking up the gangplank ahead of Nick, following a deck-steward carrying their grips. The cabin—already overflowing with the roses for which Mary had secretly telephoned. Judy's new steamer trunk and Nick's plain grips.

Judy found herself remembering a heart-broken girl who had tried to run away on this same steamer, and a terrified and pleading girl-woman . . . . Oh, Madame had been right! And in her heart, Judy sent up a little prayer to the memory of the old autocrat. "I'll be good to your boy, Madame—Oh, I promise you I'll be good and make him happy!"

The warning clang for all visitors ashore! That sound which had once stricken Judy's soul with the chill of disaster. As though he too, had been touched by the memory, Nick's eyes flashed to hers and they exchanged a long warm look before Judy was grasped and kissed good-bye by Mary.

Standing at the rail beside Nick, waving goodbye to Mary and Tom down there on the wharf. Seeing the water widen in a streak of bright green between the pier and the white side of the steamer.

Swinging out into mid-channel. Flags, flying, decks playing . . . The crowd on the dock a streaked blur now. Goal Island — Alcatraz like a dark fortress. Angel Island — Yellow Angel Island—and the Golden Gate ahead—truly a golden gate now, for the sun was setting in the centre of the opening, making a path of gold for the proud white steamer.

But the sweetest time of all came several hours later. The steamer was riding the high sea now. Land had dropped behind them and on the horizon was the great golden disc of the rising moon.

Out of the deck Judy and Nick leaned on the rail and watched it rising out of the dark water. And as she spoke of that long ago night in the Lockwood garden, Nick held her to come flying out of the moon to her.

"The night I first really knew I loved you, darling," she said softly, her cheek pressed against the shoulder of Nick's coat. . . . her eyes fastened on the moon. "Now we're on the moon together—forever! Now isn't that a nice thought, my beloved?"

"A nice thought, with an exceptionally nice word, my wife!"

"What's the word—forever?"

Though her eyes were still fastened on the floating golden bubble she could feel Nick's grin in the dark, feel what was on his face. "No. Together!" said Nick.

THE END

Little Benny's Note Book

We had roast beef for supper, having old fashion thick gravy with it, and I was watching one of the loose gravy with pieces of bread on it fall saying. This is awful gravy but it would taist even sweller if people was aloud to eat it up with their fingers instead of their forks.

Why would it for goodness sakes pray me said, and I said, Because it would seem more like you was nearer to it.

Then I suppose the next step would be to get right down and lick it up like an uncultured wild animal, ma said.

Not nessarily like such a fearse ideer but ma not saying so, and pop said, You see, Benny, its like this, self discipline is one of the earmarks, hallmarks and trade marks of higher civilization, do you understand what self discipline means?

Yes sir, not doing what you feel like, I said, and pop said, Quite, and I can simpathize with the itching in your fingers when you find yourself face to face with a bowl of lushious gravy and a peice of bread. What your sole instinctive nature cries out for you to do, is this, isn't it? he said.

And as I took a peice of bread and swobbed it around in his own gravey and ate it, and I said, Yes sir, this. And I quick swobbed a peice in my gravey and ate it as I saying, Say, whats going on here?

And yet in the advanced state of civilization with society has reached, it is not the thing to do, at least on this side of the Atlantic Ocean, pop said, In France, I understand sadlike as well as children capture their pleasure in a manner wich seems primitive to us. For instance, if I was a French father instructing his small son in gravey imbibing, I would counsel yout to do it in this manner, which according to our standards you must never do, he said.

And he quick swobbed another peice of bread in it, and said, And if I was your French child I could do it this way too.

And I hurry up did it again just

FOUNDER'S DAY MARKED BY CLUB

Organizer of Home And School Clubs Native Of Prince Edward

Picton, Feb. 13—Mr. S. Edgar Mastin of Bloomfield was guest speaker at the Home and School Club meeting in the Lapton Memorial Auditorium yesterday afternoon Feb. 7th. This meeting of the club was of special significance as "Founders' Day" was being celebrated. Mrs. A. C. Courtice, of Toronto, founder of the movement, was born on a farm near Bloomfield and attended public school with Mr. Mastin, who was able to give much detail the family history of this woman, whose work will live on.

Edith Brown Courtice was born on the farm near Bloomfield now occupied by Mr. Clayton Purtelle. She was a daughter of Steven E. and Eliza Brown. Her father was a son of Peregrine Brown, a United Empire Loyalist. Her parents were Quakers, splendid God-fearing, hospitable people, whose home was always open to their friends. As a child, Mrs. Courtice was rugged, and strong, and a leader on the playground. She was especially fond of music, and although Quakers, her parents bought her first organ and then a piano when these instruments were rare in country homes. When a young girl her parents moved to a farm near Pickering. Here Mrs. Courtice attended Whitby high school and matriculated at Pickering College. She continued her study in music, and spent one year at Whitby Ladies' College. Leaving school she taught classes in music in Pickering, and played the organ in the village church. Going to Toronto, she became soloist in one of the large city churches, where she met and married her husband, the minister of the church. After his early death, Mrs. Courtice turned to writing, and became a member of a Toronto school board in 1897, and held office for 4 years. She began the Home and School Movement in Canada in 1901. She was President for 10 years of the Ontario Home and School Association, and in 1920 secured the co-operation of the Ontario Government, and a grant of $2,000.00. Now we have in Ontario 350 clubs with a membership of 35,000. Mr. Mastin stressed the wonderful Christian life in the childhood home of Mrs. Courtice, as her reverence for God, gained in childhood, depended her life career. Her two brothers Wm. G. Brown and Fred Brown, reared in the atmosphere of this same home, became the men who held positions of trust in their country. Mrs. Courtice's own two children grew up to be strong, and took honourable places in the world. She believed always in the power of prayer and faith in God. A very large and appreciative audience enjoyed this splendid address.

The regular meeting of the Catholic Women's League was held on Wednesday evening, at the home of Mrs. Eamon McGillan. Miss Donan gave the report of the study club for the past year. Miss Bradley, President, read from the study book. Master Karl and Carman McLellan gave a pleasing duet. The hostess served delicious refreshments at the close of the meeting.

Mrs. M. R. Lawson of Toronto, still temporarily living over the week of Miss Joan Clarke, court stenographer. Miss Clarke has accepted a position as stenographer with a Toronto law firm. Mrs. Lawson is the guest of her parents Mr. and Mrs. P. Dever, Bridge Street.

Mrs. C. O. Spencer who recently suffered a severe stroke, is greatly improved.

Picton relatives received word of the death in Rochester early Friday morning of Mrs. Frank Pierce (nee Mary Dever), a sudden call. Adolphustown, and later of Picton. Mrs. Pierce was in her eighty-second year of age, and had made her home with her daughter, Mrs. Geo. Avery of Rochester, since the death of her husband seven years ago. The body is being brought to Picton for burial, and is expected to arrive on Saturday evening.

Numa had not felt like fighting, but the sight of Sheeta dared to dispute his rights kindled the ferocious brute to sudden fire. The Tarmangani was HIS. Had not the Great White Ape mastered and subdued and fed him?

Numa recalled the fear he had felt for this new helpless man-thing and the cruel spear; but in savage brains fear is more likely to breed respect than hatred. Jealousy and greed also may have prompted him, but in the little brain—

—beneath the massive head there was a sense of loyalty and it sent the lion quickly forward, growling, toward the spitting Sheeta. His mane rose, his eyes glared with rage as, with a frightful roar, he charged this presuming rival.

Numa came so suddenly and from so short a distance that Sheeta had no chance to turn and flee the rush. So he met it with raking talons and snapping jaws; but the odds were all against him, and the great cat's battle was soon over.

INDUSTRIAL STOCKS

Toronto, Feb. 12.—The holiday in the United States today deprived the Toronto industrial share market of its main buyer. Brokers and traders were inclined to remain on the side lines. Although there were changes recorded all the price lists remained mainly firm and there were a few strong spots.

Consolidated Bakeries registered a gain of about a half point and Bell Telephone, the Quebec Power issues and the golds were also firm. Steels also were steady to firm. Sterling had normal turn-over. Other interesting trades recorded no moves of consequence. Nickey lost one-quarter and Ford "A" Canadian also took a fractional decline. Unchanged quotations, Steel and Bank issues were mainly slow and unchanged.

IND GOLD STOCK VAS MANIPULATED

vestigation Did Not Re- veal Criminal Act By Broker

TORONTO, Feb. 12.—(CP)—Finding J. H. Hirshorn had manipulated stock of the Gunnar Gold mine with intent to cause the price to rise to $1.43 and within two hours drop to 54 cents, J. R. Lafferty, Ontario Securities Commissioner, in his report on investigations to-day said laxity in the Canadian law permitted this manipulation. He asks the Federal Government take steps to block the loophole.

The commissioner said after "very careful investigation, I have come to the conclusion that Hirshorn, who is a stock dealer with offices in Toronto and New York) has not committed a criminal act."

Mr. Godfrey stated Hirshorn with 58,000 shares of Gunnar Gold at his disposal bought and sold them in such a way as to create "an artificial market, or a price mirage".

The commissioner gave a clean bill to Gunnar mine, president of company, who, he said, came in for adverse comment at the time of the "debacle", and who for that reason asked Mr. Godfrey to undertake the investigation. Labine and his brother Charles hold 742,000 shares of the stock which they have held through all the fluctuations".

The Commissioner commented on "the peculiar angle of the law in Canada" under which it is criminal for a person to manipulate a stock while "a lone wolf" may perform the manipulation and escape prosecution because he has not been guilty of conspiring with anyone. Mr. Godfrey stated in his report the public lost $500,000 in a few hours on October 31.

'No Mercy' Plea Urged By Wilentz, Suggesting Cranks Financed Defence

"Every avenue of evidence," he asserted, "leads to the same door—Bruno Richard Hauptmann."

Wilentz said he felt his responsibility and had "lost more weight in this case than the defendant."

The jury, he went on, was "serving this country, serving this state and serving the country."

"We ask you to do your duty," he said.

"You can't compromise with murder or murderers."

"We ask for conviction of murder in the first degree."

Wilentz Is Dramatic

Reilly's assertion, he said, that the jury must determine Hauptmann did the kidnapping alone was not the law.

The law, Wilentz went on, would support Hauptmann's guilt, if there were many persons involved.

"Let the defence bring in the dead body of Charles Lindbergh and lay it beside him, let them bring in the grave of Anne Finch, and still you would be guilty," he asserted, his voice rising.

He made a gesture toward the defence table and leaned forward confidentially to the jurors in the forum.

"There is nobody at that table who doesn't believe he is guilty and don't care what they say," he said.

The Attorney General spoke slowly and dramatically, pausing for emphasis to let the facts implant double in the minds of "one only one juror" so mercy could be recommended.

Doubt Defence Hope

"He wants to raise a question, which one of you cannot answer and thereby create doubt," he said.

He glanced toward the pale Hauptmann, then back toward the jurors.

"There he sits, the man who can answer all the questions."

Wilentz shook his voice.

"He's cold. Yes, he's cold. But he's blustered and bluffed and defied as the defence charged the police did, and he has been found blind in East Amwell (Hopewell) Township.

"As to the fellow who went into that room and took that child—That's all you have to decide. Witnesses shouted, thumping the table before the jury box.

Unbelievable Crime

"The conception of such a crime, he said, was unbelievable but it had occurred.

"It was enormous snake would pass that child by, an American gangster wouldn't take that child," he declared.

"It had to be a fellow who had low water in his veins, it had to be a fellow, who thought he was bigger than the police, a fellow, a fellow who was secretive."

"It had to be a fellow who liked to see his name spread across newspaper headlines."

Wilentz paused melodious, starring at Wilentz during the caustic attack.

"It had to be the type of man, who in Germany when he burglarized one of the homes of one of the leading citizens of his town," he said.

Hauptmann's Mentality

"There is something in the mental makeup of this man," he said, "he did burglarize he had to pick on someone who was rerated prominent.

"It would have to be a man who would respect or disgrace his nation."

It would have to be the type of man who would hold up women wheeling baby carriages in Germany.

He paused momentarily and then shouted:

"The police of New York and Bronx-Westchester, the Federal and State of Canada 45 1-2S Superior 22B Standards 18 1-2S Walker's 30S Walkerville Pfd. 17 1-4S Walkerville Brewery 3 3-4S

New York market closed, Lincoln's birthday.

"Every time a witness was called," he said, "the defence would object. Every time a witness was called he was cross-examined and not a single implication of conspiracy had been disclosed.

"The defence asks where is the loot (on which the ransom money was given to the collector)" Wilentz went on.

"Ask Hauptmann."

"If there is anything else counsel would like to know I refer them to the gentleman sitting over there, Hauptmann," he remarked.

Hauptmann's 'Limp'

Next he went into the testimony of Hauptmann's neighbor, Mrs. Achenbach who told how Hauptmann walked with a limp after the kidnapping.

Wilentz commented on the defence incredulousness that a man with an injured ankle could perform the foot cemetery wall during the ransom negotiations.

"But that," he reminded them, "was 10 or 11 days later. And Hauptmann wasn't so badly hurt that he couldn't walk."

He called their attention to the defence fence explaining episode. "It would take an athletic gentleman like Mr. Hauptmann to do that," he sarcastic like Isador Fisch."

The defence had inquired, he went on, why Hauptmann didn't tear the ransom collector "limb from limb."

"Col. Lindbergh wanted his baby back." Wilentz explained.

"Hauptmann let the kidnapper apprehended by the police. I'm sorry he didn't proceed as the defence wanted us to."

The defence had remanded why Governor Hoffman of New York was not guarded when the ransom letters began to arrive, Wilentz said.

Trend of Evidence

Wilentz said the idea was conceived, held on to and executed by Hauptmann, "Money from Lindbergh's request.

"Every investment agent," he argued, "every police officer, every scintilla of evidence pointed to Hauptmann."

"We might like to bring Mr. Hauptmann to the electric chair for anything he did. That does not absolve him from the crime, he asserted, but "Mrs. Achenbach is not guilty of the crime, he asserted, but "Mrs. Achenbach is not guilty of anything in this case, except defence counsel and that means nothing," he said.

Why Fisch's Relatives Came

Why Fisch's defence criticism he spent State funds to bring out to this country Fisch's relatives from Germany, Wilentz said in his last illness. Wilentz said it was not necessary to bring them to this country but he would have them ready to meet any defence witness.

"If I did not bring over that Fisch family to cross-examine one of those idiots would call me on the witness stand and say Isador Fisch knew the Lindbergh kidnapping on his death bed" he said.

Speaking in confidential tone, sitting on the edge of the table, Wilentz said:

"So I brought the nurse at no time, defendant, has any charge of a deathbed confession."

Low Cost Mentioned

Miss Hunton was put on the stand, he said, just to show that Fisch's family was there.

Betty Gow, he said, swinging the discussion to the baby's nurse, had been "cross-examined" by State's expense from Scotland—"a $12 a week job."

After her arrival in this country, he went on, all talk of her guilt ceased.

"The defendant, he pointed out, had been convicted but not resulted removal to New Jersey for trial.

"Compare that with Betty Gow," he went on, "who was arrested in Mrs. Morrow had not been 'entirely satisfied' by Reilly, Wilentz went on.

"He didn't call them liars," Wilentz said, "but he said they might be mistaken."

Swinging back to Violet Sharpe, Wilentz said not only Mrs. Morrow but four other witnesses spoke of Violet Sharpe. Violet Sharpe on the kidnap night when defence witnesses said she was in New York.

Why the defence called Lunsler

"But they were wrong, too. But they weren't convicted, no idiots no lunatics," said he sarcastically.

He spoke scathingly of another defence witness, Lindbergh's butler Lunsler.

"Every woman who came here to this trial has been dragged with mud," he said, "every one except Lunsler.

"Crush it?" he asked. "I weigh 190 pounds."

He stood on the case as he talked. "Now there has been a lot of talk about the bungling of the state police. They're human. They're ordinary beings," he said.

"Supposing there was bungling if there was. It was on before Hauptmann's arrest. This bungling doesn't affect him."

He flailed his arms and shouted.

"The whole world Not Crushed"

"The whole world hasn't turned crooked because of Hauptmann.

"What World Not Crushed"

"The defence says Dr. Condon was always alone," the prosecutor went on, turning to the implications of Reilly's summation that the ransom intermediary was involved in the crime.

The Hauptmanns prepared two cemeteries on opposite sides of the home to deal alone with Dr. Condon, he said.

"That's why Dr. Condon was alone," he declared.

Hauptmann wore no mask in these tryats, confident the worst that could happen, Wilentz asserted, was arrest for taking the money from Dr. Condon.

PROF. ROGERS LIBERAL NOMINEE

Will Contest Kingston-Portsmouth Riding in Election

Kingston, Feb. 12.—The Kingston and District Liberal Association Monday chose Norman Rogers, Professor of Political Economy at Queen's University, as its candidate to contest the constituency. Provincial Liberals of Kingston and Portsmouth has been represented since 1911 by a Conservative.

Six persons were nominated in addition to Professor Rogers, but not one of them—James Halliday, Mayor of Kingston, Colonel Gerry Bawden, Alderman George Boyce, E. Wray Vanluven and Leman A. Woolcott—received the convention's approval. Colonel Bawden retired.

Mr. McNeill, President of the Association, presided over the meeting which was attended by Liberals from all parts of the riding and which includes the islands adjacent to Kingston.

Following his nomination, Professor Rogers declared Kingston was not an Ontario city, but a maritime stronghold, and that it could be won by the Liberals in the coming contest. J. J. Duffus of Peterboro', President of the Ontario Federation of Liberal Associations, predicted a Liberal victory this year.

MISS M. WEBSTER ON FULL SERVICE

Excellent V. O. N. Report is Given by Nurse Soutar

At the first meeting of the year, held by the local branch of the Victorian Order of Nurses, held in the Y.M.C.A. last evening, it was unanimously decided by members present to have full time district services of Miss Mary Webster, local nurse. A hearty increase in the services of the two nurses decided this move.

In an excellent report presented by Miss Soutar, nurse of the local order, it was revealed that a total of 449 visits had been engaged in by nurses during the month of January. Of this total, the majority were reported free visits.

Cases attended through doubtless of milk to children of needy families as well as donations from the recent concert put on by school children of the public schools and St. Michael's Academy in the city will be gratefully acknowledged by officials of the order. A list of donors will be printed when fully compiled.

Due to an increased amount of illness in many homes in the city during the past month, extra work upon the service of the nurses was necessary. It was stated in the report submitted.

The meeting was presided over by President, Mrs. Thos. Holland, assisted by her newly elected Board of Directors.

To further assist the local order of nurses in the splendid work of the city, it was agreed that a tea for the public would be held at the Y.M.C.A. on February 22nd.

HAROLD W. VERMILYEA IS PLACED ON TRIAL

Son Accused of Murder Enters 'Not Guilty' Plea; Jury is Soon Selected

Nine Farmers, Two Laborers, And One Merchant Are Sworn

DRAWINGS EXHIBITED

Witness Tells of Seeing Two Persons Walk Over Lawn

What promises to be the most interesting trial that has taken place in Belleville in its history, opened this morning with the bringing in of a True Bill by the Grand Jury on the charge of murder preferred against Harold W. Vermilyea.

Long before the court was to open all the available seats were filled by spectators and by the men who had been called as petit jurors, sprinkled here and there among the audience were several women.

Justice Jeffrey instructed the Grand Jury to inspect the public buildings especially the House of Refuge, and then dismissed them.

The Jury Empanelled

The jury was then quickly empanelled. There were eleven challenges by the defence and three by the crown. The following were asked to step aside. The jury is composed of Frank Fluhle, farmer, Sidney; Morley Gall, farmer, Desoronto; Henry Hessman, farmer, Sidney; Baden Hinchcliffe, farmer, Sidney; Allan Jones, farmer, Thurlow; Wellington Jordan, farmer, Tyendinaga; John A. McNiven, merchant, Belleville; Percy Mills, laborer, Marmora; Arthur Cough, farmer, Rawdon; Robert R. Roy, farmer, Rawdon and Andrew I. Downey, farmer, Sidney.

Crown Outlines Case

George Urquhart, Special Crown Prosecutor opened the case giving, the jury the outline of the charge and explaining that the evidence would be direct and circumstantial and that the number of witnesses of witnesses the trial will be lengthy. He told of witnesses living in this district before leaving for Ontario, who resided for some some twenty-three years returning some eleven years ago to help wind up the estate of his late father, Late Nathaniel Vermilyea, Reeve of Thurlow Township for forty-eight years. Mr. Urquhart told of the death of Mrs. Aurelia Vermilyea, caused it is believed by a hatchet.

Letter Mentioned

Turning to money matters, Counsel stated that the accused man in the spring spring wrote his mother stating she was getting old and that she should take it easy, that he and divide it equally among the three brothers and the sister. Letters will be produced and the subject was discussed, he said.

Photographs Exhibited

After a short recess, the Crown opened its case with Dr. Ernest Robert Clarke, photographer of this city, who filed a number of photographs produced, which were taken by him at and near the home of the late Nathaniel Vermilyea. All of these photographs were placed in the jury box. Many of them were of the home of Mrs. (Dr.) J. A. Parke and Dr. J. A. Faulkner, Minister of Health for Ontario, the residence in the photos, the distance between the two being of a short distance. Question of Pole Out of Picture

Col. R. H. Greer asked why three photographs of the pole near the Faulkner home and a light pole was left out of the list. The witness was sure it was not left out with any motive. Laughter was suppressed as a question was asked and His Lordship instructed counsel to keep order in the court. It was again manifest during the trial.

Fred Donovan, land surveyor of Oshawa was called to identify a plan made of part of the City of Belleville, where the residences of Mrs. Parker, Dr. Faulkner, Professor V. P. Hunt and Dr. Clarke are situated. This plan was placed in the jury box. It is to these measurements were given as to the distance between the several residences. The ground floor plan of the Parley residence was put as an exhibit.

Position of Lights

Q. Were lights put in your plan? asked Mr. Greer. A. No, they were not mentioned.

Court Room Slim

Considerable stir was created as the accused was led into the court room by two guards. He was manacled and every precaution had been taken. This is the first appearance of Vermilyea since his incarceration in the County Jail on committal for trial and remarks were freely passed by spectators on his excellent physical condition. He seemed jaunty and talked earnestly with counsel. About him centered most of his remarks to his Counsel Col. R. H. Greer, K.C. of Toronto and Charles A. Payne K.C., of this city. His clothes were immaculately pressed, his linen, and his shoes in perfect order. Verily Vermilyea was known as a "good dresser" when he resided in this district some years ago. He was attired in a natty brown suit with dark shirt and tie.

"Cuffs" Ordered Off

The Judge ordered the accused freed of handcuffs after the Bill was rendered.

Justice Jeffrey instructed the Grand Jury to inspect the public buildings especially the House of Refuge, and then dismissed them.

The jury was then quickly empanelled. There were eleven challenges by the defence and three by the crown. The following were asked to step aside. Premier Tells House Bill Not Intended to Cure Unemployment

Ottawa, Feb. 13.—(CP)—Called by Prime Minister R. B. Bennett and his supporters as a constructive step on the way to permanent economic security for Canadian workers, the government unemployment insurance bill is today well on its way towards second reading in the House of Commons.

The first formal debate on the bill was started off yesterday by Mr. Bennett with an explanation of the government's purpose in the measure. It drew from Rt. Hon. W. L. Mackenzie King doubts as to its constitutional validity and from A. A. Heaps, Labor member for Winnipeg North, a vigorous complaint that it would not touch the problem of unemployment and would not help those now unemployed.

FURTHER CRIBS CONTEMPLATED

Harbor Board Gives Thought of More Extensions at Dock

With an expected surplus of timbers and other materials left following the completion of the third crib now under construction as part of the new dock extension in the local harbor, serious consideration of the construction of a fourth and fifth crib is being given by members of the Belleville Board of Harbor Commissioners, it was stated by Chairman of the Board, Mayor P. Ostrom, today.

If the decision to construct the two cribs is reached, the new ones to be placed will materially lengthen the proposed dock site and it will also increase the extra space for coal unloading and storage. Working steadily during the past several weeks, employees engaged on the construction of the new dock have made excellent headway and will place the third crib within the next several days.

Today a number of trucks that had been engaged in the steady haulage of rock ballast for filling the interior of the cribs already placed, were given three years off a lay-off of several days to allow the city workers to catch up with the contracts. The material is being hauled from the Thurlow quarries by the city.

Clergyman Hails Hauptmann Trial

Flemington, N.J., Feb.13—Attorney-General David T. Wilentz late Tuesday completed his summation for the state, clearing the way for Justice Thomas W. Trenchard's charge to the jury in the murder trial of Bruno R. Hauptmann.

Flemington, N.J., Feb. 13—A cry of a clergyman, "a man convicted of that murder to me in my church," yesterday, was heard in the court room where Bruno Richard Hauptmann is on trial as the State was making its final pleas for a seat in the electric chair.

The man stood on a window ledge in the court to shout his interruption. He was dragged down by a deputy and a band was clapped over his mouth. The court was in confusion.

Dirigible Macon Sinks In Ocean as Gas Cells Explode, Two Missing

Crew Able to Don Jackets And Take to Boats Before Crash

WILEY TELLS STORY

Forewarned Sufficiently to Land Stern First on Water

(By Leonard Millman, Copyright 1935 By The Associated Press)

San Francisco, Feb. 13 (AP)—The dirigible Macon, destroyed by a sudden mysterious disaster, lay at the bottom of the Pacific ocean today, while 81 survivors were being brought into San Francisco by cruisers of the United States fleet. Only two members of the crew were missing.

The tragic fate of every Anzac-man made plain dirigible the navy possessed overtook the queen of the skies as she neared her Sunnyvale base at sunset last night. One or two of her 12 gas cells suddenly burst into flame through equally air and fog 110 miles south of San Francisco.

The delicately balanced craft seared abruptly and the immediate effects of Lieut. Commander Herbert V. Wiley, skipper of the Macon and survivor of the disaster, were ominous as the ship proved futile.

Under his orders the unmanageable dirigible landed, stern first on the water 10 miles off point Sur. She sank almost immediately but the crew had taken to rubber lifeboats and all but two men were picked up by the cruisers Richmond, Concord and Cincinnati.

FARMER, AGED 73, TELLS OF WOES

Bereaved John Easton Hitch-Hikes 80 Miles to Tell His Tale

Easton, after he had finished his visit to Ottawa where he was granted a hearing by Premier Hepburn, said:

"I have been poor for 30 years on the farm," he said. "The original cost was $8,000 and I had reduced my mortgage three years ago to $1,800 and all the time had paid seven percent interest. Then came a period when I could get no market for my grain. My rye rotted on the farm. Today my mortgage totals $2,150. I am afraid my life-long friends going to lose it. I am living my property in my old age. My boy gets a soldier grant of $1.25 a day, while I paid a man $4 a day to take his place."

Macon's Crash Starts Warfare Over Dirigibles

Two Schools Renew Afresh Strife Over Types of Aircraft

Washington, Feb. 13 (AP) — President Roosevelt gave the United States navy a good word today for its rescue work in the collapse of the dirigible Macon and said no lesson can be learned of consequence at this time to replace the ship.

Washington, Feb. 13 (AP)—The United States navy counts about $40,000,000 since the war on lighter than air craft and equipment.

All the ships except the Los Angeles have crashed.

Following is the amount spent by the navy on dirigibles between 1918 and 1933:

ZR-3, bought in England, crashed during test flight there August, 1921; loss to United States, $1,000,000.

SHENANDOAH, crashed, 1925, $2,200,000.

AKRON, crashed April, 1933, $5,-850,000.

MACON, crashed February 12, 1935, $2,000,000.

In addition, the navy has spent $9,000,000 on the station at Lakehurst and $4,000,000 on the Sunnyvale, Cal., station.

Up to 1933 it had spent $8,000,000 on maintenance and replacements, $3,000,000 on helium, $800,000 on experimental dirigibles.

Controversy Starts.

Washington, Feb. 13 (AP)—The controversy over fighting airships broke open with new vehemence today as the United States Government prepared to launch at least one more dirigible before the crash of the Dirigible Macon off California.

Meanwhile, President Roosevelt and congressional leaders who observed the Macon's rescue operations as the startling news of the giant ship's accident was flashed to them early the later reports telling of the rescue of most of the crew.

A prediction the crash, coming after the disaster to the Macon's sister ship the Akron in a thunderclap knell of lighter-than-air craft as a practicable type of aerial transport, Chairman Carl Vinson (D-Gas) of the House naval committee.

"We surely will investigate as soon as enough facts are available on which to base intelligent action," he said.

Search Goes On.

In the faint hope of finding them alive, a cruiser division and the cruiser Richmond were directed to continue searching in the waters off Point Sur until noon. If they are not found by then the hunt will be abandoned.

Two injured men will be taken off the rescue cruisers by ambulances, although their hurts are not serious. The message requesting ambulances for the emergency stated that they were identify the pair but previously reported Commander Wiley Jackson was reported internally injured.

Sunk in 250 fathoms the wrecked dirigible was a total loss. The navy contemplated no salvage plans.

London, Feb. 13 (CP)—Interviewed today in connection with the Macon disaster, Lieut.-Col. J. F. C. Moore - Brabazon, pioneer aviator, president of the Royal Aeronautical Society and a member of the board of inquiry into the R-101 disaster, said he still had every faith in big lighter-than-air craft.

DEATH OF DAUGHTER

Evidence at Trial Indicated Death Result of Ill-Treatment

Valleyfield, Que., Feb. 13—(CP)—Edouard Groleau, who with his wife was found guilty by a court of King's Bench jury of manslaughter by causing the death of their six-year-old daughter, Laura Groleau, in ill-treatment, was today sentenced by Mr. Justice Joseph Archambeault to 25 years in penitentiary. Judge Trenchard Defines Verdicts Jury May Find; Case to Jury at 11.15 a.m.

Circumstantial Evidence is Explained in Brief Address of Judge

SPECTATORS WARNED

Judge Refers to Alibi Witnesses and State's Contention

By WILLIAM A. KINNEY

Flemington, N.J., Feb. 13. — The jury trying Bruno Richard Hauptmann for the kidnaping and murder of Baby Charles A. Lindbergh, Jr., began its deliberations before noon today after being instructed it could return three possible verdicts—murder in the first degree, the same with recommendation for life imprisonment, or acquittal.

Before exceptions to the court's charge were heard after the jury retired at 11:23 a.m.

Defence Objections.

The defence objected especially to what it said was the court's inference the Lindbergh nursery had been entered by means of a ladder, that the baby had been carried down a ladder, that the baby's sleeping suit had been ripped off where a thumb guard was found in Hunterdon county, and that finally the murder would be if a burglary was shown.

Objection also was taken to the court's remarks about the manner of the baby's death, to the court's failure to mention any defence witnesses aside from the defendant, and to a comparison made between the defence and state alibi witnesses.

Arguments For Exceptions.

Arguments for the exceptions took 30 minutes of the court's time after the jury retired. The defence objected to the failure of the court to deliver 12 other instructions it had suggested. Adjournment was taken at 12:09 p.m.

Flemington, N.J., Feb. 13. — The trial opening Richard Bruno Hauptmann for murder was instructed today by Justice Thomas W. Trenchard to find only seven points from the evidence that Baby Charles A. Lindbergh, Jr., was stolen by someone who entered the nursery of the Lindbergh home through the window by means of a ladder.

The defence had contended the baby was carried down the stairs of the home by someone who "knew his aside" and that the ladder was a blind.

The court also charged the jury that if convinced the baby's sleeping suit was stripped from it at the point at which the nurse, Betty Gow, said she found the garments, this evidence was important to the state's case because the baby's body was found in Mercer county, 60 miles away, covered with murder in Hunterdon county.

Identification of Value.

"It is argued," Judge Trenchard said, "that Colonel Lindbergh could not have identified that voice and that if he could not, then no one would have talked with Condon. Well, those questions are for the determination of this jury."

As to the part variously expounded by the defence chief, Edward J. Reilly, the court said:

"It is argued by defendant's counsel that the kidnapping and murder was done by a gang and not by the defendant and that the defendant was the victim of circumstantial evidence. The argument was to the effect that it was done by a gang with the help or connivance of some one or more servants of the Lindbergh or Morrow households.

"Now, do you believe that" in this case there was any help or aid whatsoever to support any such conclusion?

The doors of the courtroom were locked as the charge was given. The Associated Press leased wire operatives, will open a course of cooking lessons in the Y.M.C.A. building, Bridge St., Friday, 10th, 2.30 p.m. Anyone interested in becoming a member will be welcome.

Bell Will Toll Verdict Ready

Flemington, N.J., Feb. 13.—(AP) —The Hauptmann Jury, had lunch, —sandwiches and coffee—brought to it at 1.40 p.m. today. This was generally interpreted as meaning no agreement was immediately in prospect.

Flemington, N.J., Feb. 13— (AP) — At 1 p.m. today the Jury trying the murder case against Bruno Richard Hauptmann had been in deliberating for one hour and 37 minutes, with no word coming from the jury room.

When the verdict comes, the court ruled, only the interested parties, including Mrs. Hauptmann, the Lindbergs and the Press are to be allowed in the courtroom. Mrs. Hauptmann sat at the Defence Counsel table with two friends.

A short time later Mrs. Hauptmann made her way through the crowds to the yellow frame house where she has been staying. She will wait there for the tolling of the Courthouse bell, which will mean a verdict. Hauptmann was taken to his cell to await his fate.

WHAT A PUP!

Kitchener, Ont., Feb. 13—(CP)— A Kitchener married couple thought it would be safe to leave a pet around the house when a friend said he would give them a dog. The young pup arrived—it weighed 133 pounds. It was a mastiff, a dog used in the Arctic for sled work—but the friend was considerate and also sent along 100 pounds of meat.

SOVIET RUSSIA SUBJECT OF TALK

Dr. Richard Brown Tells Kiwanians of Great Experiment

The Russian experiment was explained to members of the Kiwanis Club at their weekly luncheon on Tuesday by Dr. Richard Brown, who spent some months in that country last summer. He was introduced by Rev. Mr. Koffend of visiting and Kiwanian appreciation of the splendid address was voiced by P. C. MacLaurin. There was a large number in attendance and the meeting was full of pep with George Lee as sergeant at arms and Ernie Pinkie as song leader, Leo B. Riggs presiding as chairman in the absence of Lincoln's birthday many songs made famous in his day were lustily sung.

A number of guests were introduced to the club they included Walter Morris, past president of the Toronto Club, who brought a message of goodwill from that body and efficient organization. Frank Domenico, chairman of the dance committee informed the members, that all tickets are now on sale for the big night on Thursday and asked the co-operation of all the members in putting the social evening over. The reception committee was asked to function one hundred percent and see that everyone had a good time. The committee will gather at the Johnstone Hall on Thursday afternoon so as to make arrangements. Ross Silver invited all to an educational film showing at the College Hall Wednesday night at 8 o'clock next. The name of the film is Better Living and Better Sight. It is not an advertising stunt but a film that will show the progress made in Sight Hydro in the last few years.

P. C. MacLaurin gave a three minute talk on the Toronto convention and thought that the old adage "learn to know by doing" could be applied here and that none would become good Kiwanians until they applied what they learned at conventions by like a cafeteria, if you do not serve yourself you will get starvation. He advised the members to co-operate, promote and read the Kiwanis Magazine each month.

Dr. Brown stated, that everyone, who heard him, would come away back with a different idea of what the experiment was doing for that country. Everyone security disturbed but others believed the experiment would work out and were highly enthusiastic. He explained there was a great deal of poverty in Siberia but in Moscow they have many show places, that make one forget the misery seen in the northern country. The speaker explained the anti-God campaign in Soviet Russia stating that although the people try to make themselves believe in the campaign at times is every evidence, that the Supreme Being is still in the midst of things.

"I would say that the people of Soviet Russia are the most distinguished and unhappy people in the world today" said the speaker. He gave instances of how they would believe in this Anti-God campaign showing two fields, one kept by the state and the other allowed to grow its seed without help and invariably the field allowed to find its own way in nature produces the better crop. The speaker also touched on the divorce question in Russia explaining that marriage is the solemnization for two rules and a divorce obtained for the same amount. He stated there were thousands of divorces in a year and birth control was at a high rate.

Mrs. H. Gailey 93 on Feb. 14

On Valentine's Day, Feb. 14th at her home here, one of Belleville's most highly esteemed citizens reaches the 93rd milestone on life's pilgrimage in the person of Hannah Gailey of 398 William St., widow of the late James Gailey, formerly of Napanee, who predeceased her nearly half a century ago, during which time Mrs. Gailey has been a costant resident of Belleville.

For one advanced in years, Mrs. Gailey is still youthful in spirit and lives in the enjoyment of a large measure of general health, together with the exercise of her usual faculties to a remarkable degree.

She reads freely without glasses, is keenly interested in current events, enjoys frequent visits from her intimate friends, and still cherishes a cheery and hopeful outlook on life.

Of a natural serene and optimistic nature founded on an unfaltering faith in a never-failing Providence under the constant and affectionate care and companionship of her eldest daughter, Miss Mary. Mrs. Gailey is passing through an exceptionally peaceful and happy eventide of life. Two other daughters, Mrs. (Rev.) S. C. Moore and Mrs. (Dr.) F. B. Ashton, reside in Toronto and Detroit respectively. Mrs. Gailey's many familiar friends felicitate her and wish for her still more happy returns of the day.

Poetry is Real Narrator Of Any Age, Says Mrs. Hale

Distinguished Canadian Litterateur Speaks to Women's Club

"Poetry is really the narrator par excellence of any given age", said Mrs. John Garvin (Katharine Hale) the distinguished Canadian litterateur who addressed a meeting of the Women's Canadian Club held yesterday last evening with the Help Society of John Street United Church. In her vividly interesting manner, Mrs. Garvin showed that there was the case from earliest days and her dramatic readings from the works of poets typical of their day left a lasting impression on her audience. Mrs. Garvin whose brilliant writing is familiar to most Canadians is no stranger to the local Women's Canadian Club whose members recalled with pleasure her previous addresses to them.

Last evening's meeting was in the nature of a high tea, sponsored by the Help Society in John Street Church Hall. The long tables were gaily decorated in keeping with the season of St. Valentine. Beats bloomed mysteriously from pots of greenery, and quaint dolls made appealing Valentine figures. A delicious menu was served by the members of the Help Society.

Mrs. J. W. Kilmeer, president of the Women's Canadian Club, presented Mrs. Garvin to the audience, referring to her career as a writer, critic and commentator. Mrs. Garvin's address was on "Life as I See It".

Medium of Sharing

Poetry was the medium, Mrs. Garvin said, by which one shared the joys, others of splendors, tragedies, the comedies, of mutual experience. A poet's stock in trade is just experience. But experience is never a thing or an event which happens to us at all, it is simply what we do with the things which happen to us. In poetry this is very much the case.

"People sometimes come to me," said the speaker "and say 'I am so very sensitive. I feel things so keenly that my friends tell me I ought to write poetry. But it is just this quality of sensitiveness which gets in our way in any art. We must know how to eliminate the personal in our experience, and to look for the universal and the essential to make our work worth while".

Mrs. Garvin referred to the erroneous impression that most people don't like poetry.

"This is quite untrue. There is no art which comes quite so close to nearly everybody as poetry. Sometime in our lives we have all felt that some line of poetry arises in our mind. It is the only way of expressing a certain mood, sorrowful or joyful. And there hasn't been one of us here tonight who hasn't written a verse of poetry."

Mrs. Garvin quoted John Masefield's view that the reason poetry has not been in popular esteem is that it had deserted the stage corners hall for several decades, people having forgotten that the poet was essentially a troubadour and that poetry was intended to be read aloud.

Poetry is not good unless it stirs our sense of life. Without that it is simply rhythm and prose, said the speaker.

Outstanding Figure

Developing her thesis that poets is the narrator of generations and of epochs, Mrs. Garvin briefly but fascinatingly touched on outstanding figures of each great age of poetry, Sappho, Dante, Shakespeare, Dryden, Pope, Henry Vaughan, William Blake, Coleridge, Keats, Shelley, Emily Dickenson, Alfred Noyes, Tennyson, Browning, Kipling, Siegfried, Sassoon, Robert Graves to the present day school.

Emily Dickenson she described as a strange exotic flower of the nineteenth century, the only poet of that century who singing of life, who translates life simply, whose works give a thrilling sense of strangeness and beauty which makes for permanence.

To show increasing popularity of poetry, Mrs. Garvin said that two books of poetry have had sales comparable with "best sellers". "John Brown's Body", an annal of the civil war by Stephen Benet, and "Enough Hope" by Dorothy Parker. Illustrations of the work by the major poets were read with extraordinary power of interpretation by the gifted speaker who in conclusion read a number of her own poems to illustrate her views on life.

Mrs. Kilmeer expressed the appreciation of the audience for the evening of rare enjoyment and at the conclusion of the program a number of guests had the opportunity of meeting Mrs. Garvin.

MEDICAL ORDER AFFECTS MANY

300 to 400 Families Are Affected by New Relief Ruling

Between three and four hundred families on the relief lists in this city will be affected by the decision of the Canada Minister of Welfare, the Hon. David A. Croll to establish by March 1, compulsory health insurance in the place of the present system of medical relief for indigents, it was computed at the office of the Central Relief Bureau today.

In the opinion of officers of the local Bureau, the step is an important one in the treatment of relief cases, and will have direct benefit in the matter of relieving as well as outlying areas. A considerable reduction in the costs of medical relief is anticipated following the setting up of the new system.

"Until I have had time to study the whole thing, I haven't anything to say about it, but the move at first sight, appears to be a good one, succinctly commented Mayor Ellis Wallbridge, after first reading of the new proposed system.

Toronto, Feb. 13 (CP)—The present system of medical relief in Ontario will be changed March 1 to compulsory health insurance, the premium for which is to be paid by the province and municipalities.

Following conferences with the Ontario Medical Association and after the plan had received the approval of cabinet, Premier Hepburn announced last night by Hon. David A. Croll, Ontario Minister of Welfare and Municipal Affairs.

Under the arrangement municipalities all organized municipalities will benefit along with war veterans, destitute pensioners and their dependent families. Special arrangements for unorganized Northern Ontario districts are under consideration.

Premium for the insurance will be 75 cents per person per month. The amount will be paid jointly by the province and municipalities.

Payment to be made according to the ration of their present relief contributions, the province paying 60, division is two-thirds from the municipality and one-third from the Municipality.

In return for this premium the insured persons will be entitled to undertakes to provide treatment and care through the family physician, doctor and local druggist. Treatment will be confined to what is proper and necessary, Mr. Croll said, and medicines will be limited to essentials except in outlying districts where the doctor must dispense his own medicine.

Administration of the plan will cost the Province nothing but will be in the hands of small local committees representative of the medical profession and include at least one druggist and relief officer.

The doctor will receive his payment through the local committee and will reimburse the druggist.

FREIGHTER TOUR IS DESCRIBED

Professor Alexander of Queen's Describes Unique Voyage

Travel on the freighter across the Atlantic into the ancient Mediterranean and visits to ports which a freighter visits formed the unique experience described by Prof. H. Alexander of Queen's University on Tuesday evening at the Y.M.C.A. under the auspices of the Chamber of Commerce of Belleville.

Mr. E. Bernstein was in the chair.

Prof. Alexander told of life on a 5000 ton freight boat leaving Hoboken, N.J., with four passengers and a crew of about thirty. He said that once he was even allowed to steer the craft on the Atlantic, confessing however that the task of steering in the ocean was not as difficult as trying to drive a car through the streets of Belleville. He pictured the members of the crew from the captain, a boser and checker-player who did not smoke nor use liquor. He was a character, such as one might find in fiction. The rest of the crew were described in a way which made them live before the audience.

The mechanics or technique of life aboard a freighter was something one could not learn in any other way than on such a trip which brings one into closest touch with engineering as well as with the personnel of the crew.

In night words he painted a picture of Genoa with its cemetery unique in the world, spoke of the warning they were given when leaving ship at Marseilles to be very wary, references were made to the beauty of Naples, to the history of Vesuvius, the clearing of the ancient city of Pompeii, to the strange juxtaposition of the old and new in Rome and to the city of Syracuse in Sicily.

Fascism had wrought great changes in Italy, in cleaning up cities of beggars and in beautification, but the professor said it was not yet certain whether the glory of ancient Imperial Rome could be revived as the Italian is peace-loving and does not appear to take to the military form.

A number of slides illustrating places he had visited were shown by Prof. Alexander. As a result of his travels he felt we ought to be thankful we live in a democracy, which if given a fair chance will overcome. A. E. Hall moved a vote of thanks to Prof. Alexander.

KING QUESTIONS VALIDITY OF THE INSURANCE BILL

Mr. Bennett and the Conservatives, who spoke insisted the measure was an insurance scheme pure and simple and was not to be confused with relief measures. The Prime Minister went so far as to say he had other ideas for dealing with the problem of those now out of work.

"Not for one moment would I suggest that this is a measure of relief or any benefit to those at present unemployed. I have never done so. I have other plans for that."

Relief Plan Coming.

It was the first public indication the Prime Minister has made that he had relief plans under consideration. Some commentators linked it closely with the administration's announcement a committee of 15 would be named to deal with the housing problem brought before the House of Commons by Thomas Church, Conservative member for Toronto East.

It was believed there would be no protracted debate on the insurance bill, at least on second reading. It was expected it would go through the House in short order, probably with the blessing of all parties.

In effect, it would establish a central fund through compulsory contributions from workers, employers and the Dominion Treasury from which weekly withdrawals could be made, when a man lost his job. In addition to the individual payments to the fund, the Dominion Treasury would absorb administrative costs, which the Prime Minister estimated would be 13 1-2 percent, if not more.

One of the benefits to come from the measure Mr. Bennett's opinion was a prevention of the recurrence of distress conditions, which accompanied the depression of the past few years. The insurance scheme would provide workers with a weekly allowance during periods of unemployment and would serve the dual purpose of assisting the individual and keeping up the purchasing power of the community. Had such a scheme been adopted during the years of depression prior to 1930, he suggested, much of the distress of the past few years would have been avoided.

Not All Insurable

All people in Canada will not be insurable under the Act, Mr. Bennett continued. No bill in any country went as far. The list of exempted occupations was divisible roughly into two parts—those who by reason of their employment are assured of certain benefits, such as civil servants and policemen and persons whose employment is more or less casual.

The Prime Minister announced that where logging was carried on for 12 months in the year a change should be made in the Act to bring bush workers under the Act.

The Prime Minister gave this comparison between Canadian and English weekly benefits:

	English Canadian
Men (21-64)	$3.17	$6.00
Women (21-64)	4.85	4.10
Men (18-20)	2.38	4.20
Women (18-20)	2.65	3.60
Adult Dependents	2.70	3.60
Child Dependents	.81	.90

In the past the Dominion had paid out large sums to provincial and municipalities to help them carry out relief measures. Now a fund was being created so workmen lose employment they might draw from it. He believed it would prevent recurrence of the "sad conditions we have experienced in the past few years."

Mackenzie King said he supported the idea of a National Unemployment Insurance scheme. There were many reasons why his government had not launched a scheme, including the depleted National treasury, when it took office in 1931. A series of deficits, falling trade and war expenditures, Insurance schemes cost money, he reminded the House.

Balanced Budget Says King

The Government then assumed the problem of meeting the liabilities of the war at a time of great depression. Its first concern was to balance the budget and the financial condition of the country. An unemployment Insurance scheme was out of the question. Even a financial point of view until the budget was balanced and provision made for war veterans' pensions.

Then during much of the Liberal tenure of office the government had a majority of only one and sometimes no majority. It would have been difficult or impossible to get a scheme through the House.

By restoring prosperity, balancing the budget and by its leadership, the Liberal Government had not only made it possible to undertake Unemployment Insurance legislation but had enabled the Provinces to undertake extensive social legislation.

The Liberal leader asked the Prime Minister, when he expected to fulfill his promise to pay 100 per cent of Old Age Pensions from the Federal Treasury. "Before he (Mr. Bennett) makes any more promises to the electorate on social reforms he had better fulfill the smallest part of those he already has made."

Questions Validity

Mr. King claimed the Prime Minister as late as 1934 gave his opinion, that insurance lay within the jurisdiction of the provinces. Then he asked how Mr. Bennett expected his (Mr. King's) government to launch a scheme in view of his own constitutional beliefs.

Where the government had seriously failed, he contended, was in not getting the question of jurisdiction settled during the years of depression, when it was not possible to start Insurance. Now it was launching its scheme with the question of jurisdiction still in the air.

Mr. King predicted Mr. Bennett would discover a provincial conference would have to be called before a national scheme of Unemployment Insurance could become effective. He would find the provinces would have to be asked to yield up their jurisdiction, and that the British North America Act would have to be amended.

The legislation would not eventually come before the courts. At best it could only be said there was a grave doubt as to whether it had any validity.

"I say to the Prime Minister the people are crying for bread and he is giving them a stone," said Mr. King. "Because when this legislation from which they hope for so much is found to be ultra vires there will be a sting of bitter disappointment."

Interest rates will be studied by the House Banking Committee, Last night a bill proposed by O. G. Coote (U.F.A.—McLeod) received second reading and was referred to the committee. It would limit interest chargeable on instalment sales to per cent. per annum and would limit interest on loans not already limited by Act of Parliament to seven per cent. per annum.

A measure to amend the Railway Act to bring the operations of steamships under the control of the Board of Railway Commissioners was discussed briefly by A. W. Neill (Labor, Comox-Alberni) and stands for second reading when next called.

DIRIGIBLE MACON SINKS IN OCEAN

No Hope of Salvage

The exact fate of the two missing men—radioman Ernest Daley, Tucson, Ariz., and Florentino Equipo, Filipino mess sergeant—like the cause of the bursting 'tells, was not determined. Daley presumably went back in a 125 foot leap from the ship before it landed. Equipo, the last seen aboard. Searching parties were ordered to leave Mare Island naval base this morning to search for the bodies.

The navy held no hope of salvaging the wrecked dirigible after it sank, apparently in 80 fathoms of water. Numerous inquiries into the disaster were expected today, primarily from the navy and Congress.

Congressional leaders intimated the disaster would mean the defeat of further development of lighter-than-air-craft, already under fire.

It was the third, though least tragic disaster to overtake naval airships of the United States fleet. The Akron crashed with a loss of 13 lives April 4, 1933, and the Shenandoah eight years earlier with a loss of 14 of her crew.

The exact cause of the disaster apparently was not known by the naval officers themselves, whose terpid wireless messages told the dramatic story of the end of the Macon and the rescue of most of her crew.

Rear Admiral C. E. Courtney of the cruiser Richmond, which picked up 64 survivors, said the number 9 gas cell has burst. Earlier Commander Wiley had said it was cells 1 and 2.

Wiley's story of the crash follows:

Story of Crash

"While off St. Sur, a course north all engines standard speed 83 knots, altitude, 1,250 feet, all squally, about 8:18 p.m. (P.S.T.) Chief quartermaster in charge.

"I thought elevator control carried away. Ship took a bow up incl ination, rose rapidly.

"Ordered all ballast and fuel slip tanks dumped all of midship. Received prompt word number 2 gas cell under fins was gone and stern was crumbling and finally that number 1 cell was gone.

"Ordered ship's new cruisers off Pt. Sur but could not secure until about 3:30 after landing.

"The ship landed stern first with no way on (no speed ahead) at 3:40. All hands took to rubber boats and saw Ship finally sink. Discipline excellent and all hands had alarm in time to don life jackets."

The light house keeper at Point Sur told of seeing the airship sighted early and turn rapidly and disappear from sight.

Naval craft in the immediate vicinity headed at once for the scene. Admiral Reeves, and staff, Admiral Reeves, commanding the fleet maneuvers, took charge of all air forces to direct the search.

Thirty boats in the area, mostly fishing craft steaming for San Francisco Bay, where the Macon was a familiar sight, turned to help aid.

President Roosevelt, as soon he heard of the disaster, phoned the naval communications headquarters in Washington for first hand information of the Macon's casualties.

It was indicated by the navy department in Washington a naval board of inquiry to attempt a determination of the cause of the Macon's crash will be appointed as soon as direct information was received from Admiral Reeves and Commander Wiley.

GIRL KILLED BY SHOTGUN CHARGE

Gun Discharges as it is Being Put Away by Brother

London, Ont., Feb. 13 (CP) —Ten-year-old Elsie Max Doxtator, Oneida Reserve Indian girl, was instantly killed and her two sisters, Jane and Madeline sleeping on each side of her, were unharmed when a shot gun which was being hung up on the wall of the single room home by her brother discharged.

The charge from the shot gun lodged in the girl's right jaw and head, ripping the upper part of her right shoulder off her body. Her two sisters were said to have been not two inches away on either side, but were utterly unhurt with a scratch. The Oneida Reserve is just east of Muncey.

According to the brother, Roy, a schoolboy, Clarence Andrews, was returning the gun after a day of shooting and the brother last night went to hang it up on the wall of the room. The gun went off and the full charge entered the little girl's head.

Dr. Roy McLeod c. Muncey, coroner Harold Pipe of Delaware and Mounted Police Officer J. N. Bella of Muncey were called and investigated the accident. It was decided no inquest would be held.

ONTARIO CABINET TO HOLD SESSION

Consideration of Farmers Creditors Act Will be Given

TORONTO, Feb. 13. — (CP) — Consideration of the Federal Farmers-Creditors Arrangement Act will be given at to-day's meeting of the Ontario Cabinet, Premier Mitchell F. Hepburn announced previous to the meeting.

Mr. Hepburn said the Federal Government already has ordered the province to reduce the amount of two mortgages. "We don't know where we are at now, unless this is ultra vires," he said.

"Mr. Bennett talks of breaking contracts but here he has jammed through an act allowing his government to come in and reduce the amount of farm mortgages held by Ontario," the Premier said. "We don't believe the Federal Government can pass such a law, we believe it is ultra vires."

Mr. Hepburn added the action of the Dominion Government is "most disturbing" to Ontario which, he said has loaned $50,000,000.

"Will private individuals go on loaning money, when the Federal Government can come in and reduce them?" he asked. "If that isn't disturbing the financial situation I don't know what is."

The Premier and Mr. Bennett had telegraphed him at the time Hon. David Croll, Minister of Welfare and Municipal affairs, had issued his statement of policy whereby defaulting municipalities will pay three per cent interest instead of the amount originally called for in their bond issues.

He stated Mr. Bennett had stressed the importance of maintaining Ontario's credit in the United Kingdom Markets and urged that a bear in mind the Vancouver situation (Mayor G. G. McGeer of Vancouver has proposed reduction of interest on the city's bonds).

"We realize as well as the Dominion Government it is physically impossible to pay interest on these obligations," Mr. Hepburn said. "But whether the Dominion Government can step in and interfere in a contract is another matter."

The Prison Inmate

"The objective of prison education in its broadcast sense should be socialization through varied impressional and expressional activities, with emphasis on individual inmate needs. The objective of this program should be that these inmates may be returned to society with a more wholesome attitude toward living, with a desire to conduct themselves as good citizens, and with the skills and knowledges which will give them a reasonable chance to maintain themselves and their dependents through honest labor. To this end each prisoner must be given a program of education, which on the basis of available data seems most likely to further the process of socialization and rehabilitation."

This is the view of the commission appointed by the Governor of New York State to study the penal system of the state, especially in regard to youths. It affirms that "the ultimate and basic function of the reformatory or prison after the demands of society and security have been met is the rehabilitation of those committed to its care, is their education and if possible their restoration to community life upon release as normal, social beings."

The report defines the prison inmate as "primarily an adult in need of education and only secondarily in need of reform." It has been shown that this cannot be brought about by merely locking a man up and through purely punitive procedures. "Social readjustment will not occur automatically as a result of the denial of liberty. The problem of corrective institutions is the reconstruction of character and the adjustment of disturbed personality patterns. To accomplish this end, all of the resources of medicine, psychiatry, conduct of religion, instruction and wholesome social living must be utilized."

Success of the rehabilitation program rests more on the personnel than on the material equipment. There are insufficient numbers of persons now employed in prisons and reformatories and some are improperly trained and lack experience, vision or personal qualifications.

One of the important features in the report is that "training should be given not only to inmates, but also to guards, clerical workers, foremen and other employees of institutions. All employees should secure an understanding and appreciation of society's aim."

The report recognizes education under these corrective institutions for youth as "not as an institutional luxury, but as the best type of social insurance."

Increase in Sales

Automobile sales in Canada during 1934 numbered 62,500 as against 41,200 in the year before. The registration of new cars in the eastern part of Canada, which represents about 75 per cent of the total, numbered during last year 46,894 as compared with 32,554 in the year 1933.

An analysis of the sales shows that eighty per cent of the cars sold in Eastern Canada were priced at less than $1,000 at the factory and that sixty per cent of the total was accounted for by cars having a delivered cost of less than $1,000.

Registration of new cars in Eastern Canada was as follows in the past two years—

Ontario	32,062	23,057
Quebec	9,855	6,815
Nova Scotia	3,067	1,717
New Brunswick	1,612	802
Prince Edward Isl.	298	163
Total	46,894	32,554

The purchase of new cars shows the necessity of replacement which is making itself a factor in the development of the motor industry. Even yet there are a great many cars of years' standing and sooner or later these must be taken in, for the age is a motorized age and even if one would one cannot stem the movement of the time. Motors are necessary.

In New York City Pulpits

Economic nostrums were assailed by the Rev. Dr. Harry Emerson Fosdick in his sermon in Riverside Baptist Church, noting that "any era of widespread disturbance and wretchedness calls out pathetic and often frantic belief in panaceas." He found a panacea more serious than Huey Long's plans, the Townsend idea or Sinclair's EPIC beguiling the United States, "the idea that if we let a centralized nationalistic government do everything, own everything, become everything, that it will solve all problems and prove the major shortcut to Utopia.

"Statism is the contemporary Messiah," said his congregation. "Communism puts it in one form—let the state own everything; Fascism puts it in another form—let the State dictate everything.

"But this trust in the all-inclusive, all-controlling, dictatorial state, as a Messiah whose advent now at last will save us, will prove to be another of history's pathetic panaceas, with its tragic aftermath of lost faith and disillusionment."

Real salvation, Dr. Fosdick held, is not to be found so much in the noise of political upheaval as in the depths of spiritual culture. He says "what Hitler stands for is as doomed to decay as the other crazy reactionary policies of the past but the eternal spirit will never be lost."

The rule of the people was stressed by Rev. Dr. George C. Pidgeon of Toronto speaking in Fifth Avenue Presbyterian Church. "The church must be in touch with modern thought because no religious movement can win a community without capturing the community's thought," he affirmed. "The Roman Empire thought it was practical, but every suppression of wishes among its people led to unrest and final doom of the Empire. The same holds true of Fascists and the Bolsheviki today, who keep down differences of opinion and think they are wise by doing it. How can they escape Christian principles?"

The infidel was called a coward by Rev. I. H. Hough, dean of Drew Theological Seminary at St. Paul's Chapel, Columbia University. The cynic is the man who has no courage. Religion is the genius of the incredible. When we look at life we find that the obvious is not true, but the incredible is. Events are always contradicting everything that is important. We must overlook these contradictions to see ahead to the splendid eternal principles."

Rabbi Joseph Zeitlin declared that it was not enough to pay tribute to Lincoln in words alone "but what is more important is to honor his memory by living up to the ideals of his life. Lincoln distinguished himself in his love for learning, in his love for the law of the land, our constitution and finally in his love for God. What an invaluable lesson to humanity today are these sentiments."

"Communism but paganism carved in a new fashion," was the view expressed by Bishop Maxon of Tennessee speaking at St. Thomas' Church, Fifth Avenue. The great conflict of today is between Christianity and Paganism, he said, declaring that it is impossible to have a regenerated society that is not founded on regenerated individuals any more than a building of weak and rotten materials can be permanent. He looked on Communism as the work of paganism and says it is "spreading insidiously all over the world like a disease. In communism the aim is to provide comfortable conditions for man as an animal. It seeks to provide all these things by destroying all initiative of the individual. The antidote to communism is not force; it is light."

"Cocksure ignorance are the little people," Rev. Dr. Albert Beaven of Rochester Divinity School said at St. Nicholas Collegiate Reformed Church.

"The old-fashioned Christian gentleman makes his investments in life and then follows up these investments," said Rev. Walter Scott of Central Baptist Church. "There can be no more lasting investment than in life, in children, in Sunday School. The most terrible indictment against the church is that she does not follow up her investments when she makes them. The church today is losing more than 75 per cent. Sixty per cent of her people fall by the wayside. We all stand fully indicted in the realm of unfaithful investment."

Rev. Dr. Titheridge in St. Patrick's Cathedral declared "that in a century that has seen man break his faith with God, the Catholic press is a lone voice upholding truth, righteousness and the cause of salvation." Father Titheridge criticized those who contend that immoral and indecent books and "harmless" because they are soon forgotten and exert no influence upon the readers' conduct or modes of life. He answered: "It has been for this generation to discover that books have no influence on life and conduct. This generation has all the answers and, should be a generation of the wise. But the very fact that printed advertising is so potent a business-getter is a direct refutation to this argument. A man would hardly spend millions of dollars to tell of the virtues and qualities of his product in magazines and newspapers if he thought the advertisement would be unread—or read and forgotten.

"Books, pamphlets, articles are written today for the same purpose that they have always been written—to foment revolutions, to start new religions, to inflame imagination, to keep alive hatred. Books are written to send men to Heaven or to hell.

"The twentieth century has seen attacks upon the greatest things in human life—the home, morality, marriage. The Catholic press upholds these great institutions while the un-Christian press attacks them; the un-Christian press shows its resignation to evil while the Catholic press points to a means of salvation and brings out the good of which God is the author."

Father Hogan of St. Francis Xavier school for children, urged that Catholics should, in daily life, take just as many precautions as a surgeon takes before an operation to prevent their minds and souls becoming contaminated by obscene motion pictures and literature which are so prevalent today.

Your actions, in passing, pass not away, for every good work is a grain of seed for eternal life.—Bernard.

Magic

Why should I wonder at
Black magic and the rest
Of all the curious lore
Man once possessed?

To walk among the flames,
To ride upon a broom,
Why, I've known stranger spells
In this still room!

I catch the salt-sweet tang
Of wind that blows from sea;
A face I loved, a voice
Come back to me!

Or on a winter day
When snow falls, thick and fast,
I step through some strange door
Into the past!

KIDNAPPING IN CANADA is not such a pleasant, lucrative, profession as it seems to be across the border. Alleged kidnapper put on trial in London, Ontario, court was there with alacrity; jury was picked in a matter of minutes and the case proceeded with business-like efficiency. Accused was given every opportunity to defend himself, provided with a first-class lawyer, was found guilty and sentenced to fifteen years in prison, without any fireworks, moving pictures or radio broadcasts.

ALIBI EVIDENCE to be introduced in favor of the accused in the Labatt kidnapping case, failed to fuse, as the alibi witnesses from Kentucky and other parts, balked when questioned as to how many times they had been in jail, and their general record as good citizens or otherwise, and removed themselves from Canada as quickly as possible. Character counts in Canadian courts as it should count everywhere in questions of fact, truth and justice.

BIRTHDAY OF ABRAHAM LINCOLN, Tuesday, observed as a holiday in the United States, recalls again the greatness of the man and the sadness of his life. Lincoln surely belongs to the ages and his memory is ever kept in kindly remembrance by countless admirers in many lands. He was a real man,—surrounded by enemies and without the whole-hearted support he should have had from those who should have been his friends, he ploughed a lonely furrow, but gave his best to the great task that was his, and when it was finished with the ending of life, as the result of an assassin's bullet, tired, but happy, in that he had fought a good fight, finished his course and kept the faith. Misunderstood, slandered and hampered at every turn, Abraham Lincoln, martyred president of the United States, was a different type of the truest type, although not what might be called a church man, and his memory is reverred throughout the length and breadth of the land that he strove so hard to keep united.

AUTOGRAPH HUNTERS were prevalent in Abraham Lincoln's day. A Philadelphia woman wrote Lincoln asking him for his autograph and a sentiment. She received the following answer: "Dear Madam, When you ask from a stranger that which is of positively only to yourself always enclose a stamp. There's your sentiment, and here's your autograph.— A. Lincoln."

EMPEROR HAILE SELASSI, Abyssinia's King of Kings, has offended Premier Benito Mussolini, the uncrowned Emperor of the Fascists and Dictator of all Italy. War is in the air and the dusky monarchs of an African kingdom does not seem to worry over the mobilization of Italy's land and aerial armies. The trouble has arisen over alleged interference with Italy's colonial possessions by the Abyssinians and Mussolini does not intend to stand for any more of it, hence the warlike preparations. It would be just too bad in this day and age with the advantages of peace being preached on every side for trained killers to be let loose at each other,—and with all the horrible lessons of the past for inspiration to better things, to make mass sacrifices of human beings for a prize which is probably worthless in itself, and in no way worthy of even one life in sacrifice.

DON'T BURDEN MIND WITH A LOT OF FACTS

Clear The Mind of All Useless Information

By Louis E. Bisch, M.D., Ph.D., Famous Authority on Health and Psychology

(Copyright 1934, King Features Syndicate, Inc.)

Don't clutter your mind with information that cannot possibly be of any value to you. Useless information does the memory, therefore, keep your mind clear.

Remember that the mind is like a storehouse. Like every other storehouse, it is bound to hold a considerable quantity of wares that are useless. One cannot help piling up useless information in the mind.

One should, however, try to keep such trivia to the lowest possible minimum. Don't, for instance, try to remember all the telephone numbers you hear. Remember the important ones, the ones you use frequently, and let the rest go.

It may be useful to remember all the numbers you ever heard. But what of it? What good is it?

Don't try to fill your mind with technical terms, unusual names, or big words. Don't attempt to memorize a lot of uncorrelated dates in history. Don't fall into the habit of remembering the names of persons you are not likely to meet again socially.

You cannot exercise the mind, train it and improve it by unserviceable thinking. The mind should be used and stimulated, but this can never be done by weighting it down with cumbersome, fruitless information.

It's not what you store in the mind so much as the way you use it. Hundreds have scored astonishing success with but meagre knowledge behind them. They were, however, masters of the little they knew! What they had was useful. They knew how to apply it.

Try to make your memory "clock-schard." Don't be a "pack rat" you can. Don't put away in your mental storehouse facts that will only litter. Keep the shelves of your mind clear and orderly. Inspect what you have. Don't add things that will crowd or obscure real values.

Don't be like some college graduates who have crammed their minds so full that they are choked with facts, but find it impossible to know how to apply them.

A good memory, by the way, is no sure indication that the mind is of a high order. As a matter of fact, persons possessing strong imagination frequently have poor memory.

The desire or urge to fashion ideas and images of one's own runs rather counter to the memory faculty, which is often photographic and takes in things mechanically in their entirety.

The only kind of memory worth anything is the kind which the individual makes his own and parcel of the rest of his thinking. In other words, he adds the new memories to the old ones, and makes a unity there and weaves it into the pattern of his life.

TREAT THAT COLD Promptly

Attack it at the source!

The "common" cold causes more lost time from gainful work than any other disease. If you do catch cold, help yourself of it as quickly as you can by attacking it at its source.

A cold must be treated for what it is—an internal infection. Grove's Laxative Bromo Quinine is effective in action. It goes right to the source of the trouble. It does the three-fold job necessary to get it opened: second, it combats the cold germs in the system and reduces the fever; third, it relieves the headache and "grippy" feeling; fourth, it sooths up the tissues and helps build against further attacks.

Why do thousands prefer Grove's? They're in a white box (the largest size is most economical to buy). Keep Grove's Laxative Bromo Quinine on hand at all times. It has what it takes to stop that cold quickly and effectively. 63

SUIT SALESMAN SENT TO PRISON

Eleven Charges of Theft And Fraud Are Admitted

Trenton, Feb. 12.—(Special)—James Green, suit salesman of Toronto, was sentenced to serve eighteen months definite, six months indefinite at the Guelph Reformatory by Magistrate Butler this morning. Trenton police court yesterday afternoon. Green pleaded guilty to eleven counts of theft and fraud. The above sentence was given on one local charge while on the ten others he was sentenced to six months on each charge with all sentences to run concurrently.

Green was arrested in Toronto on January 11 on information from the local authorities who had four informations against him at that time. Later charges were laid in Belleville, Frankford, Deseronto, Glen Miller and Wellington. Several complaints were also received from various parts of the country. After being on remand for sentence for several weeks the case was disposed of yesterday with the above result.

Green had accepted deposits on clothing which he failed to deliver.

Three teams bettered their positions last night in the Trenton and District Hockey League when another triple-header was staged before a good crowd, Carrying Place and the Cities Service Oilers moved into a third place tie after winning three games last night. Led by the speedy Normie Johnson, the Carrying Place handed Don Vining's Frankford team the deciding two of the tuins of 3-0. Five minutes after the opening bell Johnson wheeled on the rubber pass Lohnes after he rounded the Frankford defence and during the period closed Vic Willie made it two when he took Johnson's pass, Frankford checked hard but the second canto to keep the Carrying Place from scoring but they failed to count themselves. Both teams missed several scoring chances. Pre-season word on a beautiful solo effort mid-way thru the final canto to end the scoring. The game was very clean with Referee Scott Gowen handing out only a few penalties. Johnson, Willie and Ferguson were the best for the winners while Lohnes, Ira Vining, Frankford, Leod and Lawrence looked the best for the losers.

The surprise of the night was the second game when the Co-operative Workers battled ten minutes overtime to a 3-3 draw with the Cities Service to gain their first point in six games. The Workers, led by George Rosenplat, the gate crashing slingers 2-0 but could not hold the lead as they lacked condition. Bell scored the only counter in the third period. Rosenplot made it two when he beat Cain on Longdon's pass. W. Bowen tallied the first for the Cities Service less than a minute later when he drilled Mille's pass past Blondin on the rebound. Schenset evened the count before the period closed. Rosenplot put the Workers in the lead again but Newton evened matters when he shot from a scramble to score and the game went overtime without the tie being broken. Rosenplot, Bell, Aris and Longdon were the pick of the Workers while every man on the Cities Service played well with no one being particularly in the limelight.

High School 5— Benedict-Proctor 1 Packing too much speed and better combination, undoubtedly Stickwood's High School pucksters banded the Benedict-Proctor sextette a 5-1 trimming in the midnight game of the triple-header. Gray in the second period was the chief thorn in the silver-plater's side. He was credited upon to stop many that looked like sure counters. The visters did not check their men close enough and several times left large openings for the students. Bob Gilbert played well in the Benedict's net. The entire team of the winners did not look like the team that handled Brighton their only defeat of the season' Heaney scored the first goal on a scramble after both teams played very even, Beale and Heaney were rewarded for a scrap that had the both squads in a tangle. Beale of the High School was in the box cooling off when Blakely scored for the silverplaters. Cain scored for the High School before this, when he and Lamore combined to shoot the entire team. The period closed 2-1 for the knowledge hunters. Benedicts played hard for an equaliser but just could not beat Gray. Their puck chasers were continually broken up by the close checking student. Mitchell broke through to beat a line defence man for the final tally. Stars were hard to pick on either team as every man was called upon for his best. Referee Gowen was thinking of the old "Alma Mater" and the second position, which led to the newly uniformed Benedict's defeat.

Hauptmann Compared to Unruly Bear in Zoo Garden

Evidence Not Circumstantial is Detailed to Jury

(By William A. Kinney)

(Copyright 1935 By The Associated Press).

Flemington, N.J., Feb. 13 — The State today asked Bruno Richard Hauptmann's murder jury to "put him out of the way" as a "menace."

Attorney General David Wilentz defended with vigor the circumstantial evidence, on which the State depends for conviction, and enumerated that part of the case which he said was not circumstance.

He compared Hauptmann to an unruly bear in the zoo which had to be killed.

Now, the attendant doesn't like to do it," he told the jury, "but that bear is a menace, and they put him out of the way."

"That's what you have got to do with this fellow!"

About circumstantial evidence, he said:

"When it starts to scream all the lip entrance in the world can't overcome it."

As not circumstantial, he listed:

Identification

The identification of Hauptmann by Dr. John F. (Jafsie) Condon, ransom intermediary, and Joseph A. Perrone, taxi driver who said Hauptmann paid him a dollar to deliver a ransom note to Condon.

The board in the door of Hauptmann's home with writing on it by Condon's daughter, Dorothy, with phone number and address—as admitted by Hauptmann in the Bronx.

Colonel Lindbergh's identification of Hauptmann's voice as that of the man he heard say "hey doctor," in the Bronx cemetery ransom rendezvous.

"The brokerage accounts, the sleeping garments and the, $15,000 in gold in the garage is not circumstantial," he said.

"And any one of these is sufficient."

Picking up one of the ransom notes, and pointing to the mystic symbol for signatures, he said:

Signature on Ransom Notes

"And he (Hauptmann) put his signature on there. There it is: the hole circle, the red centre and the hole; B in the line for Bruno, R for Richard, hole's H for Hauptmann, 'your signature,' nobody could reproduce that except Bruno Richard Hauptmann."

"Counsel wants to know all about the money," Wilentz said.

He spoke of the Hauptmann alibi that Fisch gave him a shoe box for the ransom money and that thousands of dollars for his brokerage account.

"Not a living soul has testified," he shouted, "that they saw Fisch give Hauptmann the money as we cent.

Wilentz assailed Reilly's theory $35,000 of the ransom money was still in a safety deposit box somewhere.

"Opinion of counsel has never yet been substituted for testimony," Wilentz declared.

Meeting With Fisch

Wilentz pointed to the testimony that Hauptmann never met Fisch until July or August, and then to Hauptmann's sworn statement he had met Fisch in March or April, and May.

"Why did he step back that way," demanded Wilentz.

Why, because he made deposits in his brokerage and bank accounts in April, in May and in June after the ransom money payment, and he had to blame it on Fisch. He had to say he knew Fisch then so he could say Fisch got him $15 Mr. and Mrs. T. D. Wallbridge.

Wilentz declared $49,000 had been traced to Hauptmann and his business transactions.

"To me that $15,000 found in his garage would be enough," Wilentz said. "And it doesn't belong to him for you ladies and gentlemen."

Wilentz urged the jurors not to believe the defence "hokum".

"Just because a man comes in here with a stack of assertion, and has a reputation as a big lawyer, you don't have to believe him," he said.

The testimony of the taxi driver Joseph Perrone, who carried a ransom note to Condon, was attacked by the defence as "trash," Wilentz recalled.

Perrone's description of the man who handed him the note, was given to the police, he pointed out, long before Hauptmann's arrest.

"Muddy-blond hair, about five feet nine, muscular-athletic," Wilentz insisted Perrone's description to show a similarity to Hauptmann.

Wilentz told how Lindbergh was tense and listening at the cemetery when he heard the kidnapper's voice.

"This was the greatest moment in his life. He was to get his baby back."

NOTED AUSTRALIAN AVIATOR MISSING

Was Flying Solo Across Native Country

Perth, Australia, Feb. 12 (CP) — Baron Semplil, probably the Empire's most distinguished aeronautical expert, was missing today in rough country during an heavy storm. He had started back for England on a leisurely solo flight after flying here for the Centenary celebrations. He was last sighted at Melbourne.

He supervised organization and training of the Japanese naval air force in 1921 and performed similar services in Greece and holds decorations from a number of foreign governments.

SCHOOLBOY MISSING SEARCH IS STARTED

Chatham, Ont., Feb. 12—(CP)—Search was started today for 12-year-old Adelorde Bushey, son of Theodore Bushey, resident on Concession two, Chatham township. He left home for school yesterday and has not returned.

The boy is reported to have asked that his lunch be packed separately from the lunches of his three other brothers who attend the same school.

Inquiry revealed he had been seen travelling northbound on Queen yesterday but nothing since then has been heard concerning the boy.

"I Know Why They Like Picobac"

"Sure," said Mr. Picobac, waving the scissors he was using to open his "fan mail", "Sure, I know why so many pipe smokers like Picobac!

"Picobac is everything you men want in a pipe tobacco . . . it's mild, cool and sweet . . . it can't bite the tongue . . . and it's Burley, Canadian Burley, grown in sunny, southern Ontario. That means the Picobac flavour is right, too.

"And you can buy Picobac in either a pouch or tin. The pouch is a regular rubber-lined, pipe-loading pouch — you can put your pipe right into it and load up without spilling a crumb. Before putting it back in your pocket, you reseal the pouch practically air-tight simply by running your thumb-nail across the flap. And you get a new pouch every time you buy Picobac. MARRIAGE FOR SETH GIVES LOVE A HARD ROW TO HOE

Getting married for spite is about on the par with that old saw "cutting off your nose to spite your face," with perhaps a few advantages to be said for the latter form of self-inflicted malice. For, like Queen Elizabeth during the last decade of her life, you wouldn't look in your mirror and be reminded that your nose is missing.

But, if you're married, there's no escaping the partner you took "for better for for worse."

Two young people, who had nothing against each other and were apparently good friends before they married, settle down on the verge of a divorce because they married to spite someone else. The girl's letter follows:

Dear Miss Fairfax:

"Dave and I used to go to school together, and we'd always been good friends till we got married. And there's a long story back of that.

"I was affianced to a man, and I was crazy about him, and he loved me just as much. But it looked as if we never could get together without arguing over something. We'd start out in the morning to donate way, and then, before we'd gone three blocks, the quarrelling would begin. I was over-sensitive and thought he was belittling me, and perhaps he thought something like that, too.

"Whatever it was, I would often come home alone, for I'd leave him in a movie, or at supper, or during a walk, and tell him I never wanted to see him again.

"So, one time when I was lots madder than usual, I gave him back his ring, and told him I hoped never to see him again. I waited for over a month and thought he'd write or phone, or come back in person, but he didn't do any of these things.

"Instead he wrote me a letter—very nice and dignified—and announced his engagement to a girl I'd always been a little jealous of. He told me in his letter that he hoped I'd be happy, but I could realize now how mistaken our engagement had been, and we could never be together.

"My one crazy idea was to beat him to it and get married first. So I hunted up Dave, who had always been mighty sweet on me, and whose engagement had been broken about six months before, and we had a fussy and were married immediately, just to show that we didn't care.

"Of course, we weren't married in very beginning because we didn't care about each other that way we should, but married only to spite someone else. Now we both want to get out of it, and feel sorry for each other, but we are ashamed to let the old crowd know that we were married for spite.

"My mother is so disgusted with me she says I'm a fool, can't come home to her, and I just don't know what to do.

"Kitty"

Don't you think it would be well, before you do anything else as rash as getting married for spite, to take stock of your assets and liabilities, and be honest with yourself? You and Dave were very good friends before you married to spite either to some one else. Why don't you try going on that basis for six months or a year? Friendship is one of the best things in the world on which to build marriage. If you can get over the idea that you married for spite, I think it's not unlikely that you might make a go of things from now on.

Then write what you tell me, I judge that your mother feels the same way, and, from your experience seems worth trying.

Dear Miss Fairfax:

I am keeping company with a boy I have been corresponding with for some time. I am doing housework now and like him very much indeed. My boy friend insists that I quit and go home, otherwise he will go to some out west. Now, I think probably because it is three miles more to come.

Should I do as I wish or give in to his wishes and go home. When he called at where I am staying and we went away he didn't speak until we got home (where I was working).

A year ago when I was boarding in town he wouldn't come to see me and I was going to another town. He said he didn't like to go to strangers' homes but he was made welcome at both places, I thought.

I appreciate a man your colonel and will be glad of your advice.

Yours truly,
Dorothy

It seems to me, my dear Dorothy, that your friend is very selfish and inconsiderate. It is ridiculous for him to suggest that you give up a position you like and where your friends are welcome merely for the sake of his convenience. Why not drop this young man altogether? You are simply wasting your time with a person who maintains such unusual attitudes.

Brow exposure inspires a woman to keep after wrinkles, catch 'em young, annihilate them. This end is accomplished by using a heavy cream freely, using the right manipulations to insure the smooth, velvety surface.

Place the fingers of both hands, tips to tips, across the forehead. Move upward with one group, down with the other, keep both of them marching from temple to temple. Rub frowns crosswise. And, woman, stop that frowning habit. No good rubbing lines out if you are continually puckering up the flesh and disgiring them in.

A GUESS ABOUT FEEDS IS A GAMBLE ABOUT PROFITS

THOUSANDS of dollars of poultry profit are lost through lack of proper feeding. It's easy to mix a number of ingredients, and say, "That should make a good mash, I guess." The only way to be sure is by feeding it to your pullets and awaiting results. Usually results show when guess goes wrong.

FUL-O-PEP EGG MASH eliminates all necessity for guessing. It is scientifically blended to not only build strong, sturdy birds capable of heavy egg production, but to supply everything necessary for the making of bigger, better-shelled, more marketable eggs—and keep heavy producers in good body weight, healthy and vigorous.

Don't guess about feed. Feed for profit the FUL-O-PEP way—and be sure. Send for 24-page book describing the money-making FUL-O-PEP methods—It's FREE.

LUX TOILET SOAP

Loretta Young 20TH CENTURY STAR

How clever Ruth learned to prevent Choked Pores . . . to guard against COSMETIC SKIN

"Frankly, I do use quite a lot of cosmetics and I used to think I removed them thoroughly.

"But of course I don't want to risk getting unattractive Cosmetic Skin. I don't want my pores choked up with stale cosmetics—making my skin coarse and dull, maybe causing little blemishes and even blackheads. So I'm removing cosmetics thoroughly the way 846 out of 857 English and Hollywood Stars do—with Lux Toilet Soap.

Every night, and always before I put on fresh make-up during the day, I use this pure, white soap. There's no excuse for Cosmetic Skin now that Lux Toilet Soap is so economical.

Fashion Flashes

Be on your way wearing a Chanel travelling coat fashioned of chamois colored woolen fabric. Collar, revers and belt are of brown calfskin.

Play good golf wearing a smart one-piece sports frock of navy jersey with belt, beret and jacket of white chamois. This color scheme tells us that navy with white will be important later on.

Forget time when you are dancing beneath the stars down South. For resort wear, the smart shops are showing exquisite frocks of pastel chiffon; each model is completed by a fluffy, diaphanous cape in matching tulle.

Smart simplicity can be devastating when properly handled. Some of the southern evening frocks designed for young girls are simple but smart. Of this genre is a frock in red and white checked silk with five rows of very tiny self-cording at the hem to make the wide skirt flare. The bodice has a huge bertha of white starched linen.

Quite amusing are some of the hats made for the Riviera season. Some makes are a variation on the bonnet of stiffened white pique. There is a wide brim in front, but there is practically no brim in back. The poke bonnet brim permits forehead and back curls to be seen. The crown of the hat ties on top with two lake.

Don't cry if you can't go South, for there are plenty of nice people left at home who are giving nice parties. So buy a smart evening frock and enjoy yourself. A lovely one is in shimmering orange veiled over lame. The bodice has a cowl in back that gives a draped effect to the shoulders. The skirt is very flared at the hem.

TEETHING TROUBLES Ended!

"My baby has five teeth and has never been sick since his birth, thanks to Baby-Soothe Tablets," says Mrs. Alton A. Parcher, Glensmond, Quebec. Baby's Own Tablets are originated by a doctor to help babies through teething. They soothe; act as a mild laxative; reduce fever and correct indigestion and diarrhoea. Even a tiny, delicate baby can safely and easily take them. 25c at all druggists.

Excitement Harmful to The Child

Over-Stimulation of Emotions is Unwise During Early Years

By LISA GRENELLE

When Uncle Ned came to call on the family he would take three-year-old Jimmie up in his arms and fling him in the air. Jimmie was very frightened at first, but later on he seemed to enjoy it, get a real thrill out of it. But always after Uncle Ned had left Jimmie would have nightmares of tumbling off cliffs so real and terrifying that he would wake up screaming. No one in the family connected Uncle Ned's pranks with the nightmares until Jimmie had become a habit, stretching over years and increasing in frequency. Now as a grown man he still has these occasionally, those "falling" nightmares, and it makes him dizzy to look out of a high window or walk along a cliff.

Life Exciting Enough

Games for young children depending for their thrill on physical contact, on tossing, jouncing, tickling are often disastrous and never beneficial in their results. The results are frequently so serious as to have a lasting effect, remaining often for a lifetime to torture, frustrate and bewilder the unfortunate subject.

Games which arouse intense emotion in the child, whether it is one of jealousy, fear, love, anger, or excitement, should be avoided at least until he is old enough to understand and command the forces within him.

Life itself is quite stimulating enough for a young child. There is usually much to himself without suggestion and overstimulation. Until he is of school age he seldom seeks out companionship and is usually better off without it. Competitive games do not interest him. Even his interest is stimulated by an adult. And, except in rare cases, he is not ready for them. If forced on him they arouse in him emotions and conditions he is not yet ready or equipped to handle and which are therefore harmful.

Quiet Before Bedtime

I have been asked to believe by many cases that this warning no longer applies, that the child can through rough play cannot be overemphasized.

We all know that children should not be played with before bedtime if they are to sleep well. They are contented left to quiet devices if they accustom them to it.

You won't want your child to grow up an entertainer; do you? You remember then that excitement eaters and all abnormally restless young people get that way from being plushed into exciting or competitive pastimes before they are ready for them.

SUN LIFE COMPANY SHOWS TRENDS

Improvement in Situation Indicated at the Annual Meeting

The annual financial statements of life assurance companies are among the best barometers of general business experience on this continent. Hence, during the past three years when the decline in individual incomes resulted in the purchase of fewer and smaller life insurance policies, the statements in question faithfully reflected that fact. As the depression continued there was a more extensive termination of existing insurance and, at the most acute stages, there was an exceptional increase of borrowings and of cash surrenders. Plainly, this was an impairment, in many instances, by the insured, under the stress of immediate necessity, of prudent provision for the future of himself and his dependants.

The report of the Sun Life Assurance Company of Canada, published in another column and the remarks of its president, Mr. Arthur B. Wood, at its annual meeting, are gratifying evidence of an improvement of conditions. The report reflects a return of confidence and a marked trend toward recovery in business. Because of the huge investments of the life assurance companies in business stabilities covering a wide diversification of interests, the healthier conditions in trade indicated in this report make encouraging reading. Increases in new assurances and in repayments of policy loans, decreases in policy terminations and reduced demands for new loans —all these demonstrate that life insurance, which proved such a bulwark of strength during prolonged and trying conditions, is, in turn, keeping full pace with the forces of economic recovery.

For life insurance executives the problems of rehabilitation are little less challenging than those of the depression. The present difficulty of people everywhere to obtain investments at remunerative rates of interest and the record of dependability established by life insurance organizations under stress, have, of late, greatly increased the demands for investment insurance and annuities. At the same time insurance companies themselves are faced with the very conditions, on a big scale, that are making the individual investor increasingly annuity minded. Here they can be relied upon to meet the situation in the same competent way as in the past.

A striking fact mentioned by President Wood, in his address, is that of the $89,000,000 which the Sun Life Company paid out to policyholders last year, $45,000,000 in amounts of less than $5,000, with an average of less than $2,000. That fact vividly indicates the invaluable place life insurance holds as a source of first aid to the needy in most circumstances. It is, indeed, a rather significant reflection that some of the problems with which governments today are grappling, growing out of concern for those in humble station, have long since been anticipated and provided for on a sound scientific basis by our insurance companies.

The general character of the report is not only satisfactory to the policyholders of the Company but encouraging to the business community at large.

What Local Theatre Managers Have to Say About Current Offerings

AT THE CAPITOL

"Broadway Bill"

Grand Comedy Unequalled For Genuine Entertainment

Described as one of the most beautiful romances to come to the screen, "Broadway Bill" opens Thursday at the Capitol Theatre. Warner Baxter and Myrna Loy are the stars.

"Broadway Bill" is the story of a man, at heart a roustabout, who prefers the open road and hoped-for wealth, conventional, with and the snug security of an executive job held through the doubtful generosity of a financial minded father-in-law. Into this situation is thrust a girl of the identical temperament of this man. That she is the younger sister of his wife makes a complicated problem that is solved only after the three — man, wife and father-in-law—go through an ordeal of drama, pathos and comedy.

But as in all Frank Capra productions the actual story just forms the framework of the film. It is the genius of Capra to inject those touches of humor which are the really important parts of his pictures — incidents which people long remember after they have seen the film. One has only to recall the hilarious and uproarious episode in "It Happened One Night" i.e., the clothing sequence, the hitchhiking scene, singing scene in the bus, to prove this point. And in "Broadway Bill," Capra has introduced similar touches.

Much of the comedy is provided by Lynne Overamn, a sad faced pessimistic comedian who builds upon effective comedy sequence to the picture. Clarence Muse, that good negro actor and composer, also spoears in the film adding another fine achievement to his long list of successes.

Added Attractions

An amusing cartoon, "Under Dog" plus the incomparable Capitol News will be shown at each performance.

Shows at 2.30, 7.15, 9.35.

AT THE REGENT

Mystery, Adventure, Melody and Fun in Excellent Twin-Bill

For those who like the unusual in thrills and a warming human story the new bill at the Regent Theatre, "Marie Galante", can be recommended without reservation. The picture stars the lovely Belle Tomorrow (Thursday) and Friday, matinee and evening. Starring with Miss Galante, the new screen sensation whose loveliness will capture you, and Spencer Tracy co-starred.

Ketti Gallian excels and lovely stage star makes her screen debut of the most notable in screen annals. Ketti Gallian will go far as a screen star—or this writer misses his guess by a wide margin. She has the qualities which should place her among the really big personalities of the screen. Finally, her great personal glamour adds charm.

As the wistful "Marie Galante", lost far from her homeland in a maze of international intrigue, always seeking a return to the dear French countryside, she portrays, for him, Miss Gallian creates one of the most touching and poignant figures ever to reach the cinema.

Spencer Tracy, forceful and dynamic, plays opposite her as the young American who at first tracks her down as a suspect, then comes to her defense. Together these two players weave a spell of authentic romance, to which is added the glamour of the story's setting—the colorful and wild city of the Spanish Zone, with its mysteries, its passions and its sudden violence.

One of the finest casts assembled in seasons has been recruited for "Marie Galante", by Winfield Sheehan, its producer.

Such stellar players as Helen Morgan, Reid Sparks, Siegried Rumann and Charles Byron have been cast for roles. Robert Loraine, one of the best known stage stars in England, came to Hollywood, at his call, especially to play the role of Rattibois, foreign emissary in the dangerous International game round which the story revolves. Leslie Fenton likewise has an important role and Stepin Fetchit are seen in effective bits. "Marie Galante" also has several song hits which shortly should be whistled from Coast to Coast. "—I'll Know," "Song of a Dreamer" and "Serve Me Right for Treating You Wrong" are especially melodious and striking.

Smart Lew Ayres Comedy

Preceded by the most glowing of advance reports, Fox Film's comedy with music, "Lottery Lover", is announced as the second feature attraction on the same program.

Preview audiences in Hollywood, it is said, have called this film one of the most delightful in some time. Its sprightly story, concerns a series of carefree young cadets on their first leave in Paris and its notable cast includes Lew Ayres, dainty "Pat Patterson", Peggy Fears, Reginald Denny, Alice Brady, Edward Kig, Sterling, Holloway and Hick Brown. Ben Bernie and his famed orchestra with a smart revue will be presented on the same program.

WATCH YOUR STEP

We are anxious to co-operate with the Ontario Government in the matter of Accident Prevention. The year 1934 saw approximately 900 people killed and 10,000 injured by Autos—many crippled for life—in this Province. Most accidents occur between 5 and 11 p.m. and drivers around 30 to 35 years of age are most frequently involved. Please drive carefully, especially at night. Allow the other fellow plenty of room. Carry Auto Insurance, but above all—place your Insurance with us.

NEW YORK - TORONTO - WINNIPEG

NEW YORK EXCHANGE

New York, Feb. 13.—(AP)— The first substantial relaxation in steel production in weeks was taken calmly by the Securities Markets today.

Share prices pushed up moderately. Among Canadian stocks, fractional recessions were registered by McIntyre, Noranda and International Nickel. Canadian Pacific held about unchanged while on the Curb, Hudson Bay Mining moved slightly. Dominion Government bonds ruled steady. Canadian dollars eased 1-8 of a cent at 99 13-16 cents.

American Cars were 2 points and Continental half as much. Commonwealth and Southern and American and Foreign Power preferreds rose a point or so. Steels dipped a little, then stiffened.

In rails, Union Pacific and Santa Fe rose about a point. Some of the non-ferrous metals perked up with U.S. Smelting and Cerro de Pasco up a point.

INDUSTRIAL STOCKS

Toronto, Feb. 13.—On the Toronto Exchange the industrial section had a decidedly slow morning but perked up in the early afternoon, with golds, interlisted leaders as International Nickle, Brazilian, Ford, C.P.R., re-covered losses recorded during the early session and Nickle and Ford added small net gains.

British American was the strong spot in the oils while Dalhousie, Steel Food and Distillery issues harbored a preponderance of gains at early afternoon. In Trinities, the market was apparently influenced by a growing conviction that the gold clause issue will not result in the U.S. Government dropping its dollar depreciation policy. The liquor, food and oil shares as well as Nickel and Ford were in the best demand today.

MINING MARKET

Toronto, Feb. 13. — Buying improved in the mining section of the Toronto Exchange in the early afternoon today with action centered in the Gold Group. The senior golds, which are particularly active, were firm to strong, advances showing for Dome, Pioneer, Teck Hughes and Wright Hargreaves.

Trading was heavy in Cod's Lake, Pickle Crow, Sisco and Wendigo, Ankerite all at higher prices and in the cheaper issues the feature was on the up side were Gunnar, McMillan, Walters, Roche, Bagsmac and Chibougamau, these gaining from 1-2 to 73 and McWatters at 3 1-2 was up about the same amount, to the highest price in the year.

Silvers were slow and the only price change was a point of 5 cents for Eldorado and most of the Base Metal Shares were dormant.

Judge Trenchard Defines Verdicts Jury May Find; Case to Jury at 11.15 a.m.

Judge's Charge Brief.

Justice Trenchard's charge, though brief, was sharp and to the point. It reviewed a number of the defence contentions with conclusions of "do you believe that" on the stated important ladder evidence, the court asked the jurors:

"Does not the evidence satisfy you that at least a part of the wood from which the ladder was made came out of the flooring of the attic of the defendant?

"If you find the murder was committed by the defendant in perpetrating a burglary in the night in the first degree," the court said, "even though the killing was unintentional.

"If there is a reasonable doubt the murder was committed by the defendant inperpetrating a burglary, he must be acquitted.

"If you find the defendant guilty of murder in the first degree you may, if you see fit, by your verdict and as a part thereof recommend imprisonment for his natural life."

Hauptmann's Testimony.

As to Hauptmann's own testimony:

"His interest in the result may be taken into consideration on the question of whether he is telling the truth. His surrounding circumstances of crime may be considered only as affecting his credit as a witness."

Of Amandus Hochmuth, the aged man who said he saw Hauptmann with a ladder in the yard of the Lindbergh home on the day of the crime:

"This testimony, if true, is highly significant. Do you think that there is any reason upon the whole to doubt the truth of the old man's testimony? May he not have seen and easily remembered the circumstance in view of the fact that very night the child was stolen from him?

When Justice Trenchard finished his charge he asked counsel for spectators to cease their "humming and buzzing". He told the attorneys to argue any exceptions to his charge after the jury retired.

Alibi Witnesses.

As to Hauptmann's alibi witnesses, the judge told the jurors:

"You should consider the fact, where it is the fact, that several of the witnesses have been convicted of crime and determine whether or not their credibility has been affected thereby. And where it appears that witnesses have made contradictory statements you should consider the circumstances affecting their credibility as affected thereby."

His remark on circumstantial evidence was:

"When the case against the defendant is made up wholly of a chain of circumstances and there is reasonable doubt as to any fact the existence of which is essential to establish guilt, the defendant should be acquitted.

"It is not sufficient that the circumstances proved create a strong account for and therefore render probable the hypothesis that is sought to be established by the prosecution. They must exclude to a moral certainty every other hypothesis except the single one of guilt."

Flemington, N.J., Feb. 13 — A jury made tense by 32 days of testimony and argument listened Judge Trenchard charge Bruno Richard Hauptmann.

The Sheriff called the press copy to leave the room while the charge was being made.

The instructions began shortly after court opened at 10.09 a.m. Judge Trenchard told the jury, asked if the defendant was there, and remarked:

"The officials will now close the doors and not let any people in or out until the jury has been instructed and retired."

Hauptmann Gray-Faced

The Judge was expected to talk for 40 minutes.

All of the principals sat quiet and most of them showed the strain of the 32-day trial. Hauptmann was grey-faced as usual. His wife sitting a few seats away appeared the healthiest of the group. Mrs. Lindbergh, father of the kidnapped and slain baby, was conspicuous. He watched the Judge intently.

"The Judge told the jury it must be guided by the evidence and by which he would set forth. He added they were the sole judges of evidence, however.

"You must not consider what I shall say concerning the evidence as being accurate, but you must depend upon your own recollection. Your must not only consider the evidence to which I shall refer but must consider all of the evidence in the case."

Question of Proof

He explained the point of law which requires the defendant to be proven guilty beyond a reasonable doubt before a conviction can be found.

"If there be reasonable doubt the defendant must be guilty he is to be declared not guilty. The evidence must establish the truth of the fact to a moral certainty. A certainty that convinces and satisfies the understanding and satisfies the reason and judgment of those who are bound to act conscientiously upon it."

Reviewing of Evidence.

Reviewing the state's evidence, the Judge remarked:

"The fact of death seems to be proved and admitted.

"There is evidence from which you may conclude, if you see fit, that the fact to a moral certainty the child entered the nursery or bedroom through the southeast window of the nursery room by means of a ladder placed against the side of the house under or near the window, and this occurred shortly after nine o'clock at night."

The jury was carefully guarded as it left the courtroom for the court for the charge. It was flanked by nine civil guards and a detail of state troopers and kept in a tight line on the march from the hotel.

Justice Trenchard reminded the jury of the scene about the Lindbergh home and on the Lindbergh property with the knot still untied, "from which you may possibly conclude the sleeping suit was stripped off of the child at that place."

Jury Hears Parts of Notes.

The Judge declared it a matter of fact for jurors and kept the Hauptmann wrote the original ransom note which was found in the Lindbergh nursery after 12 notes that followed.

He recalled the numerous state experts testifying Hauptmann wrote the ransom notes and that the testimony of one defence expert who said Hauptmann did not write them.

"The weight of the evidence to prove that Hauptmann did write them is fully for the jury."

The Judge disputed panel in Hauptmann's closet which bore the pencilled telephone number and address of Dr. Condon.

"If you believe that he did write the notations on the panel), although he now denies it, you may conclude that it throws light upon his connection or not he was dealing with Dr. Condon."

Comment of Memo.

On the discovery of ransom money in Hauptmann's garage the court remarked:

"Does it not appear that many thousands of dollars of ransom bills were found in his garage, hidden in the floor above the floor, from others were found on his person when he was arrested and others found in his home at one time."

"The defendant says that these ransom bills were left with him by one (Isador) Fisch, a man now dead. Do you believe that?"

He told the jury it might also consider the evidence that shortly after the delivery of the ransom Hauptmann began to purchase stock in a gold mine. Fisch had invested heavily. Then he asked: "Do you believe his testimony that the money was left with him in a box and that it rested on the top shelf in his closet for safekeeping?"

"His wife, as I recall it, said she never saw the box and I do not recall that any witness, excepting the defendant himself, said that they ever saw the shoe box there."

Child's Death.

"The state claims that the unconstructed evidence of Colonel Lindbergh, Mrs. Lindbergh, Hochmuth and other evidence justifies the reasonable inference that the felonious slaying occurred in Hunterdon township in Hunterdon county when the child was carried out of the window of the nursery window and down the ladder by the defendant, and that death was instantaneous and that the evidence you may conclude, if you see fit, that the child's head was lovingly stricken on the first day of March A.D. 1932. He recalled the cough and breathing was much easier. "If you are satisfied with it as such there is never any danger of taking fresh cold, as after the old-fashioned Mustard Poultice.

"Really this is a heart-felt appreciation of Mecca. If your family is suffering from colds on Chest, Bronchial Tubes, Flu, Croup, Whooping Cough, Chills and Aches, use Mecca, with confidence."

Sold by all Druggists—25c, 35c (Tube), 20c and $1.00.

Sun Life Assurance Company of Canada

THE year 1934 has been one of returning confidence and of gradual recovery in business generally.

Because of its strength and dependability, tested and proved during a long period of universal anxiety, life assurance has been one of the first forms of business to experience the efforts of the trend towards recovery.

That this experience has been shared by the Sun Life Assurance Company of Canada is indicated in the satisfactory character of the year's operations as reflected in the following summary of the Directors' report:

Sixty-fourth Annual Report—1934

ASSURANCES IN FORCE, December 31, 1934	$2,748,725,403

This large amount, the accumulating estates of nearly a million Sun Life policyholders, will remain payable to them or their dependents during this generation—a stabilizing factor of great social and economic value.

OSHAWA ASKED TO GRANT RELIEF

Gas Company Asks Moratorium on Interest, Principal Payments

Oshawa, Feb. 13—Practically asking for a moratorium on interest and principal payments for the next five years, a proposition from the Ontario Electric Power Company was received by the City Council this week.

The company in a long letter to Mayor Sinclair, suggested tax arrears amounting to $3,800 would be paid immediately, and in addition, during the next five years would pay taxes amounting to $1,360.27. On August first the company would pay interest on the debenture owing the city, but sought to be relieved of principal and interest payments amounting to $16,300, and that payments on debentures and interest would be resumed during the next five years. The company, however, would pay interest on the interest.

The request of the company comes following the failure of voters at the last municipal election to pass the by-law to provide for the retirement of the company.

During the long discussion the Council reviewed the whole situation regarding the sale of the gas plant to Ontario Hydro Gas Company. The gas plant, it was learned, is being operated at a loss with the local Hydro system, and the city assumes responsibility for the plant.

In 1931 the gas plant was sold to the Ontario Shore Gas Company, for the provision that the company would spend one hundred thousand dollars improving the plant and equipment, and pay the debentures which the city owed to Hydro as they became due. It is understood that the city can repossess the system on failure of the company to meet their obligations.

PARENTS GIVEN LENGTHY TERMS IN CRUELTY CASE

Valleyfield, Que., Feb. 13—(CP)—Comparing the tortures inflicted upon six-year-old Laura Groleau to those invented in the middle ages, Mr. Justice Joseph Archambault today sentenced Edmond Groleau to 25 years in penitentiary and his wife, the former Marcelline Bourbeau, to 20 years for causing the death of the youngster through ill-treatment. Both were found guilty of manslaughter by a court of King's Bench jury last week.

Several thousand persons pressed into the court house in an attempt to hear Mr. Justice Archambault sentence the two for the death of the child at their home in St. Antoine Abbe, Que. Groleau showed no sign of emotion but his wife fainted. It is believed likely Groleau will be taken to St. Vincent De Paul penitentiary and Mrs. Groleau to Kingston penitentiary.

Complaints by neighbors of the Groleaus had ill-treated their daughter led to their arrest last year in the charge of murder.

Story of Tortures

Stories of tortures inflicted upon the little girl, of how she was dragged food and drink, shaken by the hair, pounded and sent out into subzero weather with little or no clothing, were related at the inquest and trial.

In his lengthy judgment Mr. Justice Archambault declared he "could not understand how some people are so degenerate as to inflict such inhuman treatment upon a poor defenceless child. Neither the mother and mother, he said, had sought new inventions to victimize the child and these tortures reminded him of the tortures of the middle ages.

Discussing the jury's recommendation for clemency, Mr. Justice Archambault declared: "Such a recommendation may not be easily explained as I saw them shiver with indignation and horror as inconceivable cruelties which you inflicted upon your little girl were unfolded in their presence.

"I have never witnessed such a revolting and impressive parade of privations, torments and suffering.

"You should both receive the lash so you would suffer from the same tortures as your victim but the law prevents me from giving such a penalty in a case of homicide.

"My sympathy for your other children was appealed to but you are unworthy of the pleasures and privileges of parenthood. Your children will be brought up in a true Christian way and away from your moral turpitude and brutality."

The couple have four other children.

Veterans Highlight Games In N.H.L. as Boston, Hawks And Rangers Tie for Top Rung

Bruins Defeat Leafs, Rangers Take Eagles and Maroons Win

PENALTIES HURT

Eddie Shore Particularly Effective Against Toronto

By A. E. FULFORD
Canadian Press Staff Writer

When playoff time rolls near and the going gets tougher than ever it is usually the athlete, who rises to the hockey heights with performances, that highlight the race to the money series.

It was that way last night, when veterans of the game flashed brilliant form to stand out in a hockey evening, that found sharp-pointed National League battles at Boston, Montreal and St. Louis.

Shining bits of individual work, goals galore and the climax of New York Rangers' rocketing comeback were crowded into the trio of games.

Eddie Shore was the Eddie Shore of old at Boston as he inspired Bruins to come from behind four times and while Toronto Leafs 5-5 in overtime. He was mixed up in four of their goals.

At Montreal Hooley Smith fired two shots past Lorne Chabot to aid Maroons to a 2-1 win over Chicago Black Hawks and then played a capable game at defence in the overtime period after Lionel Conacher had been hurt.

Behind him in the Maroon nets was Alex Connell, the pallid Ottawan, when emergency called him through. When he gave way to Bill Beveridge in the Senator nets, two accidents happened.

The cipher, that stood to Chicago's account made his seventh shutout since Tommy Gorman inclosed him to return to the game after a season's layoff. That gave him league leadership and he has had fewer goals scored on him than any other netminder.

Dillon Scores Three

Cecil Dillon, an experienced player not out in the veteran class, shone in Rangers' 5-1 victory over Eagles at St. Louis, scoring three of the New York goals.

The results brought Rangers and Boston into a tie for first place division leadership with Chicago and marshed the climax of a Ranger rush that has brought them from the bottom to the top of the league standing in 16 days.

Maroons' victory and Toronto's loss left the Montrealers only eight points behind the Canadian division leaders. They have played three games less than Leafs.

Rangers figured themselves really in first place today with Boston and Chicago second as they have a game in hand over their rivals.

Dillon's two goals in 32 seconds of the third period capped a Ranger attack with Eagles fighting weakened by the loss of Scotty Bowman and they could not stop it. Second Dillon had got his first goal in the opening period and Butch Keeling had added the third in the second. After Joe Jerwa scored Eagles' only tally Murray Murdoch gave Rangers back their four-goal advantage late in the third.

Shore was in the air inspired hockeyist in the Boston game. He scored one goal in the third that marked the second time Bruins had tied the score, made the play Ver the third tieing goal, sending the game into overtime, and did the trick that sealed it in the extension for a total of three assists.

Tripping Penalty Hurt

A tripping penalty to Happy Day in the overtime session after Pep Kelly had made it 5-4 for Toronto gave Shore his opportunity and he engineered two goal producing plays in 12 seconds. Max Kaminsky and Dit Clapper scoring. Kaminsky had scored the Shore-made, goal, that sent the game into overtime and Red Beattie and Bill Sands netted other Bruin tallies.

Young Flash Hollett got two clever goals for Toronto and Harold Cotton, Buzz Boll and Kelly the others. The Torontonians were without the injured Harvey Jackson and Day played two periods with a broken thumb.

The world champions were decisively outplayed at Montreal as Maroons put on a dazzling display of speed and hard checking. Only two penalties were called in the game, both to Maroons.

Smith divided his goals between the first two periods, Jimmy Ward and Baldy Northcott assisting with the first and Northcott with the second. Cy Wentworth got his first goal of the season early in the third for the final marker.

Sees Campbell Bettering 300

(By Edward J. Neil)

Jacksonville, Fla., Feb. 13.—(AP) The man who watches the clock believes Sir Malcolm Campbell, last of the thunder riders to drive an automobile above 200 miles an hour, will better 300 this time — and finishing breezing, at that speed.

T. Warren Baker, energetic young gnats who goes to fix speed himself, has had his fingers on the mechanical pulse that times Sir Malcolm ever since the jaunty Englishman started breaking speed records at Daytona Beach, in 1928.

As chief steward for the American Automobile Association Contest Board he passes on the condition of the Bentch. He says when Campbell eats and eats him and certifies the times caught by Odis Porter, official timer.

So he knows Campbell. He knows the 11 1-3 mile stretch of sand where the 45-year-old Britisher will loose his rebuilt monster Bluebird like this week or next month — Campbell has the car to do 300," he said tod y as he sat in his office.

"He is a great driver. He knows every what he is doing every moment. Give him a good beach and I believe he will set a new record between 304 and 310 miles an hour—say 306 to be exact."

FREE-FOR-ALLS WERE PLENTIFUL

Hamilton Seniors Trounce Villans of Oakville 11-0

Hamilton, Ont., Feb. 13 (CP)—In what was probably the most one-sided game anything in the Senior Ontario Hockey Association race it was a triumphant night for Hamilton Tigers as they romped about in their Hamilton Arena today after ringing up the largest single game score of the season.

They trounced the Oakville Villans 11-0 last night in a game replete with penalties, altogether there were 23 banishments and it was when Villans were all but handed that Tigers scored most of their goals.

There were three free-for-all fights and eight major penalties including two that put Hadley and Schmidt out of the match. At times the teams battled with only two or three men on the ice from both sides.

Bennett, Chisholm and Fitzgerald scored one goal apiece in the first period, In the second "Pitz" got another and Chisholm scored twice.

The last period was more than ever a strictly Hamilton affair, Chisholm scored twice for Tigers and Blake, Bennett and Howard each got one apiece.

Summary

OLYMPICS HEAD PARADE

TONIGHT

Local Juniors Defeated by Napanee 8-4 in First Game of League Playoffs

Napanee Much Better Team on Night's Play

HINTON STARS

Defence Did Not Give Goalie Usual Protection

Displaying more speed and general hockey ability the Napanee Juniors stepped into town and downed the local kids by the score of 8 to 4 in the first game of the play-offs in group No. 7 of the Junior "B" series in the O.H.A. last night. The foreign victory gave the Napanee kids a four-goal lead to return home with for the second game on Thursday night, the ultimate winner of the series meeting the league-leading Trenton Juniors for the group championship.

For forty minutes the local juniors battled the Napanee kids at practically even terms as the score stood 2 to 1 in favour of the visitors at the end of the first period, with no score being in evidence in the middle frame. In the final stanza, however, the green and white clad Napanee youths showed their superior conditioning when they literally skated the local juniors into the ice with continued speed to out-score them 6 to 3 and eventually emerge victors by the final score of 8 to 4.

The work of Ab Hinton, in the local nets, proved the highlight of the night's performance, as the former Napanee goalie was responsible to play heights to thwart the oncoming avalanche of Napanee players. Jack Kidd, at centre for the Thomas-led aggregation, stood out as the lone star of the Belleville forwards, as Jimmie Semark literally worked himself into exhaustion for a cause that seemed lost. Freddie McGuire and McCreary proved effective, as they, with the Burley brothers and Lamore skating fast, but accomplishing little. The Napanee front line of Jackson brothers and Tompkins carried too much speed and demonstrated a passing game that bewildered the local defence throughout, while Murphy and Richardson put up a powerful defence in front of Curry, who turned in a stellar effort in the Napanee nets. Leary starred for the visitors' alternates with his daring speed and scoring ability.

Play opened with the visitors showing accessive speed, but the locals warmed to the occasion late in the stanza, and repeatedly bombarded Curry. Jack Kidd elevated the hopes of some 500 fans when he rifled home Jim Semark's pass-out in the middle of the initial frame. The Belleville lead was short-lived, however, as a fast rush by C. Jackson's pass at the Belleville blue line and skated in to beat Hinton with a wrist-high shot. Twenty seconds later Leary carried the same combination of the ice to score again and make the count 2 to 1 in favour of Napanee and end of the initial frame. No further score was in evidence in the middle canto, although the visitors carried the bulk of the offensive play, but were continually thwarted by Curry in the clutch moments. The final stanza only went four minutes when Tompkins scored for Napanee and the remainder of the period saw plenty of goals registered as the visitors notched six counters while the locals bagged but three.

Jack Kidd led the local marksmen with two goals, while McCreary's lone counter in the third period, came at a time that elevated the hopes of local fans. Ab Elrath took McGuire's pass-out for Belleville's second goal, while Semark assisted in both goals scored by Kidd. Jim Leary, second line centre player for the visitors, led all scorers of the night with three goals to his credit, as he literally starred throughout the pastime. Tompkins bagged two and B. Jackson the same number. Lamore once Jackson, at centre for the Napanee aggregation, proved the most valued player on the ice with his continued play-making ability, he figuring in on five of the visitors' eight goals with well-timed passes.

The return game is scheduled to be played in Napanee on Thursday night at which time the home team enjoy a four-goal advantage to open hostilities.

The line-ups:

Belleville—Goal, Hinton; defence Greer and McElrath; centre, Kidd; wings, Semark and McGuire; subs, Elrath, B. Burley, McCreary, R. Burley.

Napanee—Goal, Curry; defence, Richardson, Murphy; centre, C. Jackson; wings, Tompkins, B. Jackson; subs, Gerow, Leary, Barrager, Evans.

The boy, Jack Hobbs, is a brilliant sprinter who has run the 100-yard dash in 10 2-5 seconds. Is Dog Creation Going to Bow-Wows?

By SAM ROBERTSON
(Canadian Press Staff Writer)

New York, Feb. 13 (CP)—Without an answer today was a question debated with warmth by fans at the Westminster Kennel Show: "Are dogs going to the dogs?"

The poser arose between two gents draped over the show-ring rail at Madison Square Garden yesterday while a dozen fond handlers were parading as many silky coated collies before gimlet-eyed judges.

"Those narrow-skilled creates," said debator No. 1 in tone of enthusiasm befitting a ball of high justice, "are no-account sissies. The old-fashioned collie had breadth in the head. He had room to learn the proper herding of sheep."

"Pish and posh," snorted debater No. 2, "show dogs of today are as keen and mentally alert as their forefathers of the field. Handlers know they must be developed to the tasks for which they were intended to keep their mental poise. It shows in the bright, clear eyes that count so much with the judges."

And so it raged, No. 1 maintaining Boston and Pids all nowadays good-for-nothing strutters, No. 2 comforting himself with many a "pish and posh".

Had the debaters ventured down around the stalls, particularly those housing the Pekes and their small-boned brothers, they might have found ready material to another question: "Are dog-owners going to the dogs?"

A wave of cooling of the sort associates with a baby show flood-ed up the aisles as section reserved for the "Toys." An ample sad-eyed dowager carefully curried the orange coat and equally sad-eyed Peke. Within barking distance of that sport there were enough "dears" and "darlings" and "sweeties" to hocker Pittsburgh's five Elmers in stock for days to come.

CURRENT SPORT

(Day By Day)

"Stop Calladine and the Petes are whipped" is the general consensus of opinion outlining by local hockey fans in relation to the Belleville-Peterboro play-off series that opens at the Arena this eve, which is perhaps more truth than supposition. When the Petes established the season here last week the Peterboro sport scribbler informed us, that Calladine was "the cream of the crop" of all players to perform in the "big six" loop, looking for his cue, that only goals scored made a puck chaser. Calladine scored in the neighborhood of 99 goals himself during the regular playing season, or nearly as many as the entire Belleville team as a whole. Of course these scoring figures do not always convey the exact standing of a club or team, even the prowess of one individual player. For instance Calladine did not measure up to the standard of the hockey player he is reputed to be in the past play-off series versus Campbellford, but local linguist, Ed. Ingram, however, did not score one-half as many goals as Calladine, that is during the season's play.

Over a short period series such as the Peterboro-Belleville play-off finals, most anything can happen and lengthy seasons records cannot be entirely depended upon, although generally speaking the stars of the regular playing season can be depended upon to materially assist their clubs and eventually prove their ability in continuing to star. If such proves the case the local intermediates must stop Calladine tonight if the locals are to gain a substantial advantage in the matter of a lead of goals to take back to the Littlock City on Friday night. Otherwise there will be no overtime played tonight as good hockey on one period. The locals, providing they play the same brand of hockey they demonstrated during the third and overtime periods one week ago, should emerge victors by two or three goals, which should prove sufficient to win the round. (Who laid the first crack, don't count the chickens before they're hatched!)

At any rate tonight's the night all hockey fans in this community have been waiting for all season for the Peterboro at Belleville play-off series. Tickets have been selling rapidly and the largest crowd of the season is assured with Harold Farlow of Toronto being named as referee.

Local basket squads have a busy week ahead of them, with the finals of the B.C.I. gymnasium a dual cage bill on the card with the Quarter A juniors and intermediates supplying the competition in two schools. The E.C.I.A. games versus the Deacon A. C. juniors and the Belleville "Y" intermediates. Continuing further in the week the Mordens coached intermediate clan, move to Napanee for a league game on Friday only to return home for an exhibition game versus the Trenton Camp Borden "Flyers" on Saturday night, while the sturdy R.M.C. "Cadets" come to town next Monday night to play a return bill of the C.I.A. basketball. Incidently this Cadet-Belleville "Y" tussle will about prove to be the deciding factor for the local hoopster's schedule. In securing the R.M.C. cagers move into action on Friday night, to give local fans a good dish of basketball for the week.

According to information received, promoter Glen Allen, of the A. M. A. A. C. is out gunning for big things these days. Glen, we hear, has his attention set on the "Golden Gloves" boxing bouts for Eastern Ontario and is endeavoring to persuade the A.A.U. of C., that Belleville has a good claim, perhaps more right to these fights than any town in Eastern Ontario. Much credit cannot be tossed in Mr. Allen's general direction in the matter of sport that is being staged in Belleville. Glen has promoted three good shows in Belleville, each one being slightly better than the previous. If Promoter Allen can land the "Golden Gloves" tournament for Belleville it will mean two prosperous days for business in the city, with the best material procurable battling it out in an elimination series. The winners of the various bouts meet one month later in the provincial finals, probably again at the Maple Leaf Gardens in Toronto, with the provincial champions are ultimately crowned. Naturally all lovers of the art of self-defence are pulling for the success of Promoter Allen in his efforts to land the coveted "Golden Gloves" tournament for Belleville.

Apparently the Owl League, over at the Y.M.C.A. is functioning better than the usual amount of attention; for last night Thomas' "Night Prowlers" trimmed the Swift Canadian aggregation 4 to 3 before a fairly large crowd of fans, which incidently the "Night-Prowlers" are touted to be the Thomas' secondary of the local O.H.A. teams.

Bowling and Colby has also snagged last night, when they dropped their first group play-off game to the Grocer-led clan by the score of 4 to 4. The local semi-pigeon sent-ed completely demoralized, Thursday is another day and despite the fact the Grocer-led clan have a fairly good lead, we wonder home with the series is far from finished yet. On the night's play the Thomas crew had much the edge of the play, but, despite the adverse score, Bowling and Colby are not out of the in the running and have not yet thrown in the sponge.

Last night the Napanee kids showed us that they were contenders for the home but, despite the fact the Napanee crew have a four goal advantage to carry home we still cannot fathom why Sam Curry is willing to entrust the fate of the downfall of the Colts. Four goals may be a paramount obstacle to hurdle, but, worse advantages have been collosed, so the final decision remains until after the result of Thursday night's game.

He stated he walked on the north side of Bridge Street and near the residence of Dr. Marshall noticed a man and woman walking west on Bridge Street.

Q. Where were they? A. Near the Reid residence.

Q. Where did they go? A. They were walking quite quickly with the man on the inside. The woman was dressed in dark clothes and the man was wearing a "light colored" overcoat. When they reached the Faulkner residence they cut the corner and went onto the Faulkner lawn and were lost to my view because it was quite dark.

Q. What next happened? A. We had reached the driveway of the Marshall apartment, when I heard a "groan". I started across the road, when I saw a car approaching from the west and stopping the car, and knowing the occupants we went towards the surgery door of Dr. Faulkner. I saw a bundle of clothing on the lawn. Mr. Burrows struck some matches and we noticed a woman.

Justice Jeffrey—Was it dark? A. Very.

Q. What was her condition? A. Her hair was disheveled, there was much blood on her face and her teeth were protruding from her mouth. It was a ghastly sight.

Q. How is the light on the pole? A. The pole is between light and the Faulkner residence.

Q. Was the light over the surgery door lit? A. No.

Q. What did you do? A. I went to telephone and when I came back Mrs. (Dr.) Faulkner was present.

Mrs. Faulkner telephoned for a physician and Dr. Gibson answered. At that time Mrs. Faulkner did not know it was her mother. The woman was carried into the surgery, and then Mrs. Faulkner said "It is my mother."

Q. Did you see any instrument? A. Yes a hatchet. Officer Isard had the hatchet but I did not touch it.

Gorman Cross-Examined

Called to the stand at the resumption of the Court at 2.35 this (Wednesday) afternoon, Mr. Gorman was cross-examined by Col. Greer.

Q.—Do you think this couple could have seen you? A—Certainly.

Q.—Nothing particular about them? A—Only that they were walking quickly.

Q.—Is Bridge Street a busy one? A—Yes, at times.

Q.—How many were on the street at the time? A.—They were the only ones I noticed.

Q.—Did you ever hear a voice. A—No.

Q—The groan was startling? A.—

Q.—The groan was starting? A.—

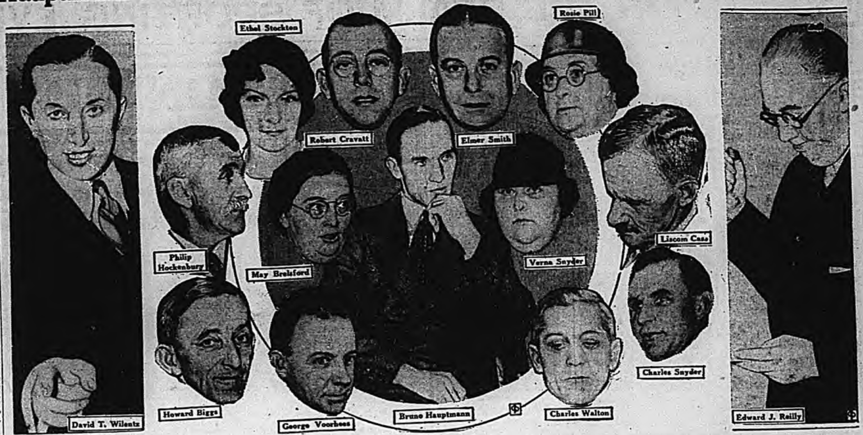
Q.—From the time you saw the couple turn in until you heard the groan, the time was short? A—Yes. Just a little time.

Q—As a layman the injuries to Mrs. Vermilyea were bad? A — It was a shocking sight.

Mr. G. B. Smith, one of the occupants of the car stopped by Mr. Gorman was the next witness and recounted his knowledge of the offence.

His evidence in the main was the same as the former witness.

Q. After you were stopped was there a conversation? A. Yes and I followed Mr. Gorman and Mr. Burrows up the walk. Near the surgery door I noticed a body lying a few feet easterly from the walk. I was quite close before I noticed the body.



Q. How was it that you could not see the body until close to it? A. Because it was quite dark. I went to the car to get a flashlight and putting my hand underneath the body, I raised it and recognized it to be a woman.

Q. In the light of the flashlight how did you not know it was Mrs. Vermilyea? A. Her hair was down over her face and there was considerable blood on the face.

Q. How strong are the lights? A. 100 candle power.

Q. Are they good lights? A. I would not say so for that type of street.

GHOST AT WORK, EERIE TALES TOLD

Weird Manifestations in Alberta Farm-House

Daysland, Alta., Feb. 13—Weird happenings at a little farm house near here have aroused the neighbors of Louis Lansing and flooded the district with eerie tales of a ghost. Kitchen utensils fly through the air along with buckles, spools, knives and books. Fear is felt for the safety of Eukaria, 11-year-old daughter and object of the reported visitations.

Curious neighbors and a newspaper reporter visited the house Monday night waiting for something to happen. They were disappointed, but Mr. and Mrs. Lansing and Frank Kennedy, their hired man, declare many strange things have happened that are inexplicable. A neighbor was struck on the nose with a fork when a kitchen pot caromed off Mr. Lansing's head, it is related.

Mr. Lansing was awakened by Eukaria and her 3-year-old brother crying in the night. They complained of pins sticking in them. Investigation revealed pins were scattered in the bed clothing. Ed. Lansing brother and neighbor of Louis, declared 147 pins were taken from the food of Eukaria as she was about to eat her lunch.

Later, when pins were found in the child's lunch at school, she was permitted to buy her own food. She purchased a package of cookies, wrapped in cellophane, one day. While her playmates watched pins were found in the cakes as she started to eat them.

A note fluttered to the table as the family and guests dined one evening, advising the hired man to leave. He was away three weeks in another district and the strange happenings continued. Another note was found telling Louis Lansing to leave the place, he related. It was apparently written on the toy typewriter of the 11-year-old daughter.

Strangest of all the strange tales are these: A belt and then a shoelace mysteriously wound around Eukaria's neck, tightening, before the terrified and astounded eyes of the farm home residents; a string of sausage climbed a ladder, charmed by some preternatural power. The child received a slap in the face, leaving a red mark—yet no one was visible within several feet of her.

Huge Copper 'Doughnut' Generates Million Volts

(By Howard W. Blakslee)
(Associated Press Science Editor)

Columbus, Feb. 13 (AP)—A copper "doughnut" half the size of a man which generates 1,000,000 volts of electricity a second was announced today by Ohio State University's department of physics. It is something new in high energy.

It is a wooden shell in the form of a doughnut, its outer surface a smooth copper skin. The interior is entirely hollow. Through the hole in the middle runs a silk belt, carrying electricity. As it whizzes through the hole, the "juice" brushes off and spreads over the outside surface of the copper covering. A million volts will store up on this surface in a second or two. Electrodes inside draw off this electricity as needed. The apparatus was developed by Dr. Willard H. Bennett.

Like other power machines its purpose is the greatest exploring adventure science ever has made—technically known as investigation of the nucleus of the atom.

LOVE SCHOOL

By MARYSE RUTLEDGE

RUDE INTERRUPTION

CHAPTER ONE

Faith Martin liked to arrange the flower display in the narrow window of the Bouquet Shop. Today she had planned an exquisite effect of yellows and mauves, harmonizing violets, hyacinths, purple tulips against a golden background of jonquils and mimosa. She belonged among these delicate tones of Spring with her slim grace, the pale gold and pink of her small head, and her grey eyes that reminded one of young birch leaves.

Working as only assistant to Miss Prime in this exclusive little flower shop off Park Avenue, lent to Faith's 23 years a sense of accomplishment. The people you saw at the Bouquet Shop were worth while. It taught a girl a lot to be even so casually in touch with them. And then things like this happened Hunter Barclay, the most sought after bachelor in New York, dropped in at four every afternoon for his white carnation.

Faith never got a chance at him though. Miss Prime, like an ancient bee in a garden, always fastened herself on her best customers. "Just a moment, Miss Martin, I'll attend to Mr. Barclay." And Faith would have to stand back where the most fascinating man in New York could not see her.

But today Miss Prime said crossly. "I have to go out this afternoon, Miss Martin. Be sure to have Mr. Barclay's carnation ready."

Faith stood watching Miss Prime in black satin and feathered hat mince out of the door. She felt terribly excited. She might get that chance now for a moment alone with Barclay. Oh, nothing would come of it, of course. But—well, she was wild about him. He was everything that she admired in a man—handsome, courteous, beautifully dressed, with the deepest blue eyes against the slashing black of his eyebrows and hair.

There was a touch of pride, of reserve, too, in his manner. Not like the other men who came to the Bouquet Shop and tried to flirt with Faith. Men of the best social position; some of them married. But Faith kept her ideal high and bright as a star. She kept it centred on a man like Hunter Barclay. You couldn't imagine him getting fresh with a girl.

It was cool and still in the green tiled, white walled little shop after Miss Prime had gone. There was a suspended fragrance to the exotic blooms prisoned behind polished glass, as if they, too, were waiting to be chosen. Faith often pictured them unfolding in the warmth of great houses where she sent them in long white boxes, cards tucked among the lacy ferns. What stories they could tell of love and parties and weddings!

She was glad she had on her black taffeta with the organdie collar and cuffs. Black increased the pale radiance of her hair, the lovely oval of her face. It wasn't wrong, she thought defiantly, to hope that she could attract Hunter Barclay.

By leaning forward over the gold beaded plumes of mimosa in the window, she could see Park Avenue. Everyone going somewhere, beautifully, effortlessly. Gay careless people hurried along in the May sunshine, past shops they took for granted; people who could afford to buy things.

You had to have so much to start with in this world before you could get anywhere, Faith wistfully reflected. And she had had nothing. The only kindness her mother and father had ever done her was to die, permitting her to struggle out of bleak poverty of her early environment. From 16 to 23, she had fought step by step, from job to job—stores, cheap restaurants, modelling. She had even tried the chorus of a musical show, but the director had so annoyed her with his attention, that she had been forced out. That was a bad time She didn't know what she would have done if a girl she had met in the theatre, Agnes Tucket, had not offered her a share of a tiny apartment in Greenwich Village. shouldn't feel the way she did now about living with Agnes. But Agnes had no standards.

Faith's wide grey eyes rested eagerly on the shift and flow of passer-by. It would be just her luck if Hunter Barclay didn't come before Miss Prime got back.

Then her heart gave a leap. There he was now, turning the corner of Park Avenue, strolling leisurely along the street. You couldn't mistake his tall easy figure, the English cut of his blue serge. And there was something about the way these ultra-smart young men wore their derby hats that men like Roger Welsh, Agnes' boy friend, could never imitate.

Good Heavens, where had her day dreams taken her? On this day of all days, his white carnation wasn't ready!

Her fingers, usually so deft, fumbled at the doors of the white refrigerator case where the big long stemmed carnations were kept. Their chilly, spicy fragrance was in the air as the shop door opened, closed.

She turned, her color rising, to find Hunter Barclay standing by the door with a faintly enquiring look in his dark blue eyes. "Have you—?" he began.

"I'll have your flower ready in a moment Mr. Barclay." It wasn't the way she had planned it. She wished she were not so flustered. Where was that wire and tinfoil?"

"Thank you. I'm in no hurry," he said indifferently, and sauntered over to glance out of the window.

She might have been any old thing, Faith thought bitterly, twisting the wire around the stem. He was so accustomed to being waited on that he never noticed who was waiting on him.

"Very pretty," he murmured, studying the flowers in the window. And he swung his malacca stick like a pendulum slowly, patiently.

How could she ever have imagined that she could interest him? She didn't care, she lied to herself, and walking over reached up to fix the flower in his buttonhole. At least she could follow Miss Prime's example and do that much.

Barclay straightened at her light touch looking down at her with the perfunctory smile he probably gave taxi drivers, policemen, anyone who did him a small service. "Oh thank you," he murmured. But he kept looking at her. "I don't think I've seen you here before, have I?" he said pleasantly.

The color burned more brightly in Faith's cheeks. He was merely being courteous to a person he considered a new employee in a shop. But what else had she expected?

"I've been here right along," she said in her sweet husky voice.

"Have you really?" His mouth had a humorous trick of quirking up at the corners in the ghost of a smile. The smile was lifting to his eyes, now making them boyish. "I've missed something then."

Her lips curled in delighted answer. They were April lips, gay and dancing, though when she looked at him, she felt shy. Her eyes were telling him things she should hide.

He didn't turn his away, but looked back at her as if he were suddenly aware of her amazing loveliness.

"Is there anything else you want, Mr. Barclay?" she asked softly.

"Yes. I'd like—" But she never knew what he would like. His expression stiffened to a mask.

The shop door had opened behind her. "Hello—hello there—" boomed a cheerful voice. Then it, too, broke off.

That was Mr. Stevens' voice, Faith thought with annoyance. He was always dropping in, trying to get a word with her. But why he had to choose this afternoon, just when she and Hunter Barclay were getting on a well—!

"How do you do, Mr. Stevens," she said mechanically But even before she turned, Faith felt the tension in the air.

Of course the two men knew each other. Philip Stevens and his wife, Gertrude, went everywhere. But they weren't acting like friends.

Mr. Stevens stood glaring from the doorway straight over her head at Hunter Barclay whose answering stare was level, insolent.

Mr. Stevens was a heavy florid man, goodlooking in his genial moments. This afternoon his bulk seemed menacing. He blocked the doorway, his jaw thrust out, his cheeks purple against the white walls.

"Don't you feel well, Mr. Stevens?" Faith moved forward uncertainly.

It was the first time she had ever seen Mr. Stevens rude. He did not pay any attention to her. "I've been looking for you, Barclay," he said, hulking his shoulders as if for a lunge.

Hunter Barclay took out a cigarette in a leisurely way, lit it and flicked the match on the green tiled floor. "I lunched at my club as usual," he said.

Both men seemed to have forgotten Faith.

Mr. Stevens' lips curled. "Saying it with flowers?" he sneered.

"Saying it in my own way," drawled Barclay. "Any objections?" He held his stick lightly moving toward the door.

"I don't like your way," Mr. Stevens growled.

Faith saw the young man's hand tighten on his stick. "Oh please—" she begged. "Please don't —"

Hunter Barclay, without looking at her, said quietly: "A lady present, Philip."

Philip Stevens tried to control himself. Little veins like whipcords stood out around his temples. "All right," he muttered. "But I'm telling you something, Barclay. I don't like what I hear about you. Kindly hereafter, keep away from my house."

Hunter paused. His dark blue eyes could be very cold. "You should consult a doctor about your blood pressure, Philip," he said, and with a slight bow to Faith, touching the white flower in his buttonhole, he walked past the choleric man and out of the door.

Stevens started after him, but Faith caught him by the arm, forgetting everything but her disappointment and alarm. "Haven't you made enough of a scene?" she nearly sobbed. "He may never come back to a shop where he's been insulted."

Stevens, still breathing heavily, dabbed his forehead with a silk handkerchief. He stared at Faith with bloodshot eyes as if he were coming out of a fog. "What?" he said blankly.

"You looked as if you could murder him." Faith cried.

The big man shook his head as if to clear away a mist of anger. Slowly the thick color receded from his cheeks, leaving them puffy and mottled. "I will some day if he doesn't watch his step." His hands trembled as he lit a cigar.

Faith turned away too sick to answer. The thing had shocked her. what could Hunter Barclay have done that he should be ordered out of anyone's house? You had only to look at him, the proud way he carried his head as he walked from the shop, to know it was nothing he need be ashamed of. She would probably never know what it was. She might never see him again, she thought miserably.

FAITH ENCOUNTERS TROUBLE

CHAPTER TWO

Faith went to the back of the shop. She tidied the marble shelf, put away the shears, the wire, the tinfoil. The day, that had seemed so promising with Hunter Barclay's coming, was spoiled.

Philip Stevens followed her awkwardly to the back of the shop. "I'm sorry," he said. "Pick out a couple of dozen roses for yourself, and charge 'em to me."

"No thank you." Faith turned on the lights of the flower case. If he had any decency, he would go. She had always rather liked Mr. Stevens before this. There was no real harm in his gallantries. Sometimes she had thought he must be lonely because he came in so often just to talk.

"I admit I've got the hell of a temper," Stevens said, fiddling with his cigar.

Stevens bulked beside her in his grey and black striped suit. "You are quite a champion of his, aren't you? You women are all alike," he went on somberly.

"Mr. Barclay doesn't need a champion."

"And I do." He gave a short laugh. "Be a good girl. Have dinner with me tonight. We'll take in any play you want to see, and have a bite afterward. What do you say?"

"If you don't want any flowers, I wish you'd go," Faith said coldly. She was risking her place talking to one of Miss Prime's pet clients this way.

As if in answer to her worried thoughts, the door clicked. "Why, good afternoon, Mr. Stevens. Is Miss Martin waiting on you?" Miss Prime stood peering in. Her faded eyes darted suspiciously from one to the other. Her voice was lemon and sugar.

Faith busied herself at the flower case, her soft red lips tight at the corners. "Mr. Stevens was just ordering five dozen American Beauties she said quietly. "Where shall I send them, Mr. Stevens?"

The big man whispered under his breath: "We're quits." Then he chuckled and drew out a small notebook scrawled with names and addresses. He chose a name at random.

"Miss Fritzy James—Hotel Austin. There's one little lady who'll be surprised." He tossed a card on the table.

Miss Prime accompanied him to the door, with her usual comments on the weather. She came back to Faith frowning.

"What was going on when I came in?" she asked sharply.

TARZAN THE UNTAMED

(Metropolitan Newspaper Feature Service, Inc.)

By Edgar Rice Burroughs

To the lion's larger fangs and more powerful jaws than the panther's was added his greater weight. Sheeta deliberately fell upon his back and drew up his powerful hind legs.

But the lion forestalled him and at the same time closed his awful jaws upon Sheeta's throat. The panther was quickly choked. Numa arose and stood above the body of his foe. Though he himself was only slightly injured he was——angry. He glared down at the dead panther and then, in a fit of hate, seized the body, only to drop it in a moment lower his head, voice a terrific roar, and—

—turn toward the ape-man. Approaching the still form, he sniffed Tarzan from head to foot; then, with his huge paw, turned him over with his face up. Again he smelled about the man, and at last, with his rough tongue, licked Tarzan's face.

Little Benny's Note Book

Me and pop was taking a wawk before supper and some man came around a corner in a hurry and bumped part ways into pop, pop saying, Wo, take it easy, stanger.

What do you meen take it easy? the man said, I advise you to either look where you're going or elts go where you're looking, brother, he said.

Being a big tuff looking man with a tuff sounding voice, and pop said, Well, come, come, it seems to me you were the bumping party and I was meerly the bumper, and the man said, O that's a way it seems to you, hay? Well the way it seems to me is you dont know what you're tawking about and wouldn't be werth listening to even if you did. Put that in your pipe and smoke it, brother, he said.

Now now, come come, pop said. Ony by that time the man had kept on going, and I said G, pop, gosh, why didn't you tell him a few things.

I will; I mean I would, ony it properly would of ended in my losing my temper compleetly and knocking him out cold and maybe even stiff, and then I should proberly of had to be balled out of jale and the newspapers mite of got the facts wrong and all in all it would of been very inadvisable, pop said. In a case of this kind a sensible man derives his satisfaction from rehearsing in his mind what he would of liked to say to the big curmudgeon, wich in my case would of run something like this, Now look here you overgrown unesthetic hulk, dont you call me brother, because I'd rather be a brother to a gorilla than to you, and ferthermore, I have nothing but contempt for your ancesters and pity for your descendents, and now be on your misguided way before I take a well guided poke at your atavistic mug.

G, that's swell, and do you feel more sattisfied pop? I said, and pop said, No I dont, as a matter of fact I'm all of a perpiration and I have an insane desire to take a bite out of a fireplug, and the whole thing goes to prove that as long as there are muggs and asses in the werld, the innocent will haff to suffer no matter what steps they take to defend themselves.

Wich they proberly will.

SWAYNE, VERMILYEA'S CARETAKER TAKES STAND

Swears Vermilyea Cried 'O My God' When Told Of News from Belleville

MESSAGE SPELLED OUT

Doctors Give Testimony as to Nature of Injuries

Harold Vermilyea's caretaker, J. S. Swayne, of Ontario, California, took the stand before noon today at the Court House at the trial in which his employer is accused of having murdered his mother with a hatchet on Oct. 6, 1934. Swayne is a former resident of Ontario, Canada, 13 miles southwest of Brantford. He is 28 years since he left Canada.

Swayne, an elderly man, under questioning by the Crown Prosecutor, Hartley, stated his acquaintanceship with accused had been over a two year period. He had been employed as caretaker of the Vermilyea home in Ontario. This included looking after the mail for a period of from 10 days to two weeks.

"He told me that if I received any mail to forward it to him. He said he was going to the north-west part of the State."

Vermilyea left Ontario, California, on the 26th of the month according to witness. A sheet of paper containing addressed and exhibited as evidence, instructed the witness in the matter of re-addressing mail.

Questioned by Mr. Urquhart, Was it a telegram you were instructed to send?

A. Yes sir.

The witness slip was passed to the jury.

While accused was away, witness was in charge doing the cooking and preparing meals for the 16-year-old son, Vernon Vermilyea, of Ontario, California, in a wine-colored Buick coach. He had no one travelling bag and a suit case when he left.

The bag and suitcase produced as exhibits were identified in part by the witness. "They look very much like them."

News 'Sat as Bright'

When Vermilyea came back on Oct. 5th, witness was one of first to see him. Accused had just returned, witness told him he had some news which "wasn't quite so bright."

The same car and baggage accompanied Vermilyea upon his return. Then, according to witness, police officers came to the house, and remained there just a short time after his return.

"Accused was on the long distance telephone when Chief Locke came to the house," said witness.

Vermilyea's Explanation

Upon Mr. Vermilyea being told of the crime in Belleville, relayed to his California home from Belleville by officials here, he cried out "O my God."

Col. Greer took up the cross examination.

Under questioning witness replied that he worked as a laborer, and had resided in California for 28 years. He had worked for accused for just a little over one year. Vermilyea had paid him an average of 40 cents per hour for 8 hours work. He had seldom conversed with Vermilyea and had little friendly relationship with him.

Said Accused Wrote Slip

A slip of paper was handed witness. "Mr. Vermilyea left gone north and wrote Ontario for a couple of days."

"I suggest witness that you can't read," charged Col. Grier.

The slip of paper was handed to the jury. It was handed back again and re-read by witness.

"I suggest that you can't read; that that is not what the note contains," pursued Col. Grier.

"Do you say Mr. Vermilyea wrote this letter and handed it to you?"

Not Good Speller

"Put your glasses on and read this," invited Col. Greer handing witness a second note. An address was read. "Mr. Vermilyea left," spell out one name, witness admitted. He was a "very poor speller." Witness appeared embarrassed.

Col. Greer shifted his attention to the note containing a list of names, of "Clarence", "Arthur", 'Mother', 'Helen' and 'Bert'. If a telegram was received from any one of these it was to be answered by witness.

Chief Locke of the Ontario, California force was shown this slip of names when a call was

Medical And Police Evidence Given Early Thursday

CAUSE OF DEATH

Constable is Questioned as to Light Near Scene

Maintaining the same stoical calmness and composure he exhibited, the accused sat hunched up in the chair, feet on the side rails of the dock, chin resting on his hand, with head to the floor ahead of him. His back was toward the witness stand and the jury and not once did he glance around to observe proceedings.

He was dressed in the same brown suit as on Wednesday.

Police, Medical Testimony

Most of the forenoon was given over to the questioning of Constable C. Arnold, Plain Clothes Officer F. A. Isard, Dr. Geo. H. Stobie and Dr. R. S. Gibson.

The police officers were questioned as to their part in the investigation on the night of the crime. Isard's evidence was interesting because of the fact that he was the first to find the hatchet lying in an old dish pan resting on a pile of broken cement blocks at the rear of Dr. Faulkner's residence. That exhibit, Mr. Hodgins' testimony that the wounds on Mrs. Vermilyea's head and wrist were caused by a tool of the same shape as the head of the hatchet. The hatchet and the head above the right ear were particularly severe and had the appearance of having been struck repeatedly by a heavy tool. Whoever wielded the hatchet did so in such a savage manner as to expose brain tissue and a considerable section of skull bone well into the brain. Such extensive brain injury was the cause of death which occurred the next day after the attack at ten in the morning.

Constable Arnold was questioned closely as to whether he could see a group of people standing on the front lawn of Dr. Faulkner's as he was standing when he got out of the police car. Arnold stated that he was not sufficient to recognize any one at that distance and that he was unable to do until he was within about six feet of the group. The night was one of considerable degree of darkness in which there was no moon.

Witness From Coast

The first witness from the Western coast was Mrs. Ethel Clarke, resides in Ontario, Cal. His evidence was that Vermilyea left with her a sheet of paper, which included a list of names with instructions that if he (Vermilyea) should not send one of these people he was to reply with the address. Vermilyea went up the valley yesterday and will be back in a couple days". The names were, Frank Fenny, Jack Smith, Clarence Vermilyea, Arthur Vermilyea, Mother, Mrs. N. Vermilyea Helen or Bert (Mrs. and Dr. Faulkner).

When Vermilyea returned after his absence he asked witness how things here don't look so bright"? "Things here about look so bright"? Vermilyea exclaimed, "Oh, My God!" Just after this, Vermilyea was arrested by Chief Locke. Swayne also related that he had worked for the accused just one day, two years before. Col. Greer then asked that the witness could not read Vermilyea's writing, to which witness stated that Vermilyea made no attempt to recover the list of names which was turned over to Inspector Gardner on his arrival there.

Court recessed at 1.15 p.m. for lunch.

CRITICALLY BURNED

Alexandria, Ont., Feb. 14 (CP)—Failing asleep while smoking a cigarette, Donald Cameron, 70, farmer living near this town, was severely burned about the body before the cigaret dropped from his hand and ignited the couch on which he was lying. His screams of agony brought others in the house to his assistance. The blazing couch was moved outside before any damage was done to the house.

Willard was taken to hospital in Cornwall where little hope was held out for his recovery.

Swears Man Signing as 'Carter' on Sept. 30 Resembled Accused

Wallace Parker, clerk of the Walker House, Toronto, employed in that capacity . r 21 years, was the first witness called on Thursday afternoon when the trial of Harold W. Vermilyea was resumed.

Parker said he first saw "accused" at four o'clock Sunday afternoon, Sept., 1934. At that time witness was on desk duty and witnessed "accused" sign the hotel register, he testified.

He registered under the name of E. P. Carter, Aberdeen, Washington," said the witness firmly.

2 Boys on Fence Rail Raft Caught in Ice at Wellington Rescued Trying to Reach U.S

Henry Vardy, 16, and Charles Weaver, 12, rescued from a break-up raft in the ice floes at Wellington late Wednesday afternoon arrived back at the Children's Shelter, Belleville, this morning in charge of C. R. Ingram, constable, and Steve Greer.

They were not suffering from their exposure," said Miss Harris, matron today. "Charlie seems to have a cold, but is otherwise all right. I understand he got wet, Henry is not suffering."

"The raft on which the boys were endeavoring to escape is to become icy and was on the point of breaking up, when help reached the pair. An airplane from the airport at Trenton which was sent to the scene to spot aspect when the plight of the boys was discovered, turned over to the boys a line and dropped blankets with which the boys, Sgt. Arthur Ferguson and Murphy, of Wellington wrapped themselves.

On arrival here the boys expressed wonder at their escape.

Vardy has been for many years an inmate of the Shelter. He has run away from many places ten or eleven, and he knows Officer Edward well, is is said.

"The boys were in bed at ten o'clock Sunday night," said Miss Harris. "I think they left about seven o'clock that night and went down the fire escape which opens from the end of their room. They took their usual clothes. I imagine they went across the ice to get over to Prince Edward shore and then made their way to Wellington."

Wellington, Ontario, Feb. 13.—(CP)—Marooned 24 hours on an ice floe in Lake Ontario, most of the time with nothing but carrots and dried corn to eat, two boys who ran away from the Children's Shelter at Belleville late on Sunday night and tried to reach the United States on a raft of fence rails, were rescued from their ice-shore at Wellington last night.

The boys, Charles Weaver, 12, and Henry Vardy, 16, embarked in reply on ::eir raft, made of fence-rails bound with wire, and using planks as paddles, hail a mile along the shore from the village on that night. Neither had an overcoat and their food supply consisted only of carrots and dried corn, they had taken from a farmer's barn.

They were first seen when

Mr. Urquhart took up re-examination.

Could you identify this coat you spoke of? A. I believe so.

The coat was produced, but brought up some question of its admissibility as an exhibit at this time. Mr. Urquhart withdrew it after his examination. Witness became entangled in his testimony regarding his ability to "swear," to the color of the clothing. Justice Jeffrey explained to the jury. The witness was dismissed.

Sale of Similar Hatchet

James Sinclair, a salesman in the hardware department of the J. B. Simpson next witness when shown a hatchet as an exhibit replied that it was of the same type as that sold by the store.

On Oct. 2nd, he related a hatchet of the same type was sold a "gentleman."

Mr. Urquhart: Can you recognize that gentleman?

After a moment's scrutiny in the faces of the prisoner's dock he can recognize a man in the rogue's gallery as that man:

"Where?". A. "Sitting over there!" Witness nodded in the direction of accused.

Yes."

The point of whether the conversation between the purchaser and seller of the hatchet should be allowed in court was debated by defence and prosecution. At the suggestion of the defence, the jury retired from the room, while the matter was threshed out.

Col. Greer objected to any statements from the hardware clerk witness except those which concerned general remarks not detrimental to the accused. The objection was sustained by the Bench.

Defence and prosecution still debated the point at press time. The jury had then not returned.

ANGUISH PASSES AS DAWN COMES TO HAUPTMANN

Fitful Sleep Falls on German Carpenter in His Cell

BREAKFAST EATEN

Condemned Man Will Shortly be Taken to Trenton, N.J.

[By James Y. Lawrence]

Flemington, N.J., Feb. 14 (AP)—Bruno Richard Hauptmann, with a sentence of death lying upon him for the kidnap and fatal slayer in his Hunterdon County jail quarters, today faced the prospect that the electric carpenter gave way after the jury of Hunterdon County plain folk pronounced him the Lindbergh baby murderer. Dawn found him approached and he stretched himself upon his cell cot in slumber.

At the customary breakfast hour he was awakened by his guards and ate calmed, bread and coffee. Then he lay back again, silent and depressed, in somne his rest.

Sometime, within a few hours or a few days, as Sheriff John R. Curtis and Appeals, meets for its next term late in May, the Court of Pardons will not hear it before October.

The prisoner, who sentenced him showed more emotion than did Hauptmann, was stood before them at 10.45 p.m. last night.

Speaks to Wife

With a look of affection the 36-year-old prisoner turned to his faithful wife and said:

"It's all right, Annie."

The jurors required more than 11 hours to reach their verdict. They were closely guarded after the case ended but a courthouse report was that the first ballot of the jurors had held out for a recommendation of mercy. That would have meant a life sentence. There was no indication of mercy, when the jury was polled.

With stuttering words Foreman Charles Walton announced the verdict. He who had listened to the evidence for more than six weeks and studied the circumstantial maze in his fight to remain calm.

Totters Slightly

"Guilty," he announced. "We find the defendant, Bruno Richard Hauptmann, guilty of murder, in the first degree."

An insignificant piece of paper rustled in his trembling hands. He glanced at the paper, then closed his eyes in pretense of consulting it.

A few others, a way stood Hauptmann, jaw set, head up, pale and haggard it was ghastly in the electric light. Slowly he turned his head slightly as he heard the foreman's words.

So ended the long Lindbergh kidnap trial. It began in Flemington Jane, Hopewell, the night of March 1, 1932, when the wind was howling over the lonely Sourland Mountain on which Col. Charles A. Lindbergh made his home. It ended in a prosaic, rural courtroom littered with papers and cigarette stubs.

Thirteen Times

Thirteen times the death-dealing verdict was recited, on the 13th day of the sensational case.

After Walton had made the decision the court clerk asked:

Members of the jury, you have heard the verdict, that you find Bruno Richard Hauptmann, guilty of Hauptmann, guilty of murder in the first degree, and so say you all?

"We do."

Justice Trenchard was the personification of judicial decorum.

Turning to Attorney General David T. Wilents he said:

"It seems to the court, that there is nothing remaining except to impose the sentence provided by the statute and I am, now asking the Attorney General if he moves the sentence."

Wilents, pale, unsteady his lips.

Flemington, N.J., Feb. 14.—(AP) Bruno Richard Hauptmann, convicted of killing the Lindbergh baby, but his fatal dreads today a fight through high courts, which may last months. Prison officials mobilized with judge and jury to fix the night of March 22, as the tentative date for Hauptmann's electrocution.

He was sentenced to "suffer death" the week of March 18, and Friday is doomday in the death house at Trenton.

While Hauptmann wept in his cell, Edward J. Reilly, Chief of the Defence Staff, said an appeal would be carried to the United States Supreme Court if necessary.

The first tribunal expected to hear the pleas, the State Court of Errors and Appeals, meets for its next term late in May. The Court of Pardons will not hear it before October.

Hauptmann Summary

(By the Associated Press)

Bruno Richard Hauptmann was convicted at Flemington, N.J., last night of the murder of Charles Augustus Lindbergh, Jr., and sentenced to die in the electric chair the week of March 18. The jury was out 11 hours and 22 minutes.

Defence Counsel said the case would be carried to the Supreme Court of the United States if necessary. If all possible methods of delay are used the sentence is ultimately upheld, Hauptmann may not be put to death until October.

Hauptmann listened, when sentence was pronounced and cried after being returned to his cell, His wife was.

The defendant's mother, Frau Pauline Hauptmann who lives at Kamens, Saxony, Germany, wrote President Roosevelt a letter begging him to be "merciful".

Colonel and Mrs. Charles A. Lindbergh made no comment on the verdict. Also silent were Dr. John F. Condon, ransom intermediary, and Mrs. Dwight Morrow. The child's grandmother, who were prosecution witnesses.

Attorney-General David T. Wilentz, of the prosecution staff, praised the jurors, saying: "The nation, its individuals, their property, owes men and women." In Washington Chairman Summers of the House Judiciary Committee said: "Any other verdict would have been a reflection on the ability of the American people to govern themselves."

The mother of Betty Gow, former Lindbergh nursemaid, told a London paper that the verdict "vindicated Betty from the attacks made on her."

"Americans are asking the question, 'Hauptmann in the electric chair and How did he get there?'"

TO BEGIN COURSE IN NUTRITION

Red Cross Project Teaches How to Budget Food Expenses

To plan and prepare meals with the most nutritious value for a limited amount of money is the most important problem facing many home-makers today and the need of expert advice is often felt. How many mothers have not wondered if their meals could not be more nourishing, and the cost as low if they only knew the proper combinations, the economical cuts of meat, the correct manner of preparing inexpensive dishes in an appetizing manner. For those who wish to make a worthwhile study of this problem a means is now available.... a course in Nutrition is being organized by the Red Cross Society and will get under way starting tomorrow at John Street Church Hall at two-thirty p.m. under the direction of the Red Cross Society. All who are interested will be made welcome and are promised an interesting and valuable course.

Miss Margaret McCready, supervisor of the Ontario Red Cross Nutrition Service will be present at the meeting tomorrow and will outline the course of cooking classes which will be followed. These classes have met with splendid success in the many communities in which they have been organized, several cities holding them year after year. as more groups are interested. The course is issued by the Red Cross and is the result of careful study and research in that those who have to budget their food expenses very carefully will be assured of expert counsel.

A local dietician will be in charge of the course and will demonstrate the manner of carrying out the meals suggested in the lectures. Those who attend will be asked at the many new ideas that will be presented to them, for prizes, clothing, old clothes, rags and for utilizing foods whose high nutritive value was perhaps unknown.

Full details of the course will be outlined tomorrow afternoon and it is hoped that there will be a large attendance at the initial gathering.

ORANGE MEMBERS FIGHT EXTENSION OF SCHOOL TAXES

Hepburn Says Question Will be Decided Without Political Bias

Toronto, Feb. 14 (CP)—Question of legislative action to assess Ontario Separate schools for the support of corporation and utility taxes bill will be discussed at a caucus of members of the Ontario government, and the government supporters, it was "covered by any proposals," in the meantime, Premier Mitchell F. Hepburn declared today before a deputation which came to Queen's Park to protest against any move in this direction.

Headed by representatives of the Grand Orange Lodge of British North America and the executives of the Grand Lodge of Ontario West and the Grand Lodge of Ontario East the delegation, nearly 200 strong, met the entire Provincial cabinet and lodged a protest against any concessions to Separate Schools.

Present also were representatives from school boards throughout Ontario, Leading cities from Ottawa to the East to Fort William in the Northwest were represented. Members of various Protestant organizations and the clergy of Protestant denominations were also included in the delegation.

Premier Refers to Members

"We're not impressed at all by the numerical strength of this deputation, although we welcome you," the Premier said after C. M. Carrie of Toronto, chairman of the Legislative Committee of the Grand Orange Lodge of Ontario West had presented the case for Public Schools.

"Had you brought only 20 the effect would have been just the same," Mr. Hepburn added.

"Government is a very busy preparing for the opening of the session and he can make no announcement of policy, Mr. Hepburn said, but the government intends to study seriously the question of taxes in Quebec and discuss the whole question in caucus.

Political Reference

Mr. Hepburn told the delegation while he is a Protestant, and a Mason he has no religious bias and cannot be called the champion of starting a religious feud in Ontario.

"I know that personally you have leaned pretty well in one direction" he said, and was answered by cries of "No."

A month ago representatives of the Roman Catholic Taxpayers' Association met the Cabinet and presented a brief showing why they should be given a share of corporation and utility taxes in Ontario. After the meeting Mr. Hepburn said an opportunity would be given the opposition to state its case.

No Protestant denomination in Ontario has the same privilege of the Roman Catholic Separate Schools said Mr. Carrie. He insisted Roman Catholic Separate Schools were not granted to the schools but to individuals who chose to attend them.

Claims Systems Differ

The two systems of schools are basically not alike, he said.

Mr. Carrie said the Separate School Act of 1863 was accepted by all parties concerned and agreed upon as a final settlement of the sectarian controversy.

Despite the finality of this Act, Ontario has been more than generous to Separate Schools and passed various amendments from time to time, he said.

Referring to Premier Hipburn's statement the Separate Schools in Ontario are asking only the same privileges as Protestant Schools in Quebec, Carrie said the situation is entirely different.

Quebec is the only Province in Canada without Public Schools, Carrie said, adding, there is no common school system in Quebec. "Protestant Dissenting Schools are a necessity, not a privilege," he said.

Even if a company in Quebec is 100 percent Protestant, stated it has no right to direct a portion of taxes to Protestant Schools, he stated.

The Legislature has not the power or to direct Protestant taxes to Separate Schools, he said.

Paying over part of taxes to Separate Schools would be a state subsidy, Carrie insisted.

"Those with separate schools should be asked to pay for them themselves," he said.

If the Separate schools have any legal or constitutional grievance they should take action on the courts long ago, without demanding new legislation, he said.

Most of the leading clergy in Roman Catholic Church in Canada received their education in public schools, Mr. Carrie continued.

Estimate In Money

He said the Roman Catholic Schools stand to gain much from their demands. One authority estimated it would mean millions. This, Mr. Carrie said, would come from the public schools.

"Does it seem strange then that as custodians of a great trust we are defending the common school system of the province?" he asked.

"Protestant women must not be used to teach Roman Catholic Catechism," he declared.

There is a growing feeling in Ontario the solution will be a National School for everyone, Carrie said. He said the delegation therefore looked to the day when divisions would be unknown.

Hepburn, Mr. Hepburn said the delegation would realize the government is very busy and he would make no statement of policy today. "I don't agree with everything that has been said but I listened to your views with interest," he stated.

The premier said he has no religious bias of any kind and added "It would be a most unfortunate to start a religious feud at the present time," he said.

Careful Study Promised

The government is going to make a careful study of the Assembly School Act in Quebec, he announced.

It should be the privilege of Roman Catholics to teach religion in their schools, if, however, Separate Schools were to be abolished students there would look for accommodation in public schools and he didn't know what this would cost.

The Premier believed, however, Separate Schools supporters might been forced to bear more than a fair share of Separate School costs.

"We're not impressed at all by the numerical strength of the delegation although we welcome you," the Premier said, adding "had you brought only ten the effect would have been just the same.

"We know that politically you have leaned pretty well in one direction," he told the delegation. Cries of "No" greeted the statement.

The Premier said the matter would be judged without religious bias and the government would not be cowed by any propaganda.

The entire question will be discussed at caucus of Liberal members.

PROFESSOR HUNT DESCRIBES HOW BLOWS SOUNDED

Pounds Judge's Desk With Clenched Fist to Show Court

TESTIMONY DRAGS

Extreme Nervousness of Accused Early in Trial Passes

Methodically pounding the Judge's desk, Professor V. P. Hunt graphically described the blows struck as he heard them from a few feet, where a murder took place and for which Harold W. Vermilyea has been placed on trial—at the Tuesday afternoon session of the Supreme Court, convened in this city before Hon. Justice Hoyt Jeffrey. The afternoon session of the court was drawn with much detail being involved especially in the placing of street lights and amount of light they shed in their particular area. Two or three verbal clashes occurred between the Bench and Counsel but in the main the trial moved slowly along and it is fully expected the trial will last at least ten days and possibly longer.

The accused continued to fail in his attention in the prisoner's dock sometimes with arms folded....and eyes closed and the extreme nervousness that he exhibited, when he first entered the court has entirely disappeared. He expressed little fear of the verdict and stated he would not like to be sent to prison at Collforis. Interest in the case is continuing at fever heat and each session counts there is a large crowd waiting to enter the courtroom to hear the evidence. A small percentage of those seeking admission are women.

Professor Hunt was the chief witness of the afternoon and he told of hearing a disturbance in the Faulkner lawn, which he characterized as a "scrap" and was questioned by Col. Greer, that might mean the exchanging of blows, he qualified it more as a disturbance. He was sure that more than "four blows" were struck and being asked to describe the sound pounded slowly on the judge's desk with his clenched fist. He testified that it was quite dark where the offence was committed and that he only heard the voice of a man and that the voice sounded "angry". The court adjourned for the day at six o'clock.

Woman Wore Dark Clothes

Cross-examined by Col. Greer, Mr. Smith said the woman was wearing dark clothes and may have made it more difficult to distinguish the body. Some time was taken up by defence counsel on the type of light used at street lamps in that section and the witness admitted the street was not a busy street but that it was not a well-lighted street. The witness also stated that the injuries were terrible and that the wrist was cut in two places. At that point Mrs. Faulkner remarked "That is my mother," said witness.

Justice Jeffrey: "Did you go back for the flashlight?

A—There was not sufficient light.

Justice Jeffrey—If someone had committed that assault is there an egress without coming out to the sidewalk?

A—I have been told so.

Corroboration Given

W. E. Burrows, the next witness, corroborated the evidence of the former witness.

Q. Did you recognize the object? A. Yes, and bending closer noticed she was breathing.

Q. How did you not see this object until eight feet from it. A. It was quite dark in that particular area.

Q. Was the light over the surgery in? A. No.

Q. Does a change of light make any difference to your sight? asked Mr. Greer. A. Probably to a very small degree.

John Donovan, surveyor, was called to the stand and said the light pole was twelve feet and it was walk leading to the Faulkner residence and 96 feet to the surgery and 198 feet west. The diagonal distance from the pole to the office door is 199 feet 6 inches. Towards the east there is a pole 200 feet. The shrubbery extends 55 feet from the sidewalk.

Shrubbery Four Feet High.

The witnesses gave a description of the shrubbery stating it ranged in height from four feet to five feet six inches with the highest slopes towards the office door.

Mr. V. P. Hunt was the next witness.

Q. Do you recall the night of Oct. 18th? A. I do.

The witness stated he left Bridge Street Church after choir practice and was standing on the lawn of his home when he heard some shouting and screaming.

Q. Did anything occur? A. I heard a disturbance on the Faulkner lawn.

Q. What was the condition. A. It was dark. At first I thought two people were having a scrap. There were from four to eight blows.

Q. Did you hear a voice. A. A man's voice—it sounded angry.

Q. Did you distinguish the voice? A. No.

Q. What did you then see? A. A man running towards the rear of Dr. Faulkner's residence.

Feet Appeared From Noise.

Q. Are there any fences? A. No, and I could not follow him with my eye.

Q. How far were you from the disturbance? A. About 40 feet.

Q. What did you hear? A. Groaning as if someone in distress. I went over and saw a form lying on the ground. I could not see it. I could not tell whether it was a man or woman. The person was breathing heavily. Thinking I could do nothing. I went to my home and telephoned to the police. Later returning to the scene. Soon others gathered and I went home. Later till the police arrived and I directed Constable Arnott to the scene.

Q. What happened then? A. Mrs. Faulkner came down and the body was taken to the surgery.

Q. What was your impression of what the voice said? asked Justice Jeffrey. A. It might have been "take that" or "there now"; the voice sounded quite angry.

Q. Did you hear anything else. A. Yes, I heard a sound of something being dropped and I directed officer Izard to where I heard a sound and he returned with a hatchet.

Hatchet Produced.

The hatchet was produced in court and was identified as a similar one to the one shown the witness by the officer.

Cross examined by Col. Greer, the witness said there was no light in surgery of Dr. Faulkner but was not sure whether there was a light in the main part of the house.

Q. When you say you heard "a scrap" do you mean an exchange of blows? A. I will withdraw the word "scrap" and say disturbance.

Q. Why did you not see? A. There was no disturbance that intervened, there was no wall that intervened but I could not see the participants through the darkness that enveloped the scene.

Q. Col. Greer asked the witness to exemplify how long a time elapsed between the blows heard and Professor Hunt pounded on the desk in fairly quick time, the blows were quite distinct one from the other.

Q. Did you recognize Mrs. Vermilyea? A. No, her face was "badly battered."

Justice Jeffrey: The woman never spoke? A. No, your lordship.

Court adjourned until 9.30 Thursday.

TERRIER TRYS TO AID FRIEND

"Sandy's" Bark Brings Neighbors to Scene of Tragedy

Something was wrong with his pal. Even "Sandy" a little, two-year old shaggy terrier could recognize that. And as his doggy friend lay that afternoon's brief acquaintance dragged himself from Church Street with a broken leg and other serious internal injuries to the dim alleyway of the Collegiate Institute, "Sandy", owned by Mr. T. Givens, 381 Bleecker Avenue, followed, whining softly and encouraging with a cold and anxious mumble.

A victim of a hit and run driver, his mongrel friend had been left lying on the street as the careering car sped into the night. Now the injured dog crawled painfully away to the darkness to die. "Sandy" too loyal to desert his friend followed, helping as he could.

All that night as the mercury dropped to zero and below, Sandy crouched beside the body of his stricken canine friend. Nuzzling the cold form, he whined continuously, giving voice now and then to a series of sharp barks. But, too loyal to desert, Sandy stayed.

Neighbors, aware of the strange barks investigated. They found a dead dog lying in the alleyway, and a shivering little terrier crouched beside it. Police who were called were met with snarls of defiance as they attempted to end the night long vigil and remove the terrier. Finally through a trick, Sandy was coaxed away, and his ownership traced through the dog tag hanging on a line around its neck. Mr. Givens and a neighbor of that section of the city were paying tribute to the loyalty and bit-heartedness of a shaggy-haired little terrier who remained true even in death.

ALLEGE RACKET TO CHEAT JOBLESS

Public Bodies Head Off Effort to Victimize Man

Toronto, Feb. 14—(CP)—Co-operation by the Ontario Employment Service and the Ontario Securities Commission, headed off an alleged racket by which unemployed were to have been victimized to the extent of $125 each. Action followed an investigation by H. C. Hudson, head of the Employment Service, following receipt of complaints from one of the men who answered advertisements addressed to unemployed.

The advertisements were said to have promised the men a return of between $800 and $1,000 before spring in return for the "modest investment." The money was to be used for the purchase of four gill nets for fishing through the ice of James Bay. The men who were to provide their own outfits and transportation to Moosonee were to receive four cents a pound for their catch and pay $4 a week for their board.

Transportation from the base camp to the fishing grounds was to be by truck over the ice in winter and by boat during the spring and summer months.

ELIMINATE LEVEL CROSSINGS ASKED

Funds May be Available For This Work House is Told

OTTAWA, Feb. 14—(CP) — Increased funds may be made available this year for elimination of level crossings, the House of Commons was told yesterday when it debated ways and means of introducing the death toll from motor accidents. Hon. R. J. Manion, Minister of Railways and Canals, said the Government was considering an increase in the grant to the grade separation Fund, which is administered by the Board of Railway Commissioners to assist in elimination of level crossings.

It was a resolution proposed by T. L. Church, (Ops. Toronto East) which led to the discussion. Mr. Church wanted an investigation of the problem with a view to new Federal Legislation and changes in the Criminal Code. He described the present situation as a disgrace to a Christian Country and said it amounted to wholesale manslaughter.

While members from all parties were agreed as to the seriousness of the problem there was little agreement as to means of dealing with it. Some thought heavier penalties should be imposed but Hon. Hugh Guthrie Minister of Justice said heavier penalties had been imposed in England and in some parts of United States but accidents had still increased.

Level Crossings Attacked

Level crossings, it was admitted, were responsible for part of the accident toll and their elimination was pressed as one feature way of reducing it. 'There was considerable support for the view, that Quebec be requiring all motor vehicles to come to a full stop at all level crossings should be adopted by other provinces.

Mr. Guthrie said he could see little purpose in sending the resolution to a committee of the House. He promised careful consideration to any concrete suggestions offered as to amendments to the Criminal Code. Mr. Church withdrew the resolution, while suggesting that the Government procure enactment of code amendments proposed by the Chief Constables' Association. He also urged the Government consider having some government body make a comprehensive survey so that a complete report could be made to the next session of parliament.

Removal of all tariffs on Agricultural implements was urged by Hon. Charles Stewart (Lib., Edmonton West), in a resolution which he did not press to a vote. Hon. E. N. Rhodes, Minister of Finance, maintained it was undesirable to discuss such changes in tariff schedules, negotiations looking to a trade agreement with United States were in progress.

Bruno's Mother Will Appeal to The President

By RUDOLF JOSTEN
(Copyright 1935, by The Associated Press)

Kamenz, Germany, Feb. 14 (AP) —Frau Pauline Hauptmann, heartbroken and sobbing, appealed today to President Roosevelt to save her son Bruno from the electric chair.

"He will help an old mother," she said and sat down at once to write the United States President a letter.

In it she said the President's failure to pardon Hauptmann would mean her own death, "I beg you to be merciful to him," she said.

A despairing cry, "I cannot survive it," was the first reaction of Frau Hauptmann when she learned her son had been sentenced to death for the Lindbergh baby murder.

"Is there no God in Heaven?" she sobbed, covering her face with her hands.

"I've hoped in vain all these months and now this terrible end."

For a moment the 66-year-old mother stood erect, her face chalklike, her body quivering. Then with an air of one in a dream, tears streaming down her cheeks and her head leaning against a wall, she murmured:

"I am dying with him. Has the world forgotten a lonesome old mother?"

With an effort to shake off her first bewilderment, Frau Hauptmann read a telegram delivered from Flemington.

"Don't worry," is read, "nothing only temporary. Bruno."

The message, written in English, was translated for Frau Hauptmann by the Associated Press correspondent.

"Thank God!" Frau Hauptmann exclaimed. "If I could only help Bruno in bearing his burden. This telegram gives me some peace again."

MRS. HAUPTMANN STILL HAS HOPES

Flemington, N.J., Feb. 14 — Mrs. Anna Hauptmann last night heard her husband sentenced to death in the electric chair, and said, "There is nothing left for me."

Lloyd Fisher, of Hauptmann's defense counsel, put an arm around her shoulders as tears rolled down her cheeks for the first time since his trial began.

"See here" said Fisher, gently, "you know, Dont show any emotion here. Don't show anything."

Mrs. Hauptmann fought to regain her composure, but her chin still quivered. Then Fisher said, "Mrs. Hauptmann, we'll see this thing through."

Back from 'Death'

Will Rogers is doubtful of "these old boys that's claimed they have been dead and then come back to life, they seem to be getting all the play in the newspapers. The fellow in England claimed he got to Heaven and that it was great and he is sorry they revived him. Well, it's not much trouble to get him dead again. A little street crossing without being alert will do the job."

Then Rogers goes on to remark that an old boy out in Hollywood claimed to have been dead for 22 minutes and he says he was glad to be alive again. Will thinks at first it is an ad for Hollywood or "coming from where he does," he might have got in the wrong place.

Will Rogers was human enough to know that he was touching on a subject of the greatest attraction to man. Whether man is drenched in the activities of life or is lying on a sick bed thinking of the after-life, that "state" beyond cannot but appeal to him. The reviving of men supposed to be dead is just an incident in the great story of human yearning about the hereafter.

The English story of the man who saw his old neighbors when he was "dead" before the doctors revived him by kneading his heart is accepted by some as proof. Conan Doyle, widow, and Denis Doyle, son of the famous spiritualist, the late Sir Arthur Conan Doyle, accepted the view given by John Dickering. Denis Doyle says, "His statement that he no longer fears death, and even regretted returning to life, entirely bears out messages we have received from father and others."

While Puckering lives quietly with his daughter in Birmingham "and does not accept the limelight, he is happy to be a normal in a case where a heart stopped for five minutes. It is a delight, he says, be a record but not a phenomenon. He believes the revelation that the gardener Puckering had was like the revelation many people have in moments of crisis.

Probably in the same class are life death-bed visions of which so many families keep sacred records in their hearts.

The question of return to life from death revolves on the assumption that the man was dead. But what does death mean? More cessation of the heart beat? Or does it mean the destruction which sets in after death as destruction of brain tissue and later of other tissue? Some months ago a dog was killed alive after it had been pronounced dead and was revived, but scientists claimed that this dog had never recovered its brain power as there were evidences that a part of the brain had started to degenerate before the reviving.

There is the other question of whether a person brought back from death could tell with mortal tongue which is just tissue and muscle under control of brain tissue, "what went on" while the man outside this breathing life. The story of Lazarus brought back after having been days in the tomb does not give a single word of information as it happened "beyond the pale." The very fact that the Gospel record does not tell what occurred in the spirit world from which Christ brought back would seem to be more scientific than the gardener's story in England, in which Puckering defined the bliss of "Heaven like" as "just peaceful." The Scripture story however, does suggest rejoicing of Lazarus and his friends after his return from the grave.

But this controversy will go on forever. It is in the nature of things that man should yearn for a glimpse of that "land" but it is the quality of life to shut out that vision except in a very vague way. Yet man will go on and on seeking to penetrate the veil, and never quite succeeding, just because he lives.

Canadians Should Visit Own Capital

Patriotic Americans from all over the United States, make a point of visiting Washington at least once and seeing their great national business and it wouldn't be a bad idea if Canadians would follow that example and visit Ottawa, one of the most beautiful cities in the world. Those of us who know the Canadian capital, see nothing extravagant in what Mr. Michael Mahoney, speaking before the Young Men's Club of Montreal recently, said of that city. He calls it the "loveliest and sitelliest of the cities of this continent." Ottawa possesses the first attribute of a great capital—a magnificent natural setting. No other capital on this continent possesses such a noble commanding site, such picturesque surroundings, such bountiful gifts from Nature.

"The Peace Tower," he points out "rises like a giant national sentinel, while the buildings themselves, uprising from a wealth of flower, leaf and lawn, present a picture rich in harmony and grace, but artistically perfect. To view them aright one must stand or sit this magnificent hill on a glorious summer evening when the sinking sun invests them with a halo of mingled gold and fire." That picture is not overdrawn. Canadians need not be ashamed of their national capital, so that it is no more surprising to find so many people who have never visited Ottawa, a place which should be seen and admired by every Canadian.—Niagara Falls Review.

The Spy Craze and Tourists

Amusing stories are told of the spy mania in Japan. It is dangerous for a traveller to carry a camera. A Japanese photographer hired by a tourist to take pictures of the Osaka stock exchange, city hall and other buildings was arrested by a military policeman who conceived that the pictures were for the use of the U. S. navy, in preparation for bombing Osaka from the air. The Japanese press was filled with stories of espionage. A party of plenickers was detained on a similar charge. An American who had spent his life in philanthropic work in Japan, was jailed by the police and deprived of a pastered by the police and deprived of a sailing license for his yacht because he had inadvertently snapped a forbidden zone. Another incident is told by Mr. Hugh Byas in the New York Times Magazine as follows:

A language student of the American Embassy drove around a Tokyo park one hot day with his Japanese teacher. They stopped the car by the banks of the river and sat in it to enjoy the breezes. As reported in the Japanese newspapers, the American had been found trying to see into a munitions factory. All that the American officer could see was the outer walls of an industrial plant, and he did not know munitions were being made there until the morning newspapers told the public that an attache of the American Embassy had been caught trying to spy.

Tourists in Germany are subjected to similar annoyances, sometimes for not showing enough deference to Hitler. Of course a traveller must obey the laws of the country he visits and pay reasonable respect to the sentiments of its people. But if, being quite innocent of spying or international disrespect he must be constantly on his guard for fear of incurring suspicion, he will come to regard travelling in that country as a nuisance and will stay away and choose some country where he can roam about without being constantly under surveillance.—London Advertiser.

Too Many Political Cooks

The luxury of supporting forty-eight State governments in the United States, in addition to a somewhat expensive Federal Government, seems to be proving a little burdensome to the American people. They, in no less than twenty States of the Union, there are serious proposals to cut down the number of legislators. In Michigan and Oregon, the proposals used to reduce the senators and representatives in numbers. In eighteen other States, bills have been presented limiting legislative assemblies to one House.

Towards the end of a long depression, ordinary persons, the world over, have grown impatient, even disgusted with clumsy, costly parliaments filled with partisan politicians eternally making speeches. Their objection to over-government is not on the score of expense alone but also of inefficiency. This weariness with speech-making and political bungling results, in many countries, in the demand for the setting up of one sort or other. Those who are sincerely attached to democratic government, in the British tradition, will have to do more than point with pride to the past benefits of free government if they are to ensure its survival. Parliamentary systems must be made to work and work both economically and efficiently. A multiplicity of governments is a menace to democracy.

More and more of course, it is being felt that we are over-governed in Canada. The Americans may have five times as many governments, but they have more than ten times the population to support them. It would be idle to point an accusing finger southward until we have looked East and West in Canada.—Montreal Star.

Running Out

Every liner that sails from France in these days carries a ton or so of gold. The Olympic is on the way to New York with about two and a half tons of the metal aboard.

As France is not paying its war debt the gold is, no doubt, being exported to square trading accounts, that is to pay for foods France bought abroad and cannot pay for in products.

France is a wealthy country, governed by men who know all there is to know about how to make gold money function. Paying bonuses at home for the production of goods which can't be sold abroad and shipping out gold to pay for imports, is procedure which does not suggest that even the ingenious Frenchmen can make that kind of money serve national ends in these peculiar times.

Unless the world returns to a gold standard, which there is no present prospect of it doing, France seems doomed to depart from gold because gold will have departed from it.—Edmonton Bulletin.

All The World

All the world is going by,
Down this crowded street;
Happy youth, so clear of eye,
Lovers' joy-shod feet.
Here runs wisdom, want and wealth,
Hate and charity;
Pain goes here, and bouyant health,
Pomp and penury.

Here are bitterness and strife,
Problems new and old,
Every phase of changeful life,
Tender hearts and cold.
Here all vital currents move
As when sage and seer
Told of dreams of toil and love,
Many a by-gone year.

There is nothing in a name;
Tucson or Shanghai,
You will find each place the same,
All the world goes by!

MAN WHOSE HEART CEASED TO BEAT, and remained quiescent four and one-half minutes, resuming operation after being massaged by a doctor, says he met a whole lot of happy people, including his wife who died some months before. He claimed to be dissatisfied with being brought back to earth after being to all intents and purposes dead four and one-half minutes. He sure did some travelling in a short time to penetrate the outer gates of the future existence and meet so many people all smiling. There's just a possibility, however, that he was viewing moving pictures planted upon his brain by memories, for it is more than likely that those who claim admittance to the other existence beyond the grave will have to thoroughly satisfy the keepers of the gates that they are thoroughly dead and through with the follies and frivolities of this crazy old world before they are permitted to present their claims for immortality—and it is said that in the land over there one thousand years is as one day, hence four and a half minutes would just be nowhere.

SETH PARKER, otherwise Phillips Lord, and the sailing schooner Seth Parker, somewhere in southern seas, have made the Front Page through getting tangled up in a hurricane and sending out SOS signals. Phillips Lord is well known through radio connection with Seth Parker's neighbors of Jonesport, Maine, a Sunday evening radio sketch, which was a great success. Phillips Lord could take a cruise on a sailing vessel, the ambition of a lifetime. The cruise of the Seth Parker with an occasional broadcast from the ship resulted. Meeting heavy weather down near Tahiti SOS signals were answered by the British warship Australia with a royal prince aboard, the Duke of Gloucester, but when the Seth Parker was overhauled nothing seemed to be the matter and the rescuing ship officers were informed that no help was needed, everything seemed shipshape aboard the Seth Parker and the Australia sailed away with her officers none too pleased with having apparently been led on a "wild goose chase." Twelve hours away another call was heard from the Seth Parker with an intimation that the ship might have to be abandoned, also a request to be towed by the Australia to the nearest port. Looks as though Seth will have some explaining to do, for the British Navy isn't just the best institution to try and joke with—if it develops that the Seth Parker was in no need of assistance.

FOUR MILLION DOLLARS bulged the Provincial money chest as the result of the edict that motor licenses must be paid by February 1. Many motorists did not take out licenses preferring to lay their cars up for the time being and use the money otherwise. Sidelight Fan suggests that February is wrong time to insist upon motor licenses being taken out. Folks, says he, have hardly recovered from Christmas spending and are kept busy keeping the coal bin filled. Taking that four million out of circulation for government purposes means that general trade will be deprived of the opportunity of profitting by that amount of circulating cash; while motor car owners who put their cars up until spring are also practically withdrawn from circulation with their trading possibilities.

FACTS WORTH NOTING ABOUT DIPHTHERIA

It is Wise to be Immunized Against Diphtheria

By Louis E. Bisch, M.D., Ph.D.
Famous Authority on Health and Psychology.

(Copyright, 1935, King Features Syndicate, Inc.)

Not every mother knows that a child can now be protected against the ravages of diphtheria for a period of years. If every parent realized this startling scientific fact, and acted upon it, diphtheria could surely be wiped out completely.

The marvelous protective agent against diphtheria is toxin-antitoxin. For complete immunity all that is necessary is the injection of small doses under the skin, once a week, for a period of three weeks!

Usually it takes from two to seven days for the symptoms of diphtheria to manifest themselves after a child has been exposed to the germs. For, of course, diphtheria is contagious and can readily be transmitted from one child or adult to another.

The child usually complains at first of a chilly sensation and lowing. An examination of the throat at this time reveals a reddish appearance and swollen sides. Within a few days, also, a small grayish patch of membrance appears on one or both tonsils. Within another day or two this membrance spreads until the entire back of the throat may be covered by it. If a child has this membrane be removed, a bleeding surface is left.

With the throat inflammation, there usually is a swelling of the glands in the neck. In fact, the centre threat may become enlarged to such a degree that the child not only cannot swallow but cannot even breathe properly. It is at this stage that the patient suffers most acutely, and there are cases recorded of suffocation. Is treated and a tube must be inserted into the throat to prevent that the child may get oxygen into its lungs.

Death, of course, often occurs in diphtheria. Besides, as complications, there may be pneumonia, valvular leakage and fatty degeneration of the heart and kidney disorders. A convalescence that may persist, even after the acute stages of diphtheria have passed, is paralysis of the palate. In such a case liquids are returned through the nose when an attempt is made to swallow them.

If your child has not had the benefit of toxin-antitoxin, you should be suspicious of any sore throat. Take your child at once to a clinic or to a private doctor, particularly if you can distinguish grayish or dark-yellowish membrane adherent anywhere in the mouth cavity.

In most of the larger cities so-called "diphtheria centers" have been furnished by the health authorities without cost. In the tube you will find a swab, and with this, gently rub the membrane or redness that you see. Then put the swab into the culture material inside the tube, break it up and return the tube to the drug store for the Health Department to analyze. Don't take chances! Protect your child on the road to health by having him immunized against diphtheria.

Dr. Bisch's Daily Diet Hint
Pork should always be thoroughly cooked. Besides, great care should be taken to ascertain that the meat is fresh. Some persons cannot digest pork readily because the fat of pork lies densely packed between the tiny individual meat fibres. Because of this anatomical fact the separation of the fat and protein is difficult in the process of digestion. In beef, the fat lies in separate layers.

MAID OF MIST DAMAGED AGAIN

LOOKING BACKWARD

GLEANINGS FROM OUR FYLES OF BY-GONE YEARS

20 Years Ago

FEB. 14, 1915.

About sixty members and friends of the Baptist Outlook Club of this city spent a very enjoyable time last evening driving to the Sidney Baptist church where they were entertained right royally. The programme was given by the club, Mr. Richmond, pastor of Sidney Church, acted as chairman. Mr. P. C. MacLaurin, M.A., gave an interesting address; Mr. Connell a violin solo accompanied by Mrs. Connell. Vocal solos by Misses Ellis, Larkin and Sharpe; mandolin harp solo by Mr. H. Sharpe; reading by Miss Paice. Miss Cantrell the president in a neat speech thanked those who took part in the programme and the Sidney friends for their hospitality.

Weddings

DEACON—BARLOW

A marriage of much interest to Belleville took place this morning in St. Paul's Methodist Church, corner of 8th Street and West End Avenue, New York, when Ethel Jennie, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. John E. Barlow, became the bride of Mr. Fred Hiles Deacon, son of Mr. W. B. Deacon, also of Belleville. The ceremony was performed by Rev. Dr. Perlman, pastor of St. Paul's Methodist church.

The happy couple had wedding breakfast at the home of the groom's brother, Mr. John W. Deacon and Mrs. Deacon. At twelve o'clock they set sail on the S. S. Washington to spend their honeymoon in France, Switzerland and England. Upon their return in April they will take up residence in Belleville where both are popular members of the city's younger set.

The 24th Psalm was read by Mrs. Chase and the minutes of the last meeting by Mrs. Bell. The members decided to have a pot luck supper for the members and their families, on February 20th at the home of Mrs. Harry Orsatic. After the business part of the meeting was over a Valentine reading was given by Helen Brown. The roll call was an exchange of Valentines. The meeting closed by singing "Blessed Assurance" and the Mizpah benediction. A dainty lunch was served by Mrs. Bell and conveners.

Problem Of 'Tom-Boy' Girl

By LISA GRENELLE

Jane was a sight—in a pair of boys overalls, ragged sweater, stringy hair and dirty face. She straddled a chair like a boy and debated food.

"Jane!" mother cried, "where have you been?"

"Crabbing," said Jane rearing the chair on its hind legs, "we got a dozen—and I'm so hungry, and then following her mother's eye, "Wait, till you see Jimmy."

"But Jimmy's a boy, dear."

"Well it isn't my fault I'm not," Jane retorted.

Father laughed, "You certainly weren't meant to be a girl."

"Have you no vanity, Jane?" mother asked.

"I'm not pretty anyhow, so what's the use—anyway where would prinkers be if we all looked alike—they'd be out of business."

Then the funny part was, Tomboy Jane grew up into a most engaging young woman. Her self confidence was unshaken by her tomboy ways. Her vivacity and grace. A perfect hellion, but loved all the same. She knew every crag, about bay. She had so many pets, dogs, cats, white rats, fish, shoot and play tennis. She was such a good sport, always ready for anything.

Usually a Healthy Sign

It frequently turns out like that. Put a boy in petticoats and he's likely the girl child is more often than not, a healthy, happy child—an unnatural sign. Meaning merely that the child is blessed with super-abundant vitality, courage, initiative. She wants and needs more food for her energies than the conventional girl. So the girl's life still permits. Usually this girl turns out to be a finer and more able and more attractive specimen than the little girl who has from the beginning been compliantly and entirely feminine. She is less inclined to vanity, posing, deceit, smallness and timidity. The tomboy, unless she remains a tomboy too long, is usually equipped to face life. She has to be. The school of ten to thirteen-year-old boys is a hard-boiled school. It demands courage, and no squeals, plenty of initiative, good defense and resource.

Loyalty is encouraged, sentiment, tears, pity and weakness prohibited. Good training for a future mother, don't you think?

On Be Overdone

However, to look at the matter closely. It isn't healthy for a child to rebel too long, and too passionately against a situation that cannot be changed. Jane must sooner or later become reconciled to being a girl. Be a girl she is and must remain. Some congenial companionship must be bestowed. She might be encouraged to take up definite activity actual and healthy pursuits but not uncomplimentary to the feminine state. Some outlet for her energies such as a vital child must have, but they need not continue to be all masculine occupations. When a more feminine girl robs her of her favored male companion it will teach her a lesson.

NEWS BRIEFS AND ODDITIES

Great Barrington, Mass., Feb. 14 (CP)—A method of "birth control" for hens was devised today by William H. Osterhout — but his system is applicable only in winter.
Osterhout, who says his plan is sure-fire, fashions egg-shaped snowballs and places them in the hen's nests.
One sitting on "polar eggs" he said, was usually sufficient cause for the hen to abandon the idea of hatching the eggs and to return to the business of laying them. The only drawback of his system is that snow doesn't fall all-year round.

Madrid, Feb. 14 (CP)—A treasure trove of Carthaginian art, dating back 12,000 years before Christ, was found in North Western Spain today. (The Cantabri, an ancient, warlike people, inhabited Northern Spain).
Juan Cabre, director of the Cuevalle museum, who reported the discovery, termed it "one of the most important finds of many years."
It consists, he said, of color reliefs found in two caves near the town of Saelices, which exhibit the brilliant hues of Cantabrian art. The subject matter includes deer, bison, cats and horses.

Milwaukee, Feb. 14 (CP)—John H. Zabel said young Kelley confessed he gambled with office money.

Calgary, Feb. 14 (CP)—From the past comes the story of early day valentines, that are treasured in the hearts of the leading poet maidens of 1883 before the railway reached Calgary.
Probably brought in from the east by an ox-cart train, a St. Valentine's catalogue was found in a collection of magazines and books sent in a local organization for distribution to relief camps.
The style of 1883 read:

"Love's captive, to thee I my freedom resign," or "I think the pangs, which in my bosom start are but the longing of an aching heart."
Modern 1935:
"Gee, I'm lonesome" or "Is it love, or indigestion."

Current Attractions at Local Theatres

What Local Theatre Managers Have to Say About Current Offerings

AT THE CAPITOL
"Broadway Bill"
Warner Baxter, Myrna Loy In Excellent Comedy-Drama

"Broadway Bill" declared to surpass even "It Happened One Night" opened a three-day engagement at the Capitol Theatre today.
Based upon Mark Hellinger's magazine story, "Broadway Bill" presents the romance of a man and girl, both imbued with the love of horses and a roving nature. Drama, pathos and humour are said to be blended together to make a film which has been hailed as a comedy sensation.
The story offers Warner Baxter in his greatest role since "In Old Arizona" and presents Myrna Loy as a new and intriguing personality.
Most of the action of the picture has for its background the ever interesting excitement, crowds and roar of a racetrack.
Frank Capra, ace director of the industry megaphoned the production and estimated that 16,461 persons, a crowd of a horse had been employed in one capacity or another during seven weeks of production.
Nearly 15,000 served as background in various race-track scenes made at Tanforan, California; the general atmosphere in and out of the studio 950 extras were used; 207 men, women and children were contracted for bits for the entire run of the picture; close to fifty were assigned principal roles.
The remainder of the total was made up of technicians, laborers and employees in general.
The comedy interest in the film is provided largely by Lynne Overman, a sad-faced, pessimistic comedian, who has built up a tremendous screen following with his unique way of building up a comedy sequence to his picture.
Clarence Muse, noted negro actor and composer, also appears in the film and adds another fine performance to his many recent hits.

AT THE BELLE
"Marie Galante"
Notable Cast in Dramatic Moving Story

Reminiscent of the costly and complicated research work which took place for fully a year before "Cavalcade" went into productions, was the minute attention to every detail which marked preparation of "Marie Galante", the Fox Film Production at the Belle today and Friday, matinee and evening.
The singing of lovely Ketti Gallian as its star alone is worthy of comment. For an entire year Winfield Sheehan, who personally supervised the production, searched the world for a young actress with the necessary qualities to play "Marie Galante". When Mr. Sheehan saw Miss Gallian's brilliant performance in "The Ace" on the London stage last year he realized his search had ended. Ketti, an idol of the London stage, has to perfection, it is said, the looks, the temperament, and the ability required for the exacting role.

Notable Hollywood Cast

The next moves were to cast Spencer Tracy, one of the most virile actors in pictures today, as the American hero, opposite Miss Gallian. Tracy's box office prestige has grown enormously during the last year.
The cast of "Marie Galante" calls for a superb character actor to portray an alcohol-crazed European, Mr. Sheehan signed Siegfried Rumann, at the peak of his spectacular stage career on Broadway, and brought him to Hollywood to play this role.
Each member of the strong supporting cast has been chosen with infinite care and after numerous tests.
The next move in this intricate game of "building an epic" was to send author, director, art director and camera crew down to the Canal Zone, where the story has its setting.

Careful Research

Director Henry King, with a private plane at his disposal, made several trips to the Zone and Jack Otterson, head art director at Fox Film studios, accompanied by John Mescall and his camera crew, were away for the best part of two months getting authentic "atmosphere."
Rene Hubert, famous throughout Europe for his flair for designing "different" clothes, was imported to create Mlle Gallian's wardrobe, and that of the other feminine members of the cast.
The farm in Brittany on which the foundling child starts life; the Gironde country, where she becomes a runaway; the South American port with its tawdry cafes and dockside where she is abandoned by her kidnapper; the turbulent atmosphere of the Canal Zone; all are there in remarkable detail.
A notable supporting cast includes Ned Sparks, Helen Morgan, Leslie Fenton, Arthur Byron and Robert Loraine.
Speedy Now Streamline entertainment is offered in "Lottery Lover" the second feature attraction on the same program. Lew Ayres, Peinty "Pat" Patterson and Peggy Fears are featured in this rollicking, tuneful romance. Ben Pallock and his famed orchestra with a cast of popular stage entertainers will also be exhibited.

WEATHER

Toronto, Feb. 14 (CP)—Light rain and sleet have occurred in the region of the Great Lakes though in other districts the weather has been fair. It has been mild in the West and over the greater part of Ontario, but rather cold from the Ottawa Valley eastward.
Lake Ontario: Moderate to fresh southerly to easterly winds; cloudy and mild with some snow or rain.
Lake Superior: Mostly fair and mild; probably some light snow at night.
Manitoba: Mostly fair and comparatively mild.
Saskatchewan and Alberta: Fair and comparatively mild.

Claudette Colbert In "Imitation of Life"

Fannie Hurst Novel One of Best Sellers—at The Belle Saturday

One of the outstanding engagements of the season in local movie theatres will be the appearance at the Belle Theatre Saturday of Claudette Colbert and Warren William in the film version of Fannie Hurst's novel, "Imitation of Life". In support of Miss Colbert will be found Ned Sparks, Warren William, Rochelle Hudson and that precocious child actress Baby Jane, latest rival to the popularity of Shirley Temple.

"Imitation of Life" is a story that comes close to the hearts of many women, being the romance and sacrifice made on a mother's part for the sake of a daughter's happiness. It is also the story of a self-made woman who by her own efforts raised herself from the drudgery of poverty to the heights of financial and social success. However far from being a sad or tragic tale it is both humorous and inspiring. The scenes between Claudette Colbert as the pancake cook in a quick-lunch restaurant, and Ned Sparks, her boss, are exhilaratingly humorous, and this friendship which started through a quarrel lasts with delightful interplay of comedy throughout the picture.

A character which almost steals the show from the principles is that of Aunt Jemima that colored mammy played by Louise Beaver. Even though her skin is black as coal we predict that no one who sees "Imitation of Life" will leave the Belle Theatre without being in love with this great and jolly soul.

During the filming of John M. Stahl's Universal drama, "Imitation of Life" it became necessary to "retake" a certain scene originally photographed a few days before. The scene showed Claudette Colbert in the kitchen of her home, with her colored maid, Louise Beavers, cooking pancakes of batter mixed by the company property man. I'm a good pancake maker in real life," spoke up the dusky Miss Beavers, "and I know that batter was too thin the other day. You let me mix it up this time, and it will be just right."

"Clean as a Hound's Tooth" Says Variety

"Big....clean as a hound's tooth, strong in story, comedy, cast and production value, this production should rate high." That is the opinion of Variety, the screen's fairest and severest critic, in its review of Universal's "Imitation of Life."

This Fannie Hurst best-seller, produced by that master of domestic drama, John M. Stahl, with Claudette Colbert and Warren William as his stars, has fully justified this author's estimate of it. "Imitation of Life" will play this theatre starting Saturday, February 16, and that is a date you cannot afford to miss.

Claudette Colbert as "Bea" Pullman steps into this emotional "Cleopatra" and makes of it the outstanding characterization of her career. Fannie Hurst's intensely modern heroine lives and breathes through Miss Colbert's magic, and you see in her the embodiment of all young womanhood struggling with the problems of love and life to provide a livelihood for herself and baby daughter, and gaining only a low starved existence, an imitation of life.

Warren William plays opposite Miss Colbert as he did in "Cleopatra," and it is a happy combination. Rochelle Hudson, Ned Sparks, Baby Jane, a 3 year old budding star, Louise Beavers, Alan Hale, Henry Armetta and a score of other very well-known players complete the cast.

"Imitation of Life" was last year's best selling novel; it is this year's biggest screen attraction. Claudette Colbert and Warren William, John M. Stahl and Fannie Hurst, are an unbeatable star-director-author combination. Thrill to Hollywood artistry on Saturday, when "Imitation of Life" opens here.

When director John M. Stahl was filming scenes for "Imitation of Life" his new Universal drama starring Claudette Colbert, Snow was falling gently outside the window. "Cor-ee, on, Ned!" said Stahl to Ned Sparks, sad-faced Canadian comedian who plays an important role in the picture. "Don't be so glum just because we have a little snow"! "Don't mind that!" spoke up Miss Colbert. "He'd be just as glum just because we have a little cones...or hundred dollar bills!"

Claudette Colbert is seen as a very energetic and modern young business woman in her latest screen play, "Imitation of Life", John M. Stahl's Universal production adapted from the Fannie Hurst novel. Aunt Jamima Pancake Flour, with its sales mounting to millions of boxes per year is the product which brings fame and fortune to the fascinating Claudette, who is here seen in a role decidedly different from anything she has ever attempted before.

Though he is often mistaken an Englishman, Warren Willi is in reality a product of the sm can Middle West, since he was b in Alkin, Minnesota. William pears in "Imitation of Life," u versal's John M. Stahl produc starring Claudette Colbert.

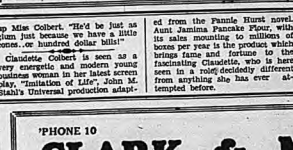
MOVIE STARS' EASY WAY TO MAKE DELICIOUS PANCAKES

CLAUDETTE COLBERT



USE AUNT JEMIMA FOR "OLD PLANTATION FLAVOR"

On the movie lot of "Imitation Of Life", a recent film release, the whole cast discovered the way to make those delicious Aunt Jemima pancakes so much in evidence throughout the picture. Here's their favorite Aunt Jemima formula for pancakes with that "old plantation flavor":

To 2 heaping cups of Aunt Jemima Pancake Flour add 2 cups of milk (or water). Stir until smooth. Bake on hot, greased griddle until surface is covered with bubbles, then turn and bake on other side.

If thin cakes are desired, use 2½ cups of Aunt Jemima to 2 cups of milk or water. For thick cakes, use 2½ cups of Aunt Jemima to 2 cups of milk or water.

Theatgers found that Aunt Jemima Buckwheat cakes are as good as the original Aunt Jemima, too. Aunt Jemima Buckwheat flour just as easy to make—merely use Aunt Jemima Buckwheat Flour and follow the directions given above.

Some notion of the scale on which this film has been produced can be gained from the fact that one single setting cost $10,000. Nothing about this set was extraordinary. The cost came about merely to make the set perfect and authentic.

In all, 48 sets were built for "Imitation of Life". One of these was a complete town house in New York City, containing 15 rooms, a real kitchen and a garden behind it. This garden was sodded with actual grass and flowers were planted there. From the garden a view of the East River was seen in the distance. Model vessels capable of operating under their own power were made for this scene and a small scale replica of the Fifty-ninth Street Bridge was erected in the background. A system of tiny moving electric lights in procession across the bridge indicating traffic in the night scene shot in the garden was effective.

Absolute realism was insisted on for this production. In the early sequences, Claudette Colbert operates a restaurant, specializing in flapjacks. For the week spent in shooting this sequence, a tank of real pancake batter was mixed, cooked and eaten every day. The daily cost of the food used in this restaurant, bread, butter, tea, coffee, doughnuts, cake and pie was amazing. A replica of the famous Atlantic City Boardwalk was built extending over 250 feet and furnished with shops and booths.

An apartment furnished in modernistic style was built for Warren William's home and the New York town house which was Miss Colbert's home was furnished in every room in Adam style from fireplaces to picture mouldings. A deep sea fishing expedition was outfitted to bring in a collection of rare fish to stock nine small aquariums in the setting representing Warren William's study. William is a marine scientist in the picture. This expedition was out of sight of land for five weeks. A fishing ship had to be chartered for this voyage. Tank trucks were hired and filled with sea water to bring the fish to the studio in their own element. The setting itself beyond all this initial expense, cost upward of $10,000 to outfit, with its plate glass tanks and sheet iron reservoirs from which they were refilled.

All in all, "Imitation of Life" ranks among the most sumptuous production ever made. This was not extravagance by economy. Fannie Hurst in "Imitation of Life" wrote a magnificent story. Universal has strained every nerve to make it a magnificent picture in a magnificent setting.

USES AUNT JEMIMA PANCAKE FLOUR TO MAKE DATE AND NUT BREAD

Claudette Colbert, lovely film star, puts Aunt Jemima Pancake Flour to a new use in making that old favorite of holiday feasts—date and nut bread. Here's her pet recipe, using Aunt Jemima's to insure a tastier, more appetizing treat:

Mix 2 cups of Aunt Jemima Pancake Flour with ½ cup of chopped nuts, ½ cup of cereal, chopped dates, and ½ tablespoon of brown sugar. Add 1 cup of milk and 2 tablespoons of molasses. Stir well. Bake in greased loaf pans about 45 minutes in a moderate oven.

Miss Colbert knows all about Aunt Jemima Pancake Flour, since her latest picture, "Imitation of Life," called on her to make hundreds of pancakes. She soon discovered that nothing can beat the Aunt Jemima "old plantation flavor," and she passes on to you this one way of adding that "extra something" to your date and nut bread.

Tweed Conservatives Elect Edgar W. Jones President

Joint Meeting Held With Hungerford Association

Tweed, Feb. 14—New officers were elected for the Tweed and Hungerford Conservatives at their annual meeting held in Tweed auditorium on Monday evening. The attendance despite the cold weather was splendid and marked interest was evidenced by the audience which contained a large number of the fair sex who manifested a considerable interest in the proceedings. Marlbank, Roslin, Moneymore and other nearby places were well represented.

Separate meetings of the two organizations were held prior to the general gathering for the election of officers. Mr. Edgar W. Jones was chosen as President of the Tweed Association to succeed Mr. C. Ed. Weir who was the first famous choice of the meeting. Other officers named were: Vice Presidents, Mrs. Robert Rhodes, Secretary, C. R. Brown, Treasurer, F. B. Asher, Chairman No. 1, C. E. Weir, Mrs. Drinkwater, No. 2 Ed. Rath and Mrs. C. R. Brown, No. 3 T. C. Graham and Miss Violet Brown, President of Ladies' Association, Mrs Jerry Portill, re-elected.

In Hungerford township, Mr. H. Conner was chosen President to succeed Mr. R. T. Graham. The other officers named were Pres. Vice President, Clarence Conrad, Second Vice, Harold Varty, Secretary H. A. Mouck, Treasurer, Arthur Montgomery, President of Ladies' Association, Mrs. Edward Conner, Pail Chairman, No. 1 Lorne Carleton, No. 2 W. J. Webb, No. 3 Earl Graham, 4. William Mayhew, No. 5 Harold Varty, No. 6 W. J. Henderson, No. 7 W. D. Irvine, No. 8 J. W. Carleton, No. 9 Ed. Drew.

Dr. J. A. Thompson of Tweed, a member of the County Executive was chosen as chairman of the meeting. In his brief opening remarks he stated that the purpose of the gathering was to revive and stimulate interest within the ranks of the Conservative party generally. The lists of officers were read by H. A. Mouck and T. Ed. Rath.

The chairman then called on Dr. Jas. F. Hill, Whip of the Conservative party and member of the Ontario Legislature for South Hastings, Mr. Hill observed that things looked bright for the Conservative party in the riding when people gathered in large numbers as they had tonight to consider the issues of the day. He stated that the aggressive actions of the present Premier of Ontario should prove of great help to the Conservatives in the Federal election. Many dismissals from office had been made by the present premier, a thing previously unknown and that Orders-in-Council were passed without consulting the elected representatives of the people. The lavish offered by the Premier to Dr. H. A. Bruce, Lieutenant-Governor when he retired to accept the invitation to the State dinner was also alluded to.

In concluding the speaker expressed his entire approval of Mr. Bennett's reform policies.

A letter from Mr. George Stokes expressed his regret at his inability to attend the meeting and also extending his best wishes to the association; Mr. Patrick Hicks of Thurlow township also spoke briefly stating that great interest was being shown within the party in the coming election and expressing his optimism in the outcome as far as South Hastings was concerned.

Mr. W. E. Thurlow, ex., expressed his appreciation of the work of the retiring officers on being called on by the chairman.

"I stand solidly behind the policies of our leader, Hon. R. B. Bennett: no one, he continued who have sat in caucus with him really knows how much time he devotes to the interests of the Dominion. There are those who will say that the policies of the present administration have restricted trade during the past few years. It is true that trade has not been as extensive during the past three or four years, but that is the experience of all nations so Canada is not alone, and the government cannot be held accountable. Canada still ranks fifth among the nations of the world in total trade, a remarkably good showing. All tariffs while Mr. W. L. Mackenzie King was Premier. In 1930 the Hawley-Smoot tariff was placed in the United States to Canadian farm products to protect Canadian industry the Dominion government called a session and did the only fair thing—closed the doors against the United States.

"To find a market", said the speaker, "to replace the lost one was the next move. What was more natural than to seek it with Great Britain and within the Empire. To that end the Imperial Economic Conference was held in Ottawa in 1932, with results known to you all." Mr. Thurlow was heartily applauded at the conclusion of his address.

The following resolution was read by Mr. Harold Varty and carried without a dissenting vote:

"That this meeting place on record our appreciation of the services rendered this country during the past four years by our leader, Hon. Hon. R. B. Bennett, Prime Minister, and approve and pledge to him our loyalty and support in the forward policies that he has put forward on behalf of Canada. We seize this opportunity of expressing a feeling of loyalty and sincerity to the Christian gentleman who represents the riding at Ottawa, W. E. Timmon, M.P. The meeting concluded with refreshments.

ICY ROADS CAUSE MINOR ACCIDENTS

Halloway, Feb. 14—The recent light flurries of snow on the highway have no doubt caused several cars to skid off in the ditch. Between Halloway and Foxboro on Sunday a large truck was in the ditch, another sedan turned over at the railroad and several other places where trucks showed that cars had gone off into the ditch.

Mrs. G. Cadman and Albert and Mrs. Herbert Townsend from this appointment took in the service in Foxboro on Sunday morning and heard the Carolina singers.

3 symptoms all mothers dread

How Nature stores in Oatmeal the precious vitamin "B" to combat nervousness, constipation, poor appetite

IN VITAMIN B

1c worth of oatmeal equals 3 cakes fresh yeast

Moreover, milk itself builds growth better when eaten with oatmeal, than with most other cereals!

IN a simple, healthful breakfast of oatmeal it is stored the precious vitamin B that combats poor appetite, nervousness, constipation.

And the amount of this vital element is a single bowl of oatmeal is equal to that contained in 3 cakes of fresh yeast.

Why milk builds better with oatmeal

Milk contains the growth-vitamin (G) which doctors say works best in combination with the vitamin B in oatmeal.

Therefore, as a delicious breakfast of Quaker Oats and milk, Nature combines, in the most perfect union, the two elements most vital to the healthy growth of active young bodies.

Oatmeal is one of Nature's best foods. It is rich in the essential life-building minerals — iron, phosphorus and lime. These minerals build and replenish rich, red blood. Combat anaemia. Develop sturdy muscles and straight bones.

Quaker Oats contains not only all these vital elements, but essential to health—it is further enriched by irradiation with the Sunshine-vitamin (D).

Hence Quaker Oats and milk is the perfect breakfast. In this delicious and nourishing combination Nature and Science join hands to produce a food unsurpassed for sturdy bone and growth-building value.

MRS. F. FOURNIA LAID TO REST

Native of Picton Passes Away at Home in Rochester

Picton—On Monday afternoon, February 11th at 2 o'clock, at Glenwood Chapel, Picton, Rural Dean O. S. Woodall conducted the funeral service of Mrs. Frank Fournia, for many years a resident of Picton, whose death occurred at Rochester, N.Y., early Friday morning, February 8th. A large gathering of relatives, friends and neighbors of the deceased had assembled to pay a last tribute of respect, to one who had always held their esteem. Mr. Winder read the solemn burial service of the Anglican Church. He spoke comforting words to those left to mourn a kind and loving mother. His choice his text from the creed "I believe in the resurrection of the body and the life everlasting", and compared the hopeless thoughts of the pagans regarding their dead, to the hopeful, joyous, assurance Christians have been given, of the life after death. LOVES TO EAT THIS CEREAL, IT CHECKED HER CONSTIPATION*

Kellogg's All-Bran Helped Miss Kesterke

We quote from her letter: "Three years ago, I became constipated. I had heard Kellogg's All-Bran was as I got used to each kind, I began to get the same results.

"Last summer I was on my vacation. They served Kellogg's All-Bran. I just loved it. I eat Kellogg's All-Bran every morning. I never have to take pills, nor do I take any more laxatives."—Miss Margaret Kesterke. Address on request.

*Due to insufficient "bulk" in the diet.

Tests show Kellogg's All-Bran provides "bulk" to aid elimination, in a way that's more effective than drugs. And it's rich in vitamin B and iron.

The "bulk" in All-Bran is gentle. It resists digestion better than the fiber in fruits and vegetables, bran cereals and bran breads.

Isn't this food safer than risking patent medicines? Two tablespoonfuls of All-Bran daily are usually sufficient. If seriously constipated, use with each meal. See your doctor, if you do not get relief.

Use as a cereal, or in cooking. Sold by all grocers. Made by Kellogg in London, Ontario.

WATCH YOUR STEP

We are anxious to co-operate with the Ontario Government in the matter of Accident Prevention. The year 1934 witnessed approximately 800 people killed and 10,000 injured by Autos—many of them in this Province. Most accidents occur between 5 and 11 p.m. and drivers around 20 to 25 years of age are most frequently involved. Play safety for your own sake. Allow the other fellow plenty of room. Bronx Carpenter Totters Slightly When Sentenced To Die Week of March 18

"If your Honour pleases, the State moves for the sentence of the defendant at this time."

Justice Trenchard asked for the indictment and it was handed to him.

Judge Passes Sentence

"The State's case rests apparently that the court shall fix a time within which the sentence is to be executed and, as a certain week, which must begin not less than four week and not more than eight weeks after the issue of the death warrant," he observed.

"The court will therefore now proceed to impose the sentence.

"The defendant may stand."

Hauptmann got to his feet and faced the Bench. The handcuffs on his wrists clinked time after the trial started January 2—ginned in the artificial light.

Bruno Richard Hauptmann, you have been convicted of murder in the first degree."

His voice was kindly, fatherly.

"The sentence of the court is that you, the said Bruno Richard Hauptmann, suffer death at the time and place and in the manner provided by law. And the court will issue its warrant directing the warrant appointing the week beginning Monday, the 18th day of March, 1935, as the week within such sentence must be executed in the manner provided by law.

"You are now remanded to the custody of the Sheriff."

It was a shadowy, sunless Hauptmann who nervously paced his cell in the Hunterdon County Jail today.

At the State prison in Trenton a mile away, Governor Moore waited for him. He will be kept there until Friday night at least, and then bewhisked quietly to the State capital.

Sheriff John H. Curtiss, the man responsible for his safe delivery to the death house, said nervously there was no hurry.

Mrs. Hauptmann, frequent caller at the jail, has not visited him in the penitentiary to see her husband again.

Lindbergh Not Present

Colonel Lindbergh did not hear the sentencing of the man held accused of killing his first born son. It was the only session of the trial he missed.

Nor would he comment. At the Morrow home in Englewood where he and Mrs. Lindbergh have been sheltering their second son, John, it was said the flier had no statement nor comment on the case "whatsoever."

Mrs. Dwight W. Morrow, mother of Anne Lindbergh, and other members of the Morrow family gathered at Englewood also declined to comment on the case.

So did Dr. J. P. Condon, the "Jafsie" who paid $50,000 of Colonel Lindbergh's money to the man who promised to return the kidnaped infant. That man, Dr. Condon testified, was Hauptmann.

Attorney-General Wilentz praised the eight men and four women on the jury.

Wilentz also paid tribute to the New Jersey State police and to New York and Federal officers for weaving the net of evidence, that bound Hauptmann.

Richly Confident

Defence counsel expressed confidence in eventual victory.

There is no limit to the extent to which we intend pressing this case. We shall take it to the highest court of the country, the United States Supreme Court, if necessary," said Reilly.

"We believe that we shall be able to obtain the ultimate reversal of the judgment."

"I had hoped for and expected an acquittal," said Eybert Rosecrans. "But I have little doubt but that the judgment can be successfully appealed."

Rosecrans pointed out that since it was a matter of life or death to the 36-year-old defendant, the State was expected to pay the cost of the appeal.

Hauptmann received a prison term, the State would be under no obligation to aid him.

Rosecrans said that the defence battery met after the verdict to plan strategy for their next move.

The appeal procedure under Jersey jurisprudence is to bypass the Supreme Court through a technicality and appeal the United States House of Representatives Judiciary Committee as a grim and effective warning to "kidnap-conscious Lindbergh."

"The nation owes a tremendous debt to the jurors of that jury who had the courage to protect our people," said Rep. Sam Hobbs (D.-Ala.) of the Lindbergh kidnapping law through Congress. "Never in the history of criminal crime in this country is due to the fact that jurors have turned crimefighters.

"Any other verdict in the Hauptmann case would have been a reflection on the ability of the American people to govern themselves through the evidence.

"The jury has given public deterrent to the criminally-inclined. They know that there is no chance of escape—that death is the end of the road."

Hauptmann, when the body was found was the face on the ground or on the side? Which?

Col. Greer took up the cross-examination.

A.—Yes, the moon was shining."

Q.—Well, how do you know it was? A.—I don't know if my watch I don't believe it was.

Q.—Would you swear it wasn't? A.—It was a fairly bright night, an ordinary fair, starlit night.

Q.—When you drove up, where was the body? A.—I didn't look up at Bridge Street, about ten feet from walk to office door.

Q.—Practically under a street light?

A.—Yes.

Only See Objects

Q.—When you got out of the car you only see objects that are standing there? A.—I could see some objects'.

Chief Defence Counsel leaned heavily upon records of the preliminary hearing and directed his line of answers of witnesses then during the cross examination of Constable Arnott.

Q.—You said it was a fair, starlit night, that you could see objects in the car?

At this point Justice Jeffrey and Defence Counsel reviewed a series of questions and answers given at the preliminary hearing.

Defence Counsel pressed the question: Could a group of people could be recognized as individuals from the position of witness' seat in the car, but some difficulty was met with the answering of this question. Col. Greer reminded the witness during regarding the location of a light on the car, that the witness had not arrived at the home in, had been parked.

Justice Jeffrey at this point interrupted to lead the witness through the preliminary examination to the questions from the time he left the car until the body was discovered.

Question of Light

Justice Jeffrey — This spot, or vicinity, where the body was found, was it light or dark.

A—Dark

Q—You are quite sure about that? A—Yes, my Lord.

At this point the Grand Jury entered the court room with the report.

Following the reading of the report, the Jury was discharged with the thanks of the Court.

Finding of Hatchet

Plain Clothes Constable Izard of the local force, under questioning by Crown Prosecutor Crass, gave a brief account of having received a telephone call at 9.45 p.m. and of proceeding at once to the Faulkner home, where the body of Mrs. Vermilyea was viewed in the surgery.

"When I arrived the office lights of the doctor's home were on. I immediately put Constables Evans and Arnott on duty at the ambulance. Then I proceeded to investigate the outside of the house. When I left the house I saw one ambulance at side. Then I proceeded south down the alleyway. As I came upon a pile of stone in the alley I saw a large dishpan. Inside the pan was a hatchet." The hatchet was identified as an exhibit, when held up by Crown Prosecutor Crass, for close scrutiny.

Q.—Is it; after a moment's scrutiny.

Evidence of Blood

Witness continues—"I picked up the hatchet by the tip of the handle and found it smeared with blood."

Q.—What did you do with the hatchet.

A—I turned it over to Chief Kidd in the police station.

Q—Did you make any further search of the premises?

A—Yes, I made a thorough search.

Witness related he later secured a wooden box and placed it on the hatchet. Specks, he declared, of what of blood had been noted. A stake was driven in the exact spot first. Had been noted. Also a pair of footprints.

Q—Yes, but the lawn was badly trampled.

Some time was taken up at this point with a description by witness of the district surrounding the Faulkner home.

Mr. Urquhart—Did you notice the light on the back porch?

Q—Your position in which you picked up this hatchet could easily be seen in daylight?

A—Yes, quite easily.

Q—What happened with the hatchet after you picked it up?

Photographs Produced

Several photographs of the Faulkner lawn and home were introduced at this time, two of which showed the body in the position. Questioning regarding the Faulkner office-walk revolved around its location in relation to the body and the surface of the lawn. One of the photographs, No. 1, was a photograph of the lawn and hot placed over the pool of blood by Constable Izard at the time of finding.

Defence Counsel Greer resumed questioning regarding prints investigated, outside the home that night, all you found was a hatchet? A—Yes.

Again a series of questions regarding the surroundings surrounding the Faulkner home were asked.

Q—Then would have been a reflection on the ability of the American people to govern themselves through the evidence.

"The person, then who in making away from Bridge or Dundas street to the hatchet question were made of the post mortem held later.

Dampish or hair removed from Mrs. Vermilyea's head were taken and given to Inspector Gardiner.

Defence counsel at this point suggested an adjournment for a ten minute recess. Mr. Justice then resumed the stand.

Mr. Urquhart took up the questioning with the question that if an artery had been cut would there be a gushing spurt from the wrist?"

A—"Yes that is right."

Q—"Is that correct Mr. witness.—"We have no evidence that there was a gushing spurt at the wrist".

A—"No."

Slight Distinct Wounds

Mr. Greer—"There were eight distinct wounds in the head were there not?"

A—"Yes."

The hatchet was measured across the blade and back by Mr. Greer and Mr. Urquhart. A statement was made by him to learn the definite number of wounds in the head and wrist.

Mr. Greer—"There was only one wound in the wrist?"

A—"Yes."

Q—"And it then there were eight wounds in head caused by the blunt edge and the blade in the head and two in the wrist caused by the sharp edge?"

A—"Yes."

Q—"How many of them would be caused by the blunt edge?"

A—"I would have to count them for me I have received any without failing to the ground?"

Q—"Yes."

Subsequent blows, suggested Mr. Urquhart, were made while Mrs. Vermilyea was on the ground. The Chief Defence Counsel suggested, delivered with heavy force, or in deliberate fashion. "And, if deliberately dealt, it would have taken some time?"

A—"Yes."

Under questioning by Mr. Greer, Dr. Stobie stated he was fairly familiar with post mortem work.

Mr. Greer pressed the question of Dr. Stobie, having observed similar injuries in previous experience, of any example have you ever observed a wound on one cheek. The next blow, in the centre of the head, extending back from the hair line; this had not cut through the skull.

Another wound was on the right face, above the ear. This, he described, wound, he crushed the bone. Several blows had evidently been struck in this small area. Brain tissue was observed coming out of it.

Q—This would be a skull fracture.

A—Yes. On postmortem I discovered that the bone had been driven into the brain." The fracture extended from one side of the temple across the skull to the ear, added Dr. Stobie.

Autopsy Charts Used

With the aid of anatomy charts used in the post mortem held, Dr. Stobie explained to the court and jury the location of the wounds and the numerous medical terms.

Question by Mr. Urquhart—"Would the nature of the cause of death of Mrs. Vermilyea was?"

A—"The destruction of brain tissues, hemorrhage and paralysis."

Q—"Would the blows have been delivered while she was standing up?"

A—"They could if they had been delivered very hurriedly."

The conversation between the wounds of Mrs. Vermilyea and the hatchet question were made of the post mortem held later.

Sample of hair removed from Mrs. Vermilyea's head were taken and given to Inspector Gardiner.

Defence counsel at this point suggested an adjournment for a ten minute recess. Mr. Justice then resumed the stand.

Mr. Urquhart took up the questioning with the question that if an artery had been cut would there be a gushing spurt from the wrist?"

A—"Yes that is right."

Q—"Is that correct Mr. witness.—"We have no evidence that there was a gushing spurt at the wrist".

A—"No."

Slight Distinct Wounds

Mr. Greer—"There were eight distinct wounds in the head were there not?"

A—"Yes."

The hatchet was measured across the blade and back by Mr. Greer and Mr. Urquhart. A statement was made by him to learn the definite number of wounds in the head and wrist.

Mr. Greer—"There was only one wound in the wrist?"

A—"Yes."

Q—"And it then there were eight wounds in head caused by the blunt edge and the blade in the head and two in the wrist caused by the sharp edge?"

A—"Yes."

Q—"How many of them would be caused by the blunt edge?"

A—"I would have to count them for me I have received any without failing to the ground?"

Q—"Yes."

Subsequent blows, suggested Mr. Urquhart, were made while Mrs. Vermilyea was on the ground. The Chief Defence Counsel suggested, delivered with heavy force, or in deliberate fashion. "And, if deliberately dealt, it would have taken some time?"

A—"Yes."

Under questioning by Mr. Greer, Dr. Stobie stated he was fairly familiar with post mortem work.

Mr. Greer pressed the question of Dr. Stobie, having observed similar injuries in previous experience, of any example have you ever observed a wrist severed in the manner you have described Mrs. Vermilyea's?

"I have seen injuries to other members of the body inflicted by an axe," pointed out Dr. Stobie.

Cause of Death Given

Dr. Gibson, a general practitioner in the city, was a witness on the stand was questioned by B. G. Donnelly, K.C. He gave a brief account of being called to the surgery of Mrs. Vermilyea on the night of October 4, and told of his examining the injured Mrs. Vermilyea. He described how Mr. Vermilyea he taken to the hospital after first aid had been rendered in the surgery. Splints and bandages were freely used, as the post mortem held later in company with Dr. Stobie the full extent of the injuries was discovered. The cause of death was given by Dr. Gibson as destruction of the brain tissue and hemorrhage.

Says Wrist Supported

Questioned by Mr. Donnan regarding the wrist injury brought the statement from witness that when struck the wrist had been supported by some solid object.

Justice Jeffrey interrupted in an attempt to have the definition of a solid object."

"The pavement or the ground might be solid, but not in the instance" suggested Col. Greer.

Under questioning by Col. Greer, Dr. Gibson said that such injuries as had been received by Mrs. Vermilyea were "unusual ones." "Had never before seen any but like them."

Mr. Thos. C. Thompson, undertaker, identified several pieces of clothing worn by the deceased by the body of Mrs. Vermilyea in preparation for her funeral.

Belleville Intermediates Secure Two Goal Lead in Playoffs With Peterboro

Three Goal Rally in Final Frame Swells Total

ICE IS HEAVY

Game Rough in Spots With Two Fights Occurring

Displaying too much general hockey ability, the Belleville intermediates staged a hectic third period rally to outlast the Peterboro septet and take the first game of the semi-finals in the "big six" group by the score of 5 to 2 last night at the local arena. After battling at even terms for forty minutes, the local intermediates unleashed a terrific onslaught to score three bad goals in the early stages of the third period and thus assumed a two goal advantage to lead for the return game on Friday night as nearly 1,300 stood on their seats and encouraged the locals to victory.

The game was marred slightly, however, by the indifferent work of Referee Parlow and the more than frequent disadvantage of sticky ice. Thrice the game was stopped when fisticuffs entered the fray as the pastime became more torrid as it progressed, with Referee Parlow apparently losing control of the situation. The heavy ice did not impede the progress of the fast and sharpshooters when goals meant the difference between victory and defeat, however.

Led by Jimmie Ethier who literally starred for the locals, the Thomas-led clan swept the Peterboro team before them in the first period onslaught that resulted in victory. The Petes carried the play mostly in the first period but the Thomasmen knotted the count in the middle frame when Powers batted home Ethier's pass out. With the score standing one-all, the local contingent broke loose with a centred attack that netted them three well earned goals, but the Petes managed to squeeze in the last counter of the night about eight seconds before the game finished. Roy Covert, local centreman, did the scoring of the night about eight seconds before, as Powers banged home a third and Ethier sank the remaining goal. Callahine and Weir scored for Peterboro.

After about ten minutes of play in the initial frame, Peterboro forced down the right boards and drifted a long shot that sneaked behind Foley and the score stood 1 to 0 in favor of Peterboro as the second frame started. Repeatedly the locals carried the play into the Petes' territory but it remained to have Doug Powers back-hand Ethier's perfect pass out into the clear behind Foley to knot the count in the middle stanza. Despite the fact both teams launched centred attacks there was no more scoring until early in the final period when Covert scored on Ethier's pass, then Roy Allied through the entire Peterboro aggregation all alone to make the medicine all the more bitter. Ethier cuffed home the rubber after Powers and Covert batted around the Peterboro net for some seconds. With the score standing 4-1 for Belleville and Foley on the penalty box, Callahine broke away and passed the puck across the ice near the Belleville net with the ultimate result that Weir rifled the rubber into the cage for the Petes' second and final counter of the night.

Chet Jeffery, in the local nets, stood out for Belleville but was closely followed by Jim Ethier and Doug Powers, both these lads turning in marvellous efforts. Roy Covert and Barrage also played good hockey for the winners with Roy showing flashes of old-time ability. The defence of Cadd and Weir stood out strongly for the Petes with Ellis, Dundas and McGee playing interested hockey while Callahine was checked much too closely. Two small outbreaks were eventually culminated by major penalties being given Ellis and Ethier following a general fisticuff early in the third frame.

Belleville—Goal, Jeffery; defence, York and Ethier; centre, Covert; wings, Powers and C. Morgan; subs, McGuire, H. Morgan, Barrage, and Green.

Peterboro—Goal, Foley; defence, Weir and Cadd; centre, Ellis; wings, Dundas and Dailin; subs, Callahine, Creighton, Gardner and McGee.

OLD REMEDY SAVES LIFE

Windsor, Ont., Feb. 14 (CP)—The old-fashioned method of slapping a person between the shoulders while their arms are outspread in mid-air probably saved Mrs. J. C. Reynolds from choking to death on a piece of beef lodged in her throat. The remedy was applied by a neighbor, Mrs. Blanche Garrett, and out popped the piece of meat.

TWEED SECOND IN CENTRAL LOOP

Defeats Madoc For First Time This Season

Tweed, Feb. 14.—Tweed edged into undisputed possession of second place in the Central League by virtue of a 8-2 victory over Madoc on Monday night. This win marks the first victory of the locals over Madoc in four games this winter, and met with the hearty approval of the fans. The game was agreeably featured by the absence of the usual fireworks when those two aggregations meet. Only four penalties were handed out by Referee Borden Rollins, equally divided. Bell and George Gerald getting the gate for the locals in the second period. Ross and Akey for the visitors in the last frame, all for minor offences from the rules. Ross was given the gate when Akey started to get a rest while play was still in progress. After a strenuous bit of work allowed by the ref, on the ice before he left it, automatically penalizing the team, Madoc lost, had seven men on the ice for the moment.

Pap Madoc the goals were scored by West and Akey, while H. Leal obtained two and Quinn, Morris and Bell one each for the locals. Thomas was on in superb form in the nets and made a number of sensational saves when Madoc snipers were hitting through. Alex and George Gerald are rapidly rounding into form and should reach the peak for the play-offs. There were no rest to choose from the others. Hulin in Madoc net was in good form and stopped plenty of hard shots. Kellack, Ashley and Akey were the pick of the Madocers.

Play in the first period was ragged as the checking was very close. Madoc was guilty of some ragged shooting with only Thompson to beat. Ross and Keller both missing the open net. Ashley broke through the defence but Thompson came out on twenty feet to clear the loose puck.

The second period saw a decided improvement in play Merav missing a numerous chance to score when his shot was wide of the open net. Bell drew the first penalty and during his stay Weir scored with a fine equaliser when three or four players slid into the net, apparently with the puck with them. G. Geraldi and Merav were compensated by Hulin who was doing yeoman service in the nets. Geraldi then drew the nod from the referee for a trip and while he was off Leal broke away and beat Hulin with a beautifully placed drive. This was added to a few seconds later when Bell lifted a shot from the blue line to catch Hulin napping for the final counter of the period.

The third canto was featured by the best hockey of the night with the locals outscoring the visitors by two to one. Thompson's work in this period was especially good as Madoc worked hard to close up the gap. Akey was finally rewarded when he broke through the defence to beat Thompson cleanly.

Ross drew his unusual penalty to be followed closely by Akey. There was no slackening of the pace by either side as the period progressed. Leal secured his second goal on a pass from Shannon, and a few minutes later Maguire passed to Merav for the final counter.

Madoc — Goal, Hulin; defence, Ashley and West; centre, Keller; wings, Akey and Alexander; subs, Embury, Clark, Armstrong and Ross.

Tweed—Goal, Thompson; defence, Lafontaine and A. Geraldi; centre, Maguire; wings, Quinn and Merav; subs, Leal, Shanque, Bell, G. Geraldi and Rupert.

CURRENT SPORT

(Day By Day)

"They stopped Mister Calladine"—net result an out and out victory for Eddie Thomas' charges and a two goal lead to take back to the Ontario City on Friday night. Incidentally had Referee Parlow been on his job the local aggregation of pucksters would today be enjoying a three goal advantage instead of the two goals that they well earned over the Petes. Twas a glorious victory, but the referee added insult to injury as they bagged the last counter of the pastime from the ice. In the meantime, locals hoisted in three more than four sweet counters behind Tommy Foley, rivals to the chagrin of the Peterboro and Campbellford teams (each being well represented at the arena last night).

All fans are asking the same question—"are two goals sufficiently enough for Jack to Peterboro?" It's a ticklish question, but the mere fact that the locals have two goals to the good on Jack Friday makes them favorites before the curtain raises. In response to last night's encounter is a honey. Jimmy Ethier literally stood on the ice all night, and we believe, that "Derby" Jeffery brought back old memories with those sensational saves in a hectic third period. There is an old saying in sport—"they don't score on you but this adage is far from true insofar as the local sport is concerned. Time and time again, after some three years of a lay-off, has some back to reputation as far as the local intermediate team. Incidentally besides Ethier, Doug Powers took the eye of the cigarette man, but he'll not get so many smokes for his endeavors.

The Belleville team today enjoy a two goal advantage to take back into the wilds near the liftlocks. All season there has been continuity controversy relating to this or that referee, but last night Harold Parlow gave a prize exhibition of how to take a holiday on a pair of skates and get paid for it. Either the game was too fast for Parlow or he should take another trip back to Poland because too many players were seriously injured through his inability. "Tis hoped a change of officials will be made before the return game.

A new hockey league is to come into being tonight when a local industrial loop is to be formed at the arena. Already a few industrial plants have battled it out in friendly exhibition games with the result that the members of the different clubs have deemed it sufficiently advisable to band together and organize a league of their own. The loop is open to all local industrial firms, exclusive of O.H.A. and City League talent.

Some weeks ago a hockey league was formed in Belleville, known as the Owl League. All games were supposedly to be played for recreation and amusement, but according to the latest gossip from the arena the loop has wandered far from the beaten path of its original intention. The other night one of the games ended rather unsatisfactorily when fisticuffs entered into the picture. It is a deplorable state of affairs when local teams have to resort to such unsportsman-like tactics during games that really mean so little. If the players or management of these clubs cannot play the game for the love of the sport only, 'tis time the ball was called and the loop discontinued.

Congratulations are in order to "Steve" Licence upon his election to the post of executive member of the Canadian Bicycle and Sport Goods Association during their annual meeting held in Toronto yesterday. A Canadian Press dispatch yesterday reads:

"Officers were elected today at the 16th annual convention of the Canadian Bicycle and Sport Goods Association. John Monsop, Toronto, was named president and other officers are: Vice-presidents, Percy Bentley, Niagara Falls, and immediate past president, J. L. Isaac, Brantford; executive committee includes, S. Licence, Belleville; Byshe, Oshawa; W. Gurd, London and C. R. Glynn, Sarnia.

Frank Finnigan, veteran right winger of the St. Louis Eagles hockey club, has been sold to Toronto Maple Leafs, it was announced yesterday. The price paid was $15,000. Finnigan is on his way to New York to join the Leafs for the game there with Rangers tonight.

. . . .

The dual victory of the local basketball teams last night not only assures the Deacon juniors of the group title, but elevates the standing of the "Y" intermediates to a position where they again hold a recognized position in the loop standings.

There is no truth in the rumour that "Derby" Jeffery were out his goal stick last night. Incidentally it was like old times to see "Derby" kick 'em out once again. Just how he managed to stop the majority of shots in that hectic third period is still a large sized mystery to many. Jeffery surely put on a wee shower and providing he can continue his good work between the flags, two goals will look like the proverbial mountain to the Petes. 'Tis safe to wager.

Worth $100,000 Still Playing Favorite Game

New York, Feb. 14 (CP)—It is an incurable disease, an undying first love, an inspiration and a habit. That is hockey as defined by Merwin "Red" Dutton, sorrel-headed defence star of New York Americans.

A neat fortune of close to $100,000 lies to his credit in Western Canada banks. Most of it was left him by his father who died last summer. The colorful veteran was asked what induced him to remain in National Hockey League warfare when—considering his financial security—he might just as well be back in Calgary, resting comfortably at his home fireside while younger p men took the punishment.

"Once you start playing," he grinned, "you never stop till you get kicked out. You make room for a younger fella. It's hard to explain this hockey fever. It gets in your blood and it is useless to fight against it.

"I have a contracting business out in the west, have been building part of the transcontinental highway in Saskatchewan and it's remunerative and interesting work. But every fall I have to drop everything to come east and get my skates on and get into the game. It's something that's irresistible.

Labelled a man who could not come back when he returned from France in 1919 after four years in the front line trenches, Red has surprised everyone who knew his real condition. Twice, German gassing almost tore his legs off. Fiery scars still mark his hips where the jagged steel ripped the flesh and bone but he would not be denied and has ranked a top notch star since 1920.

RUTH HATES TO LEAVE

London, Feb. 14 (CP) — George Herman "Babe" Ruth, baseball's super-slugger, said he was "awfully sorry" to leave London as he started back to the United States yesterday with his wife and his daughter, Julie.

The bambino, who is returning from a world tour, was given a rousing farewell at Waterloo Station. Among those to see him off were former Mayor James J. Walker of New York and his wife, the former Betty Compton.

Deacon Juniors Also Run up Score on Queen's Juniors

BOTH GAMES FAST

Double Win Put Local Teams at Top of Groups

Belleville basketball teams advanced a notch in the E.O.B.A. when the local hoopsters took the Queen's cagers into camp in a twin bill of basketball played at the local collegiate last evening. The local Deacon kids romped home to a 30 to 15 victory over the Queen's juniors, but the 28 to 22 victory of the local "Y" intermediates over the heralded Queen's intermediates proved the surprise of the night's schedule.

Staging a last period rally the "Y" intermediates came from behind to not only down the Queen's intermediates, but elevate themselves into sole possession of second position in the E.O.B.A. loop. In the junior fixture the local Deacons assumed an early first period lead that netted them some 17 points as the Queen's kids could only manage to get five scoring points. The Deacons added 13 more points in the last half as the visiting Queen's lads counted ten.

SIX COUNTERS QUICKLY

Another last period six-goal scoring splurge was on the International Hockey League records today beside that marked up by Windsor Bulldogs not so long ago.

Syracuse Stars last night rapped in six counters to less than 15 minutes to defeat Windsor Bulldogs 6-4, while the Buffalo Bisons scrambled back into the playoff picture by defeating Cleveland Falcons 4-1.

The Stars scoring effort failed to eclipse that of Windsor, however, in that Harvey Rockburn's squad scored their six goals in nine minutes.

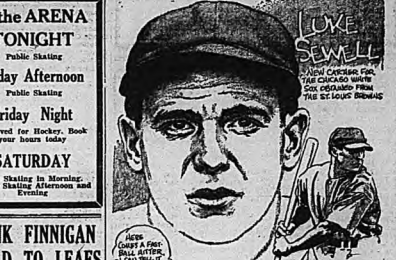
FRANK FINNIGAN SOLD TO LEAFS

Toronto Pays $8,000 For Right Winger to St. Louis



Heartened by arrival of Frankie Finnigan, a seasoned right winger, they have always wanted since he played with them on loan in the season of 1931-32, the injury-ridden Toronto Maple Leafs prepared in New York tonight for a bath the rush of Rangers and, incidentally, keep the Montreal Maroons from getting any nearer to them.

Manager Harvey Jackson and Happy Day both out of the game, Leafs badly needed the help Finnigan can give them and the Shawville Irishman was pleased as punch to be sold from the tail-end St. Louis Eagles to the section leaders. As Eagles are paid to get the $8,000 he brought everyone was satisfied.

Whether Finnigan's advent will enable Leafs to defeat Rangers and partly avenge the two recent defeats the New Yorkers have handed them was problematical.

Lester Patrick's team need the two points a win would get them tonight to keep right in the American leadership fight. If they do take the Torontonians and Red Wings beat Chicago in Detroit a three-way tie between Hawks, Boson and Rangers would be broken with the New Yorkers out in front.

Montreal Maroons meet Canadiens in the third game tonight with the prospect of a win bringing them within six points of Toronto and with three games in hand. They are now eight points down on the international leaders.

Tiger Stars Stalking Trail to Olympic Honors

Speeding along the head of the senior O.H.A. competitions, Hamilton's powerful Tigers look like the team which will represent Canada in the next Olympic hockey tilt. They have so far outclassed their league and with the strong Moncton Hawks, twice Allan Cup winners, disbanded, they should win the senior amateur mug and the right to the Olympic trip. Here are some stars: Left to right, Hector "Toe" Blake, great right-mitt; Maxie Bennett, and "Gonie" McGowan, front-line forwards. Lower: Charlie Toms, ace goalie for the battling Bengals.

LOVE SCHOOL

A Story

By MARYSE RUTLEDGE

Faith flushed. She felt helpless before the heady stare of her employer. This sharp-eyed woman knew everything that happened everywhere. She would probably know, Faith told herself, what Philip Stevens hated. Hunter Sinclair.

With a disapproving flounce of her shoulder, Miss Prine took off her hat and coat, patting the small private waves of her hair.

"Something did happen," Faith began, and checked herself. She didn't want to joy into Hunter's affairs. She didn't want to know. But it was too late now. She had to go on. "Mr. Barclay was here when Mr. Stevens came," she murmured. "Mr. Stevens nearly attacked him. It was terrible." It came over her again how terrible it was. "Brutal!" Miss Prine's voice rose to a shriek. Her small eyes bored through Faith as if somehow it were Faith's fault.

"I didn't know what to do." Faith hurried on, plucking nervously at the desk. "When Mr. Barclay came in a still, small voice, Gertrude Stevens had come into the shop once. Faith remembered her as one of the most beautiful women she had ever seen. "Yes, Philip Stevens is liable to do anything," Miss Prine continued with evident enjoyment. "They're a hot-headed family — the Stevens. And obstinate as mules. I can't imagine how a young man like Hunter Barclay, who can have any of our nicest debutantes for the asking, allows himself to be mixed up in such a scandalous business."

"I don't his fault if he's so fascinating," Faith sulked, but she had an almost unbearable vision of Hunter bending over Gertrude Stevens. Their eyes meeting.

Miss Prine fluttered nearer Faith, her nose dipping sharp and inquisitive. "I want to know anything that happened. What did they do?"

"I can't remember," Faith wearily returned, drifting to the window. "Mr. Stevens warned Mr. Barclay to keep away from his wife."

"Dear me!" fretted Miss Prine. "I hope Mr. Barclay won't lay this up against me!"

"How can he? You weren't here," Faith put a hand to her forehead. Her head was aching, rat-tat-tat-like a machine gun.

She passed the rest of the afternoon in a haze of pain and bewilderment. "There's nothing I can do," she thought dully. "I'm not even a nice debutante."

At last it was six o'clock and she could go. Faith stared at herself in the mirror as she pulled on the soft black felt that fitted like a Robin Hood cap on the side of her smooth shining hair. She traced fresh geranium red on her lips. She looked droopy. If only she could get off alone somewhere. But Agnes would be waiting in the littered little flat; Agnes who has been so strange and irritable lately.

Faith sighed, drawing on her trim tailor-made coat that revealed the lines of her long, slender waist. She wished she had a room of her own. Miss Prine, puttering at her desk, nodded absently. She would never be quite sure that Faith had been in love with her. She would blame Faith somehow.

Late sunshine lingered in the air. Soft, sweet and beckoning light of May. The sort of evening that happy in. The sort of evening that meant young men waiting on street corners for their girls. Faith felt terribly lonely as she paused outside the shop, deciding whether she would walk or take the Sixth Avenue car.

She didn't at first notice the young man who lounged up beside her. "Hello, Faith," he said. "Nice evening for a stroll."

She turned with an exclamation of annoyance. Of all the people she didn't want to see — it was Roger Welsh, Agnes' boy friend.

"Oh, hello Roger." And all her dislike, fear and hate of that street youth, was in her expression. "I'm taking the car," she coldly added.

"Oh, come on now. He touched of her arm in that hateful pawing way of his. His white teeth flashed. She drew away. "I have a headache."

"The air will do you good." He pressed along beside her, his bold eyes boring into her face and figure.

He had no business to come for her. Faith thought angrily. He knew how jealous Agnes was. Besides, she didn't like to be seen with him. He was common.

"Let's go to a movie, a matinee! His hand again took her elbow as they crossed Sixth Avenue.

"Why should we? Her tone betrayed exasperation. He had been hanging around for her for several weeks. Agnes must have noticed it. "Have you seen Agnes today?" she pointedly asked.

"So that's it—Agnes!" He looked as pleased as if she had paid him a compliment. "I'd drop her in a moment if you said the word."

"Don't waste your time." Faith turned her head away from him, but she could feel his black eyes glistening over her, that smirk on his too full red lips. His manner face that seemed all profile was too near to hers. She hated the way he dressed; the pinched waist and flare of his light brown suit, the green stripes on his shirt, his shiny patent leather shoes.

They crossed Fifth Avenue. In spite of Roger's protest, Faith headed for Sixth Avenue. The urbane world, the expensive shops and well-bred people in their handsome cars were dropping behind. Stepping out of fairy land into a jarred, stuffy street car, where she would be just another tired young woman with troubles of her own.

"Have a soda?" Roger would not be snubbed.

Faith stopped short in the street. "Do try to understand," she said in clear, even tones. "Even if there wasn't the chance of hurting Agnes, I wouldn't go out with you. I don't like you."

"You needn't be so high and mighty." Roger was turning sullen. He headed for the car behind them, reaching too late with the double fare. Faith jumped back in the only remaining seat. Let him hang onto a strap all the way to Eighth St. She caught only some of what he might seem like the real thing. There were two of them in the car —while waffer slips of faces, lips smeared with scarlet, clattered and whispering. To them he might seem as splendid as Hunter did to her. Faith thought drearily. They looked up to men they could reach.

"Seeing a lot of swells, aren't you?" Roger said nastily as he kept step with her up Greenwich Avenue.

They were nearing the dingy apartment house. "The men I see would know when they weren't wanted," she retorted.

She would give anything in the world not to have to climb those four initiation marble flights of Agnes' with the reek of food seeping through doors. She glanced up at Agnes' windows, reading the dull red of orange net curtains and the hanging panel of a plush model's that hung between them.

The curtains were drawn back from the open window. Like a bird in a cuckoo clock, a head was thrust out and back. Faith caught the metallic glint of hair. Agnes watching. And now Agnes had seen them — she and Roger coming home together.

JEALOUS ROOMMATE

CHAPTER THREE

Agnes, in wide, flowered pajamas, opened the door as if she had been spying behind it for the steps on the step stairs. Listening for any lie-traying pause or whisper.

"Well, here you are!" Her voice held a determined brightness that didn't deceive Faith. She knew the pert face.

"I met Faith getting off the car," Roger giddy lied.

Faith walked past them into the cluttered sitting room. Pleated pink shades masked the lights.

the tiny hall she could hear Agnes' excited laugh. Roger joining in his peace.

Faith had never realized so keenly how impossible it all was. Her bed was the couch, covered now with spotted red silk. She couldn't even lie down without borrowing the cubicle which was Agnes' room. No privacy.

Roger had evidently soothed Agnes, for her manner was calm and asked as she came in, to find Faith seated on the couch, still in her hat and coat.

"We're throwing a party tonight," Agnes announced in her penetrating voice. "Mix us a drink, will you, girl?" She laid her arm carelessly around Roger's shoulders, turning her excitable blue eyes on Faith as if to say: "He's mine. Try to get him away!"

Faith smiled faintly shakin-her head. "No drink for me. Mind if I go in your room a minute, Agnes? I've got an awful headache." She suspected that Agnes had been having drinks all afternoon.

"All right." Agnes agreed rather ungracefully. "But don't lie down. I've been cleaning the closet, and the bed's covered with stuff."

"Say, Aggie," Roger called from the scrap of a kitchenette, "there's hardly any gin left."

"I know it, angel," Agnes replied, with a little giggle. "Wait a minute, a minute. We'll need supplies for tonight." She went into her room, came back with her purse.

Faith didn't look at her, but she knew all the procedure. Always the same. Agnes dipping into her purse to give Roger money for things. And there was never any change when Roger came back.

Faith lost the sense of time. She hung them in the hall. No use going into the bedroom now. When she got back into the sitting room Agnes' voice had risen to a high, querulous note.

"No, I won't give you more than five dollars, Roger. And you ought to be able to buy cheese and rye bread, too, for that," Agnes' shrill gin is only a dollar a quart." Agnes was like that— over-generous one moment, the next arguing about every cent.

"Now, now, honey, we'll have to have a gallon if all the crowd comes," Roger's voice could grow sharp and shrewd though he bent over Agnes, cajoling with the intimation pearls.

Faith turned her eyes away in disgust. She would wait for another ten minutes or more before Agnes yielded and get him everything her purse contained. All her savings were going that way. And Agnes was getting out of a job for two months now.

But Agnes gave in quickly tonight. Roger straightened with a satisfied grunt. "Swell. I'll ring up the others." He kissed Agnes' upturned face. "I'll be seeing you, girls," and was gone.

Agnes yawned, stretched, strolled into the kitchen. Faith heard the click of a bottle against glass.

"How could she stand it tonight?" she wondered. Those cheap friends of Agnes, with their ignorant chatter of Broadway, their boasting of what they could do some day in vaudeville or on the radio. Piano tinklers, nasal crooners, shabby clowns, who had never met one of the headline people they called by their first names and boasted about.

Agnes flitted in from the kitchen-ette, her crimson lips pouting, her small face petulant. "I don't believe it was an accident—your coming home with Roger tonight," she said.

Faith couldn't find the strength to combat the other girl's suspicions. She evaded the subject. "What shall I wear?" she asked listlessly.

"I'm putting on my new pink ci...ffon." Agnes moved toward the bathroom. "Your green's all right." She seemed to have declared a truce.

From the bathroom, her shrill voice clattered unceasingly above running water. Soon the smell of cheap scent floated into the boxlike bedroom where Faith had cleared a space on the bed.

As she lay there with closed eyes, Faith decided that she must leave this place now that Roger was going to be objectionable. And, anyway——

"What's the matter with you, anyway, Faith? You act like you were in love or something."

She opened her eyes reluctantly. Agnes was standing peering down. Faith sat up, trying to laugh. "Don't be silly."

Agnes' hand was behind her back. She thrust it out suddenly. "I suppose you'd tell me it's with him!" There was a jarring note to her voice. She held the society page of an evening paper toward Faith. Hunter Barclay's picture in full dress was in one of the inserts. "He was the costume of a courtier and standing beside him was a lady in a gorgeous court dress looped with jewels. Mr. Barclay Hunter and Mrs. Philip Stevens at the 'Thirties' Ball," Faith read.

"There's your hero," Agnes sniffed, her blue eyes blue with hating at Faith. "But I'm beginning to suspect he's not the one you're in love with, either. It's just camouflage."

Little Benny's Note Book

Ma and ma was eating lunch and I didn't seem to have very much of a appetite, ma saying, Benny you're pecking at your food like a herd in a dream, don. you like it?

It's all rite, I gess, ony O, ma, if you had 7 years hard luck coming to you, you wouldn't feel like eating either, I said. I broke a little round looking glass and the fellows all said it mems I'm going to have 7 years of bad luck. Holey smokes nothing's going to happen rite now for a while and by that time I'll be so old it wont matter what happens, I said, and ma said, That's pure unfounded superstition from the dark middle ages of prehistoric times and I'm ashamed of you for such a display of ignorance.

Well gosh, ma, all the fellows said so, and how would they all know? I said, and ma said, They wouldn't, if you insist on a sensible answer to a silly question.

Anyways, it broke itself as much as I broke it, because it deliberitly popped out of my hand and I wasn't holding it very loose or anything, I said, I was looking out your window just before I came down for lunch, and the fellows was down on the street and I started to hold the mirrer out to see if they could see themselves in it that far away for a scientific experiment, and all of a sudden that's what happened, and it happened to be your mirrer with the little round looking glass and the long handle I said, and ma said, My silver hand mirrer! Good goodness——

It didn't get dented much, only on one edge, I said, and ma said, Then your father is going to hear of it the moment he gets home.

That's the bad luck starting, see I told you, ma, I said, and she said, Dent you ask me for your allowance this week, dont you dare.

That's more bad luck, what did I tell you, ma, and you didn't believe it, I said. Maybe I wont feel like eating again for 7 years, and I'll have the same indigestion by that time, I bet, I said, and ma said, If you eat your lunch, you eat a bit of it or you'll get a smack over every speck you leave.

That result being I didn't eat one smack and felt luckier than I ex-pected

TARZAN opened his eyes as consciousness returned. Above him towered the huge lion, its hot breath upon his face, its rough tongue upon his cheek. The ape-man had often been close to death; but, never, he thought, so close as this!

His brain still numb from the effect of Olga's blow when she felled him, Tarzan believed his end but a few seconds away. Presently he recognized the lion; and with this came a realization of the astounding fact that Numa, at least, for the time being—was not bent upon devouring him. The ape-man's position was a delicate one. He could not flee, the beast was astraddle him. He dared not push Numa away. He thought the lion might deem him dead and—any movement would probably arouse the killing instinct of the man-eater. But Tarzan was in no mood to lie there forever—especially when he contemplated the fact that the girl my who had struck him down was undoubtedly rapidly escaping.

Piles Go Quick

Under Dr. Leonhardt's Internal Method

Large numbers of sufferers from itching, bleeding or protruding piles have learned that quick and lasting relief can be accomplished with an internal method when valves do not help and wish is to escape operation.

Bad circulation of the blood in the lower bowel causes piles. The veins are flabby, the bowel walls weak—the parts lifeless. To end Piles an internal medicine should be used to stimulate the circulation and help to heal the affected parts.

Dr. Leonhardt, after years of the first to discover a real internal Pile remedy, He called his discovery HEM-ROID and prescribed it for large numbers of patients with a free record of success. Many who decided every Pile sufferer should be able to get Hem-Roid tablets from their own druggist, with money-back if not joyfully satisfied with the help one bottle gives.

So don't it was when other ways fail to go to J. S. McKeown, who says, "No matter what kind of Piles you have, one bottle of HEM-ROID tablets must show you the safe clean way to get rid of your Pile misery or money-back.

MAID TESTIFIES AT TRIAL OF VERMILYEA

NEWS BRIEFS AND ODDITIES

New York, Feb. 15 (CP)—Just because a fat man waddles and becomes a fat man waddles and can't pick a ruler off the floor is no sign he's intoxicated, William D. Sloane who tips the scales at 220 pounds and is five feet, seven inches tall, was before a Magistrate Prandeis Tuesday on a charge of driving an automobile while intoxicated.

Leah Jacobs, witness, testified to her belief Sloane was intoxicated because he waddled and was unable to pick up a ruler in an intoxication test.

Magistrate Irwin, himself, somewhat portly, was unimpressed.

"That's nothing," he said. "All fat men have difficulty picking things from the floor. Case dismissed."

Seattle, Wash., Feb. 15 (CP)—Barney Wold didn't even like his wife's valentine. Instead he limped to the jail, where Mrs. Wold was held on a charge of shooting him, and the two kissed and "made up."

Wold, shot in the hip during a family quarrel a month ago, said he was sorry he gave one of the lead slugs fashioned into a welsh charm as a valentine to Mrs. Wold later pleaded guilty to the charge and will remain in jail until March 6 to serve out the sentence.

Joliet, Ill., Feb. 15 (CP)—Police Magistrate John J. Nicholson was touched.

Frank Aw, transient, was before him, accused of drinking a bit too much.

"But," said the accused, "I've got something for you."

He produced a red heart which said something about "Won't you be my Valentine?"

"On your way, Frank, said the court, "in 14 years on the bench no prisoner gave me a Valentine before."

Chicago, Feb. 15 (CP)—By order of speed cops, all motorists will come through with any sirloin, dollie, electric trains, tops or building blocks he has been holding out on his children.

Judge Desort filled out an injunction covering the case.

Chicago, Feb. 15 (CP)—J. J. Peterson, 63 years old, one-legged and deaf, hobbled into Circuit Court yesterday to file a suit and car-borne—the defendant in a breach of promise suit.

Martin suggests a course of bridge as part of the high school curriculum.

JUROR HAS COLD WEARS OVERCOAT

A doctor was called yesterday for one of the jurors in attendance at the trial of Harold W. Vermilyea. Medical examination, however, disclosed that treatment for the first symptoms of a bad cold was all that was needed. Today the juror appeared able to carry on though slightly unwell. His condition was being watched by the Hon. Justice Nicol Jeffrey, who requested the aline juror to inform him immediately if his condition became worse. The juror sat with his overcoat on today.

TAXICAB DRIVERS POINT TO ACCUSED AT MURDER TRIAL

Archie Walker, Toronto, Tells of Conversation Regarding Trip

EYES REST ON ACCUSED

Leonard Draper Says Memory Impressed by Man's Face

As the Friday afternoon session opened, Justice Jeffrey questioned the jurors, and the trial proceeded. He promise that Saturday's hearings would not be so long and Friday afternoon's session would be reduced, was given by the court.

Sergeant Thompson of the local Provincial Police force, first witness took the stand at the time Miss Mounteney on the night of Oct. 14. Letter and envelope, the envelope received, identified by Mrs. Vermilyea was identified.

Signed in Pencil

The letter with "California Fruit Exchange Office" as the head, and read by Crown Prosecutor Urquhart in open court, was a typewritten missive, was signed in pencil with "H. W. Vermilyea," in pencil at the bottom. It had been addressed from California. It was the newsy account of domestic affairs in the Vermilyea household.

In this letter among other matters, the writer related that his sister was going to school. He also stated how pleased he was that his mother had arrived back from Europe safely. (Mrs. Vermilyea had been in Europe last summer).

Interviewed by Police at Vermilyea

Archie Walker, taxicab driver, of Toronto, testified that on Friday he had engaged in conversation in Toronto with on Oct. 4 as "the prisoner in the box."

The man had talked to him of a trip he intended taking, the fare was computed to $17.00.

The conversation witness had with the man had been engaged in at the Walker House. The name "Carter," Room 303 had been given him, he added.

Reference to Belleville

"The man said he wanted to take a 225 mile trip" continued the witness. "I told him Trenton was that far, so he said it might be to Belleville. That's how I came to find Bannas he'd hire me later. I was to call at the Walker House and I did give me a definite answer. I saw Bannas later, knew he had been hired and decided to take no more."

Col. Greer: Q. When did you see this man? A. At the Toronto police station some time after.

"During our negotiation in his trying to hire the cab, I said that I'd have to borrow money to do business. He said he didn't expect to make much of it and then he asked the witness following an invitation by Col. Greer to state what been said at the time.

Impressed by Man

Witness later added that the memory of the man he had been talking with had impressed him. He added, "He impressed me a little and I wondered some about his appearance. He had the look to me that he had been down on his luck. Monday night I met Bannas and the man and they drived him there for $15.00."

Both witness, a burly figure, spoke easily, and carefully explained each point as he progressed. At times he differed with defence counsel upon some minor point.

"I'm only giving approximate points," he was careful to impress upon the court.

Memory of Face

Q—The memory of this man's face was clearly impressed upon your mind? A.—Yes. Later, added witness, "when you take a man for a long-trip like that you want to know something about him.

Q.—And I suggest that the arrangements in this case were different that you were careful to remember?

A.—Yes.

Leonard Draper, a second Toronto cab driver, on October 4, at 10 a.m., had been approached on the cab stand near the Walker House by a man, who asked the whereabouts of Bannas.

Q.—Did you see him here?

Witness took stock of the courtroom for a full minute. His gaze rested upon the accused, "The man in the prisoner's box," he pointed.

An arrangement for a cab had been attempted by a man identified as the accused, said witness. The man told him to call at the Walker House at 1.30 but when he got there the intended "fare" had gone. We then drove to

Engineer Loses Life In Wreck of Freights, Local Man Badly Hurt

George Winchester Killed at Lynden Early Today

SCENE NEAR DUNDAS

William Nickle, Fireman, of Belleville Has Leg Injury

Lynden, Ont., Feb. 15 (CP)—One man was killed and a second badly injured in a wreck which blocked the main line of the Canadian National Railways and locked in the huge freight locomotives in a pile of debris near here early today. Lynden is 10 miles northeast of Brantford.

The dead man is George Winchester, 167 Lake Street North, Hamilton, one of the engineers in the fatal crash. The injured fireman who may have to have his right leg amputated below the knee is William J. Nickle of Belleville. Nickle is in hospital at Brantford.

J. Connell of Hamilton, suffered an injury to his ankle and W. Burwell, a sprained back.

The wreck occurred at 6.15 this morning, one mile west of Lynden on the main line to Detroit and only about seven miles from Dundas, where the Christmas night wreck occurred, killing fifteen.

Travelling Long Grade

One of the freights, consisting of 26 cars, was proceeding from Hamilton to Palmerston, travelling up the long grade which begins below Dundas and ends towards Brantford. Another freight was travelling in the opposite direction to Sarnia, and was being switched from over to the west-bound track by a switch and the terrific head-on impact resulted.

Found in Creek

Winchester was in the first of two engines drawing the freight from Sarnia. He was found face downward in the water of a creek at the foot of an embankment on the north side of the track. Early examination revealed a possible fracture of the skull. There is also the possibility the unconscious man drowned.

It is not known whether Winchester jumped before the crash or was catapulted out of the cab when the impact occurred. It was

Lunches Eaten By Spectators In Corridors

Although between forty and fifty sandwiches, dragged from coat pockets in their newspaper wrappings were hastily eaten in the corridors and halls of the county court house building at noon today by court fiends during the recess, the floors of the building were left free of such a housing as the paper wrappings removed from the lunches were crammed into pockets before the sandwiches were hastily gulped. Then a rush for the favorite seats was again made by the throng as soon as the doors were again unlocked.

During adjournment of court at noon the room is cleared of its crowd and thoroughly aired. Many of the spectators stand in line for seats in the morning waiting for admission.

Although Harold W. Vermilyea, on trial for his life for murder, refuses to glance even occasionally at the jury or the various witnesses during his trial as he sprawls in his chair in the prisoner's dock, he has a keen eye for details.

Thursday he glanced at the first row of spectators. He counted several who spend each day in the same seats following the trial.

"Do you go to the movies on several nights a week?" he asked one of the women with which the man asked for a 7 o'clock call also impressed itself upon the memory of the witness.

Witness was still on the stand at three-thirty this afternoon.

FRASER ASSAILS MARKETING ACT IN BITTER WORDS

Northumberland M. P. Says Those Responsible For Act Egotists

CONSIDERS ACT PLOT

Possible to Cancel Licence And go on Properly Speaker

Hamilton, Feb. 15—(CP)—Proponents of the Natural Products Marketing Act, a piece of Legislation enacted by the Bennett Government were denounced as the most hectic session known to a convention of fruit growers. Leaders in the orchard barrages hurled at proponents of the Act were W. A. Fraser, Liberal M.P., for Northumberland, W. Mills, secretary to Mitchell F. Hepburn as M.P. for Elgin County and Col. J. C. Mitchell, K.C., M.P., for Norfolk, and at present, sheriff of that county.

Mr. Fraser was billed to speak on modern orchard practice but soon launched into an attack on the Marketing Act, which he declared made it possible for gilt-edged racketeers to go so far as to put people in jail for selling a few quarts of fruit. He termed those responsible for the Act as egotists who considered themselves smarter than all offered reasons why he thought the proposed legislation would devastate the fruit industry as well as robbing the people engaged in it of their liberties. He took Howard C. Craig to task for attempting to organize the tomato growers of Northumberland County and asked his audience to look well into any scheme which dictated to them how to conduct their business.

"They are trying to put over their pets," he said with vigor. "For this legislation makes it possible for them to put over your honour and for an infringement but permits them to go upon your premises, take your production records and tell you what to do. They can fine you or make you go to jail.

"It is a case of holding over you a police baton or a soldier's bayonet," he declared. "Whether or not you record a majority vote on the question of adopting a scheme, the Minister of Agriculture has the power to approve it. I voice the warning here once you get into one of these pools, you are in a scrambled egg, never to be unscrambled. This Act covers the land, the whole land, which means 50 per cent. of the productivity of Canada.

"The act is unconstitutional," "once a law manufacturer sets up a Board, he gains a foothold and he sets aside by paving the way for a merger. Those responsible are illiterates, and I warn you against permitting the fruit industry to be placed into their hands whether it is approved by either the Hepburn Government of Ontario or the Gardiner Government of Saskatchewan. It won't work but will slap back in the face and boomerang on you. If you cannot make the consumer pay a price that is told you should be."

SOCIETY GIRL TO DEFEND YOUTH

Will Testify For Defence of Lavishness Poured on Her

Pawnee, Okla., Feb. 15 (AP) — A Tulsa society girl who spurned the love of a poor boy and squandered a fortune was to testify today in defence witnesses at his murder trial today in an effort to save the 19-year-old youth from the death penalty.

The girl, pretty Miss Virginia Wilcox, has been summoned to tell of a promise the young defendant claims he got from Judge Franklin E. Kennamer. The lengths to which he carelessly went to please Miss Wilcox have been spun into nearly every bit of evidence in his trial for the murder of John Gorrell, son of a prominent Tulsa manufacturer.

"I'm going to tell whatever I can to clear up this terrible tragedy," said the 19-year-old daughter of H. P. Wilcox, millionaire oil man.

Psychiatrists for the defendant was found shot to death in an exclusive section of well-to-do Tulsa on Thanksgiving night. Two days later Kennamer surrendered, saying he had shot in self-defence while attempting to thwart an alleged extortion plot against the Wilcox family.

The state alleges he shot Gorrell when the latter refused to help carry out the purported plot.

TAKE HAUPTMANN TO DEATH HOUSE ON SATURDAY A.M.

"Not Before Daylight" Sheriff Advises Newsmen

MAIL FROM CRANKS

Denial Given That Any Other Person is Being Sought

Washington, Feb. 15 (AP) — Statements that Federal officers have evidence Bruno Richard Hauptmann had an accomplice in the Lindbergh kidnapping-murder plot were today by J. Edgar Hoover, director of the Division of Investigation of the United States Department of Justice.

Flemington, N.J., Feb. 15.— (AP) Sheriff John H. Curtiss announced that Bruno Richard Hauptmann, convicted Lindbergh kidnap murderer, would be removed from the Hunterdon County jail to the death house in State Prison some time tomorrow.

"We are going to take him down tomorrow. That's definite."

Curtiss refused to say for some definite information as to what time Hauptmann would start on the 20-odd mile journey to the death house, he said:

"It won't be before daylight," adding, with a chuckle, "you boys can figure out and get a good night's sleep tonight."

The sheriff said he together with four or five of his deputies and an unspecified number of state police would accompany the manacled prisoner on the trip.

Hauptmann's conviction and death sentence has brought no increase in the mail addressed to the prisoner, Curtiss said. Hauptmann does not see the mail which the sheriff identified as coming largely from cranks and religious fanatics.

No Mercy Received at Jail

Despite defence appeals for funds to finance Hauptmann's fight to secure reversal of his death sentence by higher courts the sheriff said no money had been received at the jail in letters addressed to Hauptmann. "That is," he said, "as far as I know of it."

Lindbergh kidnap-murder case was said to be closed so far as the special agents of the Department of Justice are concerned. This was asserted Hauptmann, now facing death in the electric chair, is guilty and no other suspects are involved.

CHILD SUCCUMBS VERY SUDDENLY

Doctor Called From Sudbury Thirty-five Miles Away

Sudbury, Ont., Feb 15—(CP)—Request made for medical assistance for Albert Noel, 10-months-old baby, who died Feb. 12 of pneumonia on his parents farm near Hagar, were made so late the child died before a doctor could arrive, Coroner Dr. G. A. Henry, who investigated.

Dr. Henry stated as he understood the case, the parents first became seriously alarmed about the baby's condition shortly before noon Monday. After him efforts to reach Dr. Vernier in Verner and Sturgeon Falls, they called in T. A. Bell, Relief Officer for that district, who secured Dr. G. Desmarais of Sudbury.

The baby died at 5.45 o'clock Tuesday afternoon before Dr. Desmarais could reach the home, about 35 miles from Sudbury.

New Disease from Unemployment Spanish Doctor Describes Malady

By REX SMITH
Associated Press Foreign Staff

Madrid, Feb. 15—(AP)—Dr. Vallejo Najera, noted Spanish physician, announced today the discovery of what he termed a new disease—"unemployment neurosis." His statement was made after five years of observation of thousands of patients.

Dr. Najera said the economic crisis was the cause of this disease. First phases of the illness resemble neurasthenia, he explained, and include definite organic inferiority, insomnia and indications of pre-tubercular weakness.

In a majority of the cases men were admitted to public hospitals supposedly suffering from general debility and hypochondriacal pains. A strengthening treatment served only to restore them physically somewhat, he said, but they remained mentally cowardly, depressed, full of self-worry and a feeling of being "outclassed in society." fear.

The physician said his tests were made in studying these men, after having built them up physically, and finding none for them. He was able to secure employment for several scores of patients and in practically all cases they became normal persons within a few weeks, he asserted.

A majority of the persons suffering from "unemployment neurosis," Dr. Najera said, became easy recruits of extreme organizations and gangster bands, often becoming murderers and robbers.

Caller at Farley House On Night of October 1st Described by Witness

'Familiar Voice' Referred to by Miss Eunice Mountenay

DEPARTMENT OF JUSTICE

Witness on Stand of Entire Morning Session on Friday

Miss Eunice Mountenay, a maid in the home of Mrs. (Dr.) J. J. Farley for the past four years, and a witness in the trial of Harold W. Vermilyea, testified on the stand today on the third day of the trial that through the resemblances of voice and manner of walking with those of the remainder of the Vermilyea family, she recognized the accused as the caller on the night the late Mrs. Vermilyea had been bludgeoned to death. It was at the Farley home, where Mrs. Vermilyea had resided that the caller had visited.

Even though she had never seen Harold W. Vermilyea before, she testified today (Friday) from the stand that this recognition had been granted her almost at first sight the night the man had called.

"The accused man is the one who called," she stated calmly.

Maid's Evidence.

With the opening of court on the third day of the trial of Harold W. Vermilyea, Miss Eunice Mountenay, maid at the "honor" of Mrs. (Dr.) J. J. Farley, where the late Mrs. Vermilyea had resided, substantially described the man who called at the home on the evening of Oct. 1, 1934, as "the accused." She had answered the door. The caller asked, "Is Mrs. Vermilyea in." I told him she and he went away.

He was dressed in a light overcoat, a cap and wore glasses with a white gold rim." The glasses were identified as an exhibit by witness as resembling the ones worn.

Two Calls Made.

The man identified as "accused" had called twice, the first time, whether he came back around 9:30 to the home of Mrs. Farley, the maid having told this time Mrs. Vermilyea was in, was taken to the parlor. "Mrs. Vermilyea," the caller said, he asked, "who else is here besides Aunt Lizzie?" I said Mrs. was entertaining tonight, but Mrs. Vermilyea would see him in the parlor." Questioning by Crown Prosecutor Urquhart, K.C., brought the statement that the office of the home

Quipu in Museum Nobody Knew It

Chicago, Feb. 15 (AP)—For ten years, the Field Museum had a quipu and never knew it. They searched all over the world for one and what did they find in it?

Why, in an old work basket among some weaving material they had owned for a decade.

A quipu, Director Simms explained today, is what the accountants and business men of ancient Peru used instead of adding machines. A quipu is a cord from which dangle a number of other cords, knotted to stand for ones, tens and thousands.

DIONNES ARRIVE IN MOTOR CITY

Will Fulfill Week's Engagement at Detroit Theatre

Detroit, Feb. 15 (AP)—The Dionnes, all of Callander, the triplets and their five brothers and sisters—came to town today.

Oliva Dionne, the father, had nothing at all to say. Mrs. Dionne said she was hungry.

She was, too, and made away with her share of this breakfast: tomato juice, a double order of oatmeal, scrambled eggs, boiled eggs, bacon, ham, cereal, toast, waffles and coffee. Through her interpreter, Mrs. Georgiana Rochon, she explained she was "starved."

During the 11 days they have been away from their home in Callander, Ont., the Dionnes have received daily telegrams from Dr. Allan R. Dafoe containing the latest news of the quintuplets and their other children.

The couple is here to fill a week's theatre engagement.

Mrs. Dionne enjoyed making stage appearances, Mrs. Dionne replied, in French.

They came to Detroit from Chicago.

GUARDS AMAZED AT HIS FORTITUDE

Features of Hauptmann Becomes Emotionless Mask

Flemington, N.J., Feb. 15 (AP)—Bruno Richard Hauptmann's fortitude amazed his guards as the time drew near for his transfer to the death house. His outburst of weeping immediately after being sentenced to die has given way to quietness and his features again have become an emotionless mask, noticeable during the trial. He was once more the stoical carpenter.

"Hauptmann has been shaken by the outcome of the trial," said one guard today. "He shows remarkable control."

Hauptmann became quieter. He was resigned at last to death and cot more frequently but still declined invitations of guards to restless pacing of the bullpen outside his cell.

Food failed to interest the condemned man as much as before his conviction. He ate practically nothing yesterday until supper time. Then he had three beef sandwiches, two mugs, a cup of coffee and some cookies.

KIWANIS DANCE MOST ENJOYABLE

Program, Novelties And Prize Dances Given During Evening

More than three hundred enjoyed the fun honors given by the Kiwanis Club in the Johnstone Academy on Valentine's night despite the inclement weather, which prevailed. The dance was the annual one given by the organization and the consensus of opinion of those present it was the most enjoyable of the many that have preceded. The guests were late in arriving but were reluctant to call it a night and dancing was continued until two thirty Friday morning.

The Academy was most tastefully decorated with Kiwanis emblems and colors of the club, while attractive programs of the dance were placed conveniently about the hall. Refreshments of delicious pieces furnished an excellent program of music, the several numbers being heartily encored, while Harold Carruthers rendered a number of solos. The Academy Orchestra were in accompaniment. This was a very pleasing feature of the evening. The committee in charge of which Frank Donnelly was the chairman had made perfect arrangements and everyone was made to feel at home and every effort was also made to make the evening enjoyable.

During the evening a number of prize dances were run the excellent favors being contributed by members of club. The spot dance was won by Mr. Burt Ballard and Miss Margaret Meagher and the Kiwanis dance by Miss Pauline Schryver. The balloons was an interesting pastime with Mrs. George Thompson and Mr. R. A. Flynn as the winners. The winners of the ball dance were Mrs. Eddie Logan, Trenton and Mr. Lowery and B. E. Clyton. Another Kiwanian dance found the following winners, Miss Reynolds, Miss Orton, Mrs. R. A. Flynn, Miss Evelyn Wilkey and Mr. Ken Baker. Miss M. Goldberg also won the fur neckpiece given by Kiwanian Joe Deaney.

The luncheon was served by the members of the club. Novelties of all kinds were distributed during the evening and entertainment was occasioned after the distribution. It was a successful affair and the club is grateful to all those who contributed to its success in any way.

REMAND W. HEDGER WEEK FOR THEFT

Charged With Theft of $500 And Some Butter From Creamery

Charged with breaking, entering and theft from the Belleville Creamery Limited, Walter J. Hedger, 32, of this city, was arraigned in local and provincial police at the residence of a friend in Thurlow township yesterday afternoon. Hedger later was arraigned before Magistrate Ponton, K.C., Butler in local police court and remanded in custody, not being asked to plead to the charge. Hedger was charged with the theft of $500.00 and a quantity of butter, removed from the premises of the local Belleville Creameries Limited last Thursday morning. Two alleged accomplices, Gordon Manahan and a man known as "Red" whose home is believed to be in Toronto, have been issued.

Hedger's arrest followed a police raid on the Hedger home on Station street early yesterday afternoon, when a portion of the alleged stolen money was found, it is said, in a tin pail, while some of the stolen butter were also recovered, according to police. Hedger was arrested at the time of the police raid, but subsequent information on the subject took the authorities to Stirling, where the accused was picked up. Upon being questioned as to the whereabouts of the stolen money was recovered, police stated today. Hedger, police allege, admitted the theft but stated that he had not entered the building as he was in the "getaway" car on the outside of the creamery. Hedger intimated that he knew the identity of the names of the third party implicated, as Manahan brought a lad named "Red" to the Hedger home two days previous. They had consummated considerable intoxicants before and after the theft, it was admitted by Hedger.

Hedger denied the taking of more than seven pounds of butter when questioned by the police. He informed the authorities that the robbery had been planned by his alleged accomplices, but only butter was the object of their attempts. Upon the arrival of the police at the creamery, Hedger stated that Manahan placed a ladder against a rear window and entered the building, the mysterious "Red" following. Later, according to Hedger, the paper office was ransacked and the safe found open. After taking about $450.00 from the wall safe, the men then broke open the butter refrigerator where $50.00 more was stolen. They then locked in that room for safe keeping pending their return. Hedger still contended that only seven pounds of butter were taken by him and his alleged accomplices, the majority of which was recovered in a granite pan in the Hedger home.

Upon their arrival back home the money was "split" three ways, Hedger is alleged to have told the police. Manahan and "Red" leaving the Hedger home early Sunday, morning to return. Today local and provincial police proceeded back to the Thurlow farm where Hedger was arrested yesterday afternoon. Local authorities Hedger had cached the greater part of the split near Plainfield.

ACCUSED TALKS DURING INTERVAL

Evidence Submitted by Hotel Clerk Taxi-Man And Salesman

Harold W. Vermilyea continued his seemingly impassive attitude of the morning, except during a short intermission, when ladies were sitting behind him who, so far as they knew, were unknown to him. To one, however, a brother in an employee in the court house, he said, "What are you writing, that you are here every day, Mrs.—sitting up at the front?"

To the other lady, who lives in Trenton, he said: "You are Mrs.—, is your friend (pointing to her companion) another of the family?

Both were amazed as so far as they know, have never met the accused nor have been pointed out to him. Also, he was sitting all afternoon with his back toward them.

The Thursday afternoon session of the court house trial consisted of the evidence of witnesses from out of Belleville and gave the accused's alleged movements from the time he purchased the axe until his return, including the purchase of the hatchet from the Belleville Hardware. Also the hiring of John Bannas, the taxi driver, on the two trips to Belleville, until he was driven back to Toronto from his second trip to Belleville. During the examination of James Nichols, clerk of the Robt. Simpson Company, considerable amusement was occasioned owing to the admission of the conversation that took place between himself and the purchaser. Justice Jeffrey asked the jury to leave the courtroom until the witness had given his evidence and finally decided by the judge that Hedger and two men could remain as such conversation and the case was proceeded with, with the return of the jury.

Wallace Parker, clerk at the Parker House, Front St., was the first name called to the stand, where he had been employed for twenty years.

He recognized the hatchet as one sold by the clerk, Nichols, on the morning of January 17th, 1934. He identified the accused in the newspapers previous to the time he appeared in a police line-up of twelve men in Toronto.

James Nichols, a salesman in the hardware department of the Robt. Simpson Company, Toronto, the witness could not absolutely identify the accused as the man who purchased the hatchet, but from the point the clash occurred between council regarding the admission of the conversation that took place between all of the jury from the court. When the hatchet was produced the witness said the purchaser decided to take the "fathers" hatchet and was then immediately wrapped and taken away by him. Nichol stated that this type of hatchet had been the only one sold by him up until that time.

Questioning of John Bannas, the taxi driver was continued to considerable length, particularly the evidence counsel. Bannas, a native of Poland has resided in Toronto for several years and speaks rather broken English but gave his answers in an intelligent manner and was not greatly flustered by the cross examination he went through.

He brought to mind strongly resembling the accused to Belleville twice, once on Oct. 1st and again on Oct. 4th, leaving both days at three, stopped for supper at Trenton and proceeding on here, arriving in the city around nine and parking in Belleville Service, on Victoria St. near Mr. Fred Smith's residence which he recognized from a photo by a Mail and Empire man railing in front of the house. On the second trip, his passenger left the taxi and returned in a quarter hour saying, "Oh, are you still here?" on which Bannas replied, "Certainly, I'm still here, you told me to wait". "All right" said the man and then left. Two or three twenty minutes he returned and ordered, "All right, drive back to Toronto Wheeler". This was done with the passenger riding most of the way in the back seat, where he wrapped in rugs, reaching this destination at 11.30 or 1 a.m. Three dollars was the passenger paid the balance of $5.00 owing out of the $15.00 agreed on at the start. Bannas, also, stated that accused wore a grey fedora to Trenton both times and there changed it for a cap and then changed back to the fedora on the return to Toronto. Witness, also identified two overcoats shown him as being identical with the two accused had on both trips to Belleville.

CONDEMNED PACES ALONG HIS CELL

'Daily News' Story Says Second Man Sought Over Ransom

(By William A. Kinney)

Flemington, N.J., Feb. 15.—(AP)—Bruno Hauptmann, awaiting his removal to the death house, placed in the public today his hope of a successful appeal against his conviction for the Lindbergh baby slaying.

"I haven't a dollar," the condemned man told his counsel, "and must depend on the public."

In his only interview during four months in the Hunterdon County Jail, the Bronx carpenter was asked late yesterday, whether he could not "possibly name 'persons connected with' the kidnapping of the Lindbergh baby."

"As God is my Judge," was the reply, "I cannot confess for there is nothing to confess."

"If I had any confession to make I would have made it months ago and saved my wife and child all this worry."

Says Everything Told

"I told everything, on my word of honor. That is, I mean I have not lied to cover up anybody."

But the New York Daily News said in a copyright article today not only were two men involved in the $50,000 ransom fraud— Hauptmann was identified as the principal recipient, but police knew the identity of the second man as well as the first.

This man, the News said, was the one, who hid his face with a handkerchief when he was arrested with Charles A. Lindbergh's automobile, while the driver of the main beer awaited his ransom emissary, Dr. J. F. Condon. The mystery of the concealed and original handkerchief apparently as a signal to the ransom collector.

Initial efforts to reach District Attorney Foley of the Bronx and other officers for confirmation of the article were fruitless.

At New York Police Headquarters, however, the Lindbergh file, filling several large cabinets, was closed and stored away in the basement.

Last Day In Jail

Hauptmann, protesting his innocence, told the reporter:

"If I have to go to the electric chair, I go like a man."

Hauptmann's last day in the County Jail. From there he goes to the State prison at Trenton, where a cell in the death house has been prepared for him.

Counsel attorneys he delegated the task of obtaining funds for an appeal. They questioned him in vain, hoping to learn of friends or fraternal organizations which might help and then sent out hope the public would aid.

Hauptmann said two $2 bills were all the money he had had since his arrest. They came from an unidentified contributor.

The prisoner said he turned them over to his wife, adding: "because I needed them."

Edward J. Reilly, Chief of Defence Counsel estimated the cost of carrying the fight through higher courts at $25,000.

Hauptmann Faces Call

Hauptmann, pale and restless, paced his brightly lighted cell while he talked. The trial had left him worn out, he said, but he felt "all right".

Absolutely, I am innocent," he said, "Otherwise I would have said, 'I am guilty'.

"If they were to come to me in the middle of the night and say go free If you would tell the whole truth. I would say, 'I told you everything I know. There is witness stand'."

"The State," he complained bitterly, "tried to show only the bad things about me. They made it appear to take my life for nothing."

"The most ridiculous thing in the world," he declared, "was the board in the attic. Why should I go up in the attic for a board, when I had a whole pile of lumber in my garage?"

INSURANCE BILL VOTE ON MONDAY

Bourassa Opposes on Social and Constitutional Grounds

Ottawa, Feb. 15 (CP)—Although only one member has announced opposition to the Unemployment Insurance bill the measure provided a high political hurdle as debate on its second reading moved to a close in the House of Commons today. Prime Minister R. B. Bennett will bring debate to an end and a vote will be taken on Monday or Tuesday, Mr. Bennett will get and he answer constitutional objections advanced by the Liberal opposition.

Charging Liberals with a narrow political outlook, Hon. R. J. Manion, Minister of Railways and Canals, said the Liberals when they preached co-operation and practicing opposition. They said the bill was invalid and of no use yet they intended to support it.

The Leader, Rt. Hon. W. L. Mackenzie King claimed he had always been in favor of unemployment insurance and yet had done nothing during his nine years of office. He said the effect and was doing nothing now but putting obstacles in the way, said Dr. Manion. If Liberals were honest they would vote against it after the speeches they had made.

Prime Minister R. B. Bennett replied he remembered, Dr. Manion refused, but at least he had courage to act about correcting the evils which Rutchford had questioned the validity of the bill and at the same time asserted the Liberal party had always favored unemployment insurance.

Bourassa Opposes

The lone opponent of the bill was Henri Bourassa, Independent member for Labelle, who said he was against it on constitutional and social grounds. He said it was another example of collectivism, a tendency to age English legislation without regard to its suitability to conditions in Canada.

He was opposed to the policy of granting favor by pouring money into the pockets of the people. It could have no effect but to create a great body of loafers, who could always look to the state for support. The fact, that England had such an act meant nothing because conditions were different there. The bill was just another example of the petty colonial outlook which thought nothing but good could come from adoption of anything English.

It was in line with a "policy of spend-spending" which had begun during the war and since the war and which was demoralizing to all classes.

At the time of election, said Dr. Manion, the people would have to decide between "a man who always talks about his principles and does not practice them and a man like the present leader of the government who may at times perhaps be inconsistent in some of his statements but who has the courage and ability to bring into effect corrections of the economic system under which we are living in order to save that system in which we believe."

Could Have Had Fund

If one percent of the accumulated wages in 1931 had been put in an insurance scheme a fund of $25,000,000 would have been built up in a single year said Dr. Manion. That was an indication of the benefits, which would have accrued had the proposals against unemployment insurance during the years they were in power.

The greatest theoretical reformer we have ever had in this country had been Leader of the opposition," said Dr. Manion. "If this man Mackenzie King was convicted the same day had been as good at practicing ability as the leader of the opposition he would have been acquitted.

The people realized the Prime Minister had the vision and courage to undertake to correct the evils of the system. No system in which young people coming out of schools and colleges could not find work, in which men could not obtain enough to support themselves and their families was a good system. The Prime Minister was trying to correct the situation from within and the Liberals were doing everything to oppose it.

Mass Buying Commission to Soon Begin Writing Report

Expect a Number of Recommendations Will be Made

Ottawa, Feb. 15 (CP)—The Royal Commission on Mass Buying has not yet begun to write its report, the Commissioners busying themselves with a study of the evidence. Some weeks may still elapse before a report is finally drafted. It seems to be accepted, that the Commission will make strong recommendations looking to the amelioration of many evils disclosed during their probe.

Uniform labor legislation, particularly relating to minimum wages for both male and female workers and to hours of work, is believed to be a recommendation in the commission's mind. Commissioners generally are in favor of tightening up the present minimum wage laws and making operation of "sweatshops" a criminal offence.

Amendments to the Combines Investigation Act giving industry right to organize within itself, but under government approval and regulation, are likely to be urged. Legislation will also be asked to make watering of stock in incorporated companies somewhat more difficult to achieve than at present according to well informed opinion here.

Evidence adduced before both the Parliamentary Committee and the Royal Commission showed instances of gross violations of the minimum wage laws of both Ontario and Quebec. At the same time evidence was offered supervision of minimum wage enforcement officers was slack, chiefly in Toronto. It is anticipated the Commission will urge closer check on these industries employing women to ensure proper observance of the minimum wage laws and recommend uniformity in these enactments.

Challenge Legality

The practice of dismissing female workers, who failed to make the minimum and replacing them with men for whom there is no minimum wage legislation is expected to result in proposals for establishment of minimum wage laws for male workers, coupling this with maximum working hours.

The right of the Ontario minimum wage Board to make regulations, that if a firm paid minimum rate to 80 percent of its female personnel it was regarded as complying with the law was challenged during the Commission's sittings.

From this challenge the report may call attention of the Provincial Government to the legal aspect of this.

ELECTRIC HAND

SEE IT—TRY IT ON THE 1935 HUDSONS AND HUDSON-BUILT TERRAPLANES

"A GREAT IDEA!" say thousands who are enjoying this brand new driving experience, in Hudson-built cars with the Electric Hand.

Women are calling it the greatest convenience since the self-starter. Men find it makes driving easier, more enjoyable, safer, than ever before.

What is the Electric Hand? Not an automatic shift—but a new and vastly better method of gear control. You shift as you always have, yet never take your hands from the wheel. You can select in advance the gear you want to use next; the Electric Hand does the shifting—smoothly, silently—when you're ready.

New Cars—New Features

Crowds are flocking to see this "surprise feature" wherever it is being shown. It's standard on Hudson Custom Eights and optional, for a small amount extra, on all other 1935 Hudsons and Terraplanes. And, besides the Electric Hand, these cars offer many other things that are new.

There's the first steel roof. You ride with protecting steel all around you in any 1935 Hudson-built car. A steel floor beneath. Steel overhead. And Bendix Rotary-Equalized Brakes—combining all the outstanding advantages of all braking systems in one. Velvet pedal action. Absolutely equal pressure on all four husky brake drums. Nothing less sturdy than steel to insure never-failing safety.

You stop more quickly, more smoothly, in a short, straight line.

Dirigible Disasters

Unprecedented disasters have struck at the lighter-than-air craft in the past few years until now the Macon, the last of the air-bags itself has crashed. Fortunately sufficient warning was given to prevent a very heavy loss of life, two men being missing. ZR-3, U. S. Roma, Shenandoah, Akron, and now the Macon have been lost.

Germany has had better fortune with her lighter-than-air craft, the Graf Zeppelin having made numerous trips and completed the girdle of the globe. But Britain had a tragic experience in the explosion of the R-101 in France with heavy loss of life.

The success of the German craft and the troubles which have faced the British and United States dirigibles have led to the belief that there may be some form of structural weakness in the British and American vessels.

The war of the two schools, those favoring the heavier-than-air machines and those advocating dirigibles is again renewed with full force. Britain gave her construction of the type after the disaster in France. Will the United States yield to the crashes which have made the dirigible history of the United States very black indeed? Will Germany build more of this type of vessel? is another question.

SOS Calls

It comes with a great deal of satisfaction to be informed that the SOS calls of Phillip Lord ("Seth Parker") in the South Seas for his four-master schooner were not for publicity. Lord quotes Commander McLeod of the Australia, which left its course to go to the aid of the Seth Parker as saying: "I realize what you have been through and am satisfied that there has never been any question of you calling upon me unnecessarily." Later the Captain when making mention of the Seth Parker climbed aboard the Australia, decided to stay alongside the vessel until a United States boat arrived.

Had the appeals been mere publicity stunting, the tradition of the sea would have been violated and there would have been warrant for an investigation as the sending out of false messages necessary help would be a grave breach of the sea code which might lead to doubt in future as to whether messages were genuine. This would be a tragedy for the sea code must be kept strict.

It is good news to the seafaring and to landsmen alike, to know that there has been no violation of the tradition of the sea and that the story of hoax has been given denial.

Famous Trial Ended

After the greatest trial on record from the standpoint of world interest in the proceedings, of the family of Lindbergh, in the fact that a kidnapping was accompanied by the death of a child, in the fact that a ransom was collected, in the length of the trial, and the many other features as in the bringing of witnesses from Germany, Bruno Richard Hauptmann has been sentenced to die in the electric chair at Trenton, N.J., on the count of murder.

The finding of the jury has vindicated the good names of three dead persons, the butler, the Morrow maid, Miss Betty Sharpe, and Isador Fisch, the one-time friend of Hauptmann as also the good name of Betty Gow from hints thrown out during the course of the trial, that the kidnaping with the sequel of death to the Lindbergh child was the result of co-operation "from the inside". One can understand the feelings of relatives of those who have passed away in finding in the verdict proof that no smirch attaches to their reputations.

For protection of society there must be law and punishment for breaking the law. No one gloats over the condemned man. It is a sad fact, a hard, stern duty, the jury and the state and the people had to face and to perform.

It is also one of the unavoidable facts of life—that no one lives to himself and that every act of a human bears its course on to the end of time affecting every other human being. It is like the ripple of water which starts with the throwing of a pebble and which does not cease extending until it reaches the farthest shore. The death of little Charles Augustus Lindbergh was an awful fact, which will leave its mark on another little boy, the innocent baby son of the man, whom the jury believes started this terrible train of consequences.

Rural School Fires

Stoney Creek has a fire department of which the county may well be proud. Its members are enthusiasts; they take their job of fire-fighting seriously; their equipment, assembled with their own hands and in their spare time, is one of the smartest and most efficient pieces of apparatus to be found in any rural district in the province. Recently, these firemen have been thinking about the school children. Suppose a fire was to break out while the pupils were in their classrooms, would there be a panic and unnecessary loss of life?

To think is to act with these fire-fighters. They knew that in the cities the students are given regular fire drill, but this precaution has been neglected in rural schools. On their own initiative as a purely voluntary effort they secured the needed permission, and the captain and first chief visited the rustic halls of learning in Saltfleet. They inspected the buildings, took down particulars of their construction and put the pupils smartly through a fire drill. The youngsters now know how to comport themselves in the event of a fire. They will file out orderly through the nearest exit. They and the teachers are now capable of dealing with the situation.

A fire in a school is not a frequent event, but it is always a possibility. Schools have been struck by lightning, have been burned to the ground, and children's lives lost. It is just as well to be prepared for the emergency, even if it never comes. Conditions in the Saltfleet schools generally were found satisfactory.

The information that Stoney Creek fire department has collected enables it to decide before arrival at the scene of a fire how the conflagration can best be attacked; but more important are the facts that hazardous conditions will be corrected, where possible, and the children have been trained to make their way to safety without panic. Saltfleet parents will now feel that their children while at school are more secure than ever. The Stoney Creek fire department is to be commended for its enterprise, and we hope that its example will soon be followed by other rural brigades.—Hamilton Spectator.

Diagnosis First, Then Treatment

Mayor McGeer of Vancouver, who is having some trouble with holders of Vancouver bonds over a proposed cut in interest rates, has at least met his creditors' wishes in one major respect. At yesterday's meeting he agreed to call in Mr. Thomas Bradshaw, of Toronto, an expert in municipal finances, and consult him upon Vancouver's position. This is all to the good, and shows a willingness to face facts. But, if we may judge from the Montreal precedent, the real fun will begin when Mr. Bradshaw has made his recommendations. Having asked his advice, will Vancouver accept it?

Not so long ago, Mr. Bradshaw was invited to Montreal, officially, to study the financial situation and make recommendations. He did so, and with three assistants formed the Montreal Brain Trust, Number Two. The Number One was already forgotten. In due course he reported, presenting his analysis and recommendations. Within a week the second Brain Trust and its reports were consigned by City Hall to oblivion, where they joined Number One. The moral of this tale is so plain that it would be a pity to spoil it by further comment.—Montreal Star.

Lincoln Anecdotes

In repeating a Lincoln anecdote one must face the criticism that it is old or not authentic. If it may be chosen, even if open to either criticism, not because it is particularly humorous, but because it is characteristic of the man. One member of his Cabinet, it is told, had quarreled with another. He wrote him a vitriolic letter, which he showed or read to Lincoln. The President interrupted him with appreciative remarks and laughter, and then put the letter in a pigeon hole in his own desk. When the Minister asked for it, Lincoln said, "Oh, you weren't going to send that, were you? It is a splendid letter to write, but not to send." Much trouble would be avoided if every sharp letter were submitted to such a counsellor.—London Advertiser.

Joy Like the Wind

Though bliss may be rooted deep, deep as a tree,
I would have joy like the wind is, free;
Wild joy which can lift up the heart like a bird
And leave not one leaf of the forest unstirred!

My pulse does not quicken for silver or gold,
Things the world most desires leave me heedless and cold,
For the treasures most fabled, most prized upon Earth
Leave the life drained of dreams and the heart drained of mirth.

I would have joy free from fetters that chain
The thoughts to the cares of all worldly domain;
Who possesses great riches by them is possessed,
I would have joy like a song in my breast!

As sweet as the notes of the linnet or
Or the mocking-bird's song to the stars in the dark,
This the joy which can lift up my heart like a bird
And leave not one leaf of my being unstirred!

—Aline Michaelis.

"WHAT IS LIFE BUT A LOT OF DREAMS" quoth the Judge trying the case of one who registered at an hotel as "Lady Creighton, of Nottingham, England", as recorded in the first column of the Front Page of this GFJ Tuesday. The lady in question lived as "A Lady for a Day", in fact for several days, but when the hotel management demanded money she had it not, hence the court action. And the learned Judge soliloquized some more as follows: "What is life but a lot of dreams, anyway. The only difference is that some build their air castles on a soft parlor chair and others carry them into execution." Roselyn Keasler was the lady for a day, or three days to be exact, and her hotel bill was in the neighborhood of fifty dollars which was paid by her attorney and Rose retired to private life.

RICHARD BRUNO HAUPTMANN, after being the centre of one of the most sensational court trials of recent years, charged with kidnapping and murder was found guilty by the jury of eight men and four women and sentenced to be executed in the electric chair on March 15. The case dragged on for weeks but the concluding actions were swift and dramatic. The jury took plenty of time to consider their verdict, but, out eleven hours, but once the verdict was rendered Justice Trenchard did not delay the sentence, which was delivered at once, to the man in the electric chair. The trial furnished sensational episodes all through, but the closing scenes furnished sensationalism never before seen in a court of justice, and scenes which would certainly not be tolerated for a moment in a British court of law. The Prosecuting Attorney in a savage personal attack upon the accused called Hauptmann among other things "an animal", and "Public Enemy No. 1." A feature also of the closing scenes centred in the attention paid to each other by opposing counsel. Each started out with eulogies of his opponent's ability, sincerity, and goodness in general, but wound up by saying just the reverse. The brightest spot of the entire trial was Justice Trenchard who preserved what little dignity remained with the court after the moving picture men and news photographers and broadcasters made a play out of it. That any jurist could preserve any semblance of dignity and help to retain some of the symbols of a court of justice, under the sensational circumstances reflects great credit upon the presiding Judge, upon whom fell the only one concerned in the trial who kept his head throughout.

A Chicago man, who is a great believer in efficiency, hung up a sign in his office one day, saying: "Do It Now." Within 24 hours the cashier bolted with the contents of the safe, his stenographer eloped with his eldest son, the office boy threw the ink bottle into the electric fan, and the remainder of his staff struck for a six-hour day. Now he is looking for a new motto.

LABOR LEADER TO ASK FOR CENSURE

Says Government Has Forfeited Confidence of Country

London, Feb. 14 (CP)—The Labor Party opened up all its guns against the National Government today with its veteran leader, George Lansbury, asking the House of Commons for a vote of censure.

Lansbury charged the government with having forfeited the confidence of the country by its lack of a policy for dealing with unemployment and for its "muzzling" methods on unemployment relief.

While the Labor opposition cheered long and loudly the labor leader declared:

"We do not want to say we are charging the government with dishonorable conduct in the ordinary sense of the word, but we are charging it with gross incompetence."

CODE SIGNALS MISUNDERSTOOD

Erroneous Verdict in Hauptmann Case Flashed to Papers

Flemington, N.J., Feb. 14 (AP)—A misunderstanding of code signals last night resulted in the Associated Press flashing an erroneous verdict in the Hauptmann case.

In transmitting the report, the decision was garbled and the first word to reach waiting newspapers was that the jury had found Hauptmann guilty, but with a recommendation for life sentence. The correct verdict was guilty, with the death penalty.

Short-wave transmission, employing code, was set up to relay the verdict. The staff had been cautioned not to confuse signals and to be certain that the report received were from the Associated Press representative.

When word came from the court room that the jury had reached a report, however, the Associated Press man on the receiving end picked up the wrong code signal, resulting in the erroneous and premature flash.

The courtroom being closed, ominutes passed before the mistake in error was learned. The flash and bulletins were killed exactly 11 minutes after transmission of the erroneous report, but too late to catch some editions of newspaper which had issued extras.

DEBATE MERITS OF HOME AND FOREIGN MISSIONS

Plainfield, Feb. 15. — The Plainfield Young People met on Tuesday evening at the home of Mr. and Mrs. R. Denyes with an attendance of thirty-eight members and visitors. In the absence of the president, Miss Mary Marshall, who was ill, the vice-president opened the meeting with a hymn and the Lord's prayer repeated in unison. The minutes were read by Mrs. Stanley Hassard who also called the role which was answered by giving the name of a place in Northern Ontario with which our home missionaries are associated, 14 being missionary evening. One new member was enrolled.

Mrs. Julian Moore, the missionary convener, then took charge; a hymn was sung and Mrs. Clarence Hall was asked to conduct the worship period which included a hymn, the reading of the lesson and the explanation by Mrs. Hall and prayer by the pastor.

Goldie Colden, Phyllis Hall, Mrs. Harry Hazelton and Jack Gee rendered number which was much enjoyed. A debate, "Resolved that home missions are more important than foreign missions" was then given from by Miss Mabel Hoskins and Mrs. Charles Beatty for the negative and Luther Elliott and Arthur Carlton for the affirmative. Harry Harrison acted as time keeper. Mrs. Clarence Hall, Mrs. Eric B. Denyes and Rev. J. P. Everson as judges. Mr. Everson in giving the report for the judges stated it was difficult for the judges as each debater had given evidence of much preparation and thought being given to the subject and had brought out many good points making it very interesting for the listeners, proving the significance of missionary work both at home and abroad. When the judges had all worked separately compared and istated their findings it was discovered that the result was a tie.

A vote of thanks was tendered the debaters for their splendid effort. Mrs. Everson moved and Mrs. Clarence Hall seconded a vote of thanks to Mr. and Mrs. Denyes for the use of their home for the meeting. The meeting was closed with a hymn and prayer by Mrs. Harrison.

Mrs. Moore led in a musical contest after which the hostess treated the guests to home-made candy.

PROHIBITED TO TRADE IN GRAIN

Arthur Cutten Guilty of Violating Grain Futures Act

Washington, Feb. 14.—(AP)—Arthur W. Cutten, Chicago millionaire and former citizen of Guelph, Ont., today was prohibited by the Grain Futures Commission from trading on any United States Grain Market for a period of ten years.

The Commission found Cutten guilty of violating the Grain Futures Act "by attempting to manipulate" prices by concealing his transactions on the Chicago Board of Trade.

The decision was reached February 13, but was not announced by the Commission—composed of Secretaries Wallace of Agriculture and Roper of Commerce and Attorney General Cummings — until Cutten had been advised of the findings.

The Commission found that Cutten had transacted his business through eight commission firms, and carefully arranged them to split his tradings into 35 accounts, names of relatives and associates for the purpose of concealment.

It also found that during 1930 he made no reports of his transactions, as required under the Grain Futures Act, when he controlled in excess of 500,000 bushels of wheat on 130 days during the year.

On account of the year 1931, the mission said, "respondent (Cutten) made reports required by the Grain Futures Administration, none of which was true or correct as a statement of his net position on the market on the day covered by such report."

On 110 days during 1931 Cutten was found by the Commission to have traded wheat futures in excess of 500,000 bushels and during the year 1932, he made no reports.

Cutten's purpose "in concealing his position in the market was to manipulate the price of grain and to refuse to make large profits," the Commission said. "He systematically allocated purchases and sales of wheat futures to the various accounts in order to keep them under 500,000 bushels, and this to avoid detection."

REPORT OF GRAND JURY

To the Honourable Chief Justice Jeffrey:

Your Lordship:

We, the Grand Jury for the Court of Oyer and Terminer and General Gaol Delivery of the County of Hastings, beg leave to report as follows:

We wish to thank your Lordship for the very careful way our duties were presented to us.

We desire to thank Mr. George A. Urquhart, K.C., Crown Prosecutor and Crown Attorney R. O. Donnelly, together with Chief Mr. C. French and his assistants for their attention during our service as Grand Jurors.

We visited the County Gaol under the leadership of Mr. G. H. French and Mr. Winters. We found everything in a very satisfactory condition. A new floor has been put in on the top corridor, which is more sanitary and is easily cleaned. The walls and ceilings have all been freshly painted and have a very good appearance.

We find incarcerated in the Gaol nineteen male prisoners. We find them all contented and satisfied with their surroundings and the institution in a first class condition.

We then visited the Ontario Home of Refuge and would report two very efficient people in charge, especially in the persons of Mr. and Mrs. Sandercock. We would like to say also that the sanitation and healthful condition which prevailed throughout that institution is unsurpassed. We would suggest that the front part of the building be given a coat of paint. We understand that the fire escapes are now under government inspection and have been advised that their report has already been submitted to the County Council. We find the water supply inadequate for fire protection and would suggest that it be remedied as soon as possible. At the present time we find many small but necessary repairs to the different corridors and the work could be completed with little assistance by all concerned.

We next visited the Children's Shelter and found the same sanitary conditions existed there under the capable management of Miss Harris and we congratulate her upon the condition in the Shelter at the time of our arrival. We also examined the fire escapes and found them in an excellent condition.

All of which is respectfully submitted.

Dan MacDonald, Foreman.

"TOUCHING TOES" AT AGE 76

Although She Had Stiff Joints When She Was 65

HAS TAKEN KRUSCHEN FOR 10 YEARS

Can you touch your toes without bending your knees? Will you be able to do it when you're 75? There is no reason why you should not, if you follow this woman's method of keeping fit. She writes:—

"When I was 65 my wrists and ankles began to swell. I was unable to turn my head round. As I did not care to qualify for the chimney corner, I decided to try Kruschen Salts. I have taken it regularly for ten years, and I have good health. I walk two miles or more each day, and can easily touch my toes without bending my knees—which I think good, considering I shall be 76 in two months' time. Only to-day I was asked how I managed to keep looking so well. I replied, 'I am a Kruschen!'"—(Mrs.) E.M.P.

Most people grow old long before their time because they neglect one vital need of health—the need for internal cleanliness.

Eventually they start the healthy Kruschen habit. Then, probably for the first time in their lives, they start getting rid every day of all waste matter from the system. Instead of being clogged, the intestines are clean and clear, instead of liver and kidneys being sluggish, they are active and efficient. Now, healthy blood goes coursing through the veins—carrying health and strength and energy to every part of the body.

And almost immediately you feel your youth has returned; you feel young, energetic and happy. In a word, you've got that famous "Kruschen Feeling."

DENIES GARNISHEES USED

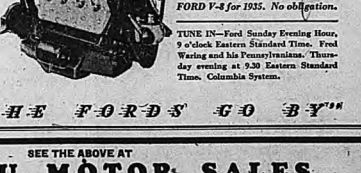
Windsor, Feb 14—(CP)—Lawyers, officials of collection agencies and the clerk of the Seventh Division Court joined today in refutation of the accusation by Mayor Arthur Reaume of Sandwich, that garnishees were being used unscrupulously against men who had been unemployed for some time and have just restarted work.

"THIS NEW FORD FOR '35

Gives Proved V-8 Performance—PLUS"

New BUOYANT Comfort on Front and Back Seats

Roomier Bodies—Modern Beauty—Perfect Control Ease



For three years the Ford V-8 has set precedents of performance and economy in car operation. There are 1,300,000 satisfied Ford V-8 owners to-day.) And with the new Car, Ford continues to make automobile history. Not since the introduction of the first V-8 have such notable improvements been presented in a Ford car.

Now, for 1935, to the superb efficiency of the Ford V-8 engine and the safety of the all-steel body, we have added the buoyancy of Centre-Poise riding . . more spacious interior . . luxurious new appointments . . new simplified control . . and long, harmonious body lines that suggest flight and fleetness.

Back-seat riders now have front-seat comfort, because they are located ahead of the rear axle. Wider seats give greater room for passengers, all of whom are Centre-Poised, that is, poised between the wheels and axles. (Longer, more flexible springs, forward position of engine and more equal distribution of the easy Centre-Poise ride.) New low pedal pressure clutch, larger improved brakes and "finger-touch" steering make for stabilized control at all speeds.

It's well worth while to remember that this New Ford V-8 automobile is by far the most economical Ford ever built. You need only try the Ford V-8 for '35 to be convinced it's the car for you to own and drive.

The powerful Ford V-8 engine actually uses no more fuel than a "four." Among its refinements for 1935 are "Directed-Flow" Crankcase Ventilation, Floating Connecting-Rod Bearings and Cast-Alloy-Steel Crankshaft. The Time-and-tested V-8 engine is available in no other automobile selling in Canada at less than $4,000.00.

"Tip" Tummon led his team mates with four counters, Elsbury, Laiffman and J. Cameron each counted twice and J. Tummon once. Maguire and Akey refereed.

The line-ups:

Tweed—Goal, Mouck; defence, Leal and Bowers; centre, Elsbury; wings, Laiffman and J. Courneyea; subs, J. Tummon, Tip Tummon, D. Courneyea, Arker.

Prospects for organizing a band locally are very bright. With the coming to Tweed of Mr. W. E. Dark, a cornetist of more than ordinary ability, and a band leader of experience, considerable interest has been aroused and already some steps have been taken to canvass the situation in Tweed and Sulphide. It is confidently expected that there will be material developments in a short time as there is a number of old bandsmen in the community who still doubtless welcome an opportunity to get back into action again.

AT THE BELLE
"Imitation of Life"
And Why This Story Was Written

What does a woman call success in life? When a question like that strikes the mind of a writer like Fannie Hurst the result is very likely to be a novel that will set hundreds of thousands of people thinking. Her answer to the success question was written in the 363 pages of "Imitation of Life" which has been made into a motion picture with Claudette Colbert starred; it plays tomorrow (Saturday) and Monday, matinee and evening, at Belle Theatre.

There is an interesting story behind this novel and its strange and provocative title which will give an idea how an author brings a literary creation into being.

Early in 1931, Miss Hurst was troubled. There was a great theme for a novel in the back of her head but it would not come clear. What in definite shape it had was in the form of a nouns story. The author had already created that theme in two previous novels, "Back Street" and "A President is Born". But each of these books had been about self-made men. She wanted to write about a self-made woman. The problem was what kind of a woman to centre the story on.

Miss Hurst had long considered the role that woman plays in the modern world the most exciting subject for an author, of any that presents itself today. Women had become doctors, lawyers, politicians. There were active women. Were they able to absorb themselves in business affairs during the business day, or, as Miss Hurst wrote in a letter to her publishers, was it always "still Sex o'clock" with them. Her answer came to her unexpectedly.

In the daily papers of that time appeared the story of an amazing woman who from virtually nothing had built up a chain of food shops which brought her great wealth and social eminence. In these news articles, Miss Hurst had found the character to build her story around. She sensed a missing element in this brilliant career and set to work to bring it out in a novel.

More than a year later her publishers, Harper's, received the manuscript of "Imitation of Life" which did the story of one of the most appealing characters the novelist has as yet created, Bea Pullman. Bea is a young woman who after the death of her husband, whom she had really loved, sets out to support her little daughter and herself by selling maple syrup from door to door. With the help of a colored woman she opens a little pancake shop and later makes a fortune by boxing the pancake flour and selling it. When Bea enters her life, not only her daughter is then grown; an unusual triangle develops. Bea realizes that success and fame do not constitute real living, that it has all been an imitation of life until love came.

In "Imitation of Life", Warren William who played Caesar to Claudette Colbert's Cleopatra in the recent film of that title is with her again. John M. Stahl who directed Fannie Hurst's success "Back Street", directed "Imitation of Life", expending fourteen weeks of steady filming in the process of production.

AT THE CAPITOL
"Broadway Bill"
Frank Capra's Magnificent Race Track Drama

At the rail of the Saratoga Race Track in New York late last summer watching the Saratoga Gold Cup Race stood a rather short, dark-haired young man. His eyes surveyed the colorful scene with appreciation. The jockeys assumed their places and the horses lined up at the barrier. In ra-flash a dozen glistening bodies hurled forward. The young man put his binoculars to his eyes and followed the lightning-like procession around the track. As the finish line was approached Dark Secret, a horse that had attracted a little attention up to that time, plunged into the lead—a winner!

The deafening roar from thousands of throats was suddenly hushed and a shudder ran through the grandstands. Dark Secret had stumbled and broken its leg—and in a few moments a bullet of mercy put an end to the beginning of a great career.

Touched by the irony of the tragedy the young man turned from the rail and walked silently away. In Hollywood he would have been instantly recognized. He was Frank Capra, director of "Broadway Bill", the sensational screen hit now showing at the Capitol Theatre. Just a few days before Capra had filmed a sequence in "Broadway Bill" in which a dark horse owned by Warner Baxter in "Broadway Bill," a delightful romantic comedy in the mood and spirit of the former Capra-Columbia success, "It Happened One Night."

Capitol latest news flashes and "Under Dog," a clever Pooch the Pup Cartoon will be shown at each performance.

Shows at 2:30; 7:15; 9:15.

PREDICTS SOARING OF CATTLE PRICES

Hon. Duncan Marshall Says Peak of Years to be Reached

Toronto, Feb. 15.—Hon. Duncan Marshall, Minister of Agriculture, announced last night that, within the next six months, the farmers of Ontario will be receiving the highest price for their cattle in many years. In making his announcement at last night's annual banquet of the Ontario Veterinary Association, the minister declared that his statement was based on facts which he had obtained from a personal visit to the stock yards of Chicago and St. Paul, Minnesota.

While inspecting the Chicago stock yards, the minister said that he was told that the price of cattle had soared to 814 a hundredweight. The firm had told him that they had just bought 11 cars of cattle from Winnipeg, had paid the duty and the freight down and still were able to make a profit of two cents a pound.

The minister stated that only yesterday he had received a cable from Scotland to say that at an auction in Perth the six top bull calves had brought in an average price of $10,400 apiece.

Twelve of the bulls which were sold in Scotland yesterday are coming out to Canada," he said.

Engineer Loses Life In Wreck of Freights, Local Man Badly Hurt

reported three other members of the two train crews had jumped and in the confusion gained their feet. At the time visibility was poor due to fog.

Winchester had been a railwayman for 27 years. Nickle had but recently been called back to work after being out of steady employment for some time. His home is in Belleville, but he had been living at a Hamilton hotel for the past two weeks.

Nickle left Belleville for Sarnia on February 2nd, having been idle for some time.

At Junction of Lines

The wreck occurred at a point where the tracks from the Harrington subdivision join the main line. Crews of the trains handle the switches at this point, the switch tower not having a man stationed in it for some years past.

It is learned the crews were blinded by the dense fog and each proceeded not knowing the presence of the other train. The force of the impact was emphasized by the fact the eastbound train was driven back 75 feet from the point where the trains met head on. Some of the freight cars buckled up, making high piles of bent and broken steel and splintered wood. Other cars toppled down a 15-foot embankment in extended form, some coming in the centre of the creek.

Rails were torn, twisted and broken for a hundred yards along the main line.

Responsibility for the crash will not be definitely known until an official investigation is held.

Brantford, Ont., Feb. 15 (CP) — Engineer Winchester, believed to be of Hamilton, was killed today, when two Canadian National freight trains crashed head on just west of Lynden, 10 miles northeast of Brantford. He jumped before the crash and his body was found at the bottom on the embankment, face downwards. It is believed he suffered a fractured skull.

Three others were injured.

William Nickle of Belleville, fireman on Winchester's locomotive, suffered a badly crushed right ankle and a puncture wound in his left side. He was taken to hospital in Hamilton, where doctors said they might have to amputate the leg above the ankle.

J. Connell, Hamilton, suffered an injury to his ankle and W. Burwell sprained his back.

Winchester was engineer on the first train, which was bound from Hamilton to Palmerston, which met a Sarnia freight head-on. The crash resulted in heavy damage to both engines and the cars of the trains piled up on the track completely blocking all traffic.

Traffic Disrupted

The wreck occurred at six o'clock and at 8.30 no wrecking auxiliary had as yet been called and it will have to be detoured at Hamilton from the east and at some point between Brantford and London on the west.

The accident was the first serious one in the division since the Christmas night tragedy at Branchton, which took 15 lives and injured 30 seriously.

Railway officials would offer no explanation of today's accident beyond the investigation.

Dr. Langs of Lynden was the first medical man on the scene and was followed by Dr. Lloyd Gamble, Lynden, Dr. R. W. Digby, Brantford and Dr. Burton, Dundas.

Dr. Chichester, of Dundas, is coroner for the district. Under the law an inquest will be held.

Fireman Thrilling

The freight travelling eastward and downgrade was composed of 75 cars and, or more, was the Hamilton train consisted of about 30 cars. The heavy weight behind the engines the giant steel bodies mushroomed into each other. Trucks were torn up in fantastic grapevine patterns for a hundred yards and freight cars were hurled about like match boxes. Trucks and wheels went flying about the right of way and the tracks were torn up.

The scene was an eerie one, an early morning fog almost blotting out vision. Adding to the difficulty of rescuers, who came to the aid of the crews in the engines, the ground was covered with a sheet of ice and water.

A wreckage train from Hamilton arrived about nine o'clock and started to work. The bodies of the firemen of the engines did not explode.

After Mr. Nickle's leg was crushed he was prepared for the operating table. Interviewed as he lay with surgeons and nurses hovering about him, Nickle had nothing to say. "All I heard was that the engineer was killed," he said.

"I don't know where any of the other members of the crew came from."

Winchester had been a railwayman for 27 years. Nickle had been but recently called back to work after being out of steady employment for some time. His home is in Belleville, but he had been living at a Hamilton hotel for the past two weeks.

Adrift Amongst Ice Floes for 26 Hours

With the presidency and vice-presidency of the United States as their ambition, two wards of the Belleville Children's Shelter, Henry Hardy, 16, and Charlie Weaver, 13, were rescued from a fragile craft on which they drifted and freight ice packs in Lake Ontario for over 26 hours. Their only means of sustenance was five ears of corn and two carrots. The youngsters who had pushed out into the lake off Wellington were found by the rescue boat, happily munching bread donated them by an aeroplane which aided in the search. ABOVE are photographs of the daring boy adventurers and their rescuers taken at the time of the rescue. They are from LEFT to RIGHT: (1) Dr. R. A. Thompson, Belleville, who attended the youngsters on arrival; Charlie Weaver, who wanted to be vice-president of United States; (2) Henry Hardy, the elder boy, who had not slept since Monday night, and Dick Ingram who reached the boys in a rowboat. CALLER DESCRIBED BY WITNESS

Witness said that the caller did not walk "in the hands of witness, "he left hurriedly".

Familiar Voice.

Speaking in a low voice barely audible to the press row, the maid described the caller as possessing a "familiar voice" "It appeared to be a "Verneyites voice", although witness had never previously met Harold Vermilyea.

Questioned by Mr. Urquhart brought the statement that the voice could be connected with the Vermilyea brothers. "He walked like one of the Vermilyea brothers," added witness.

Night of October 4.

On the night of October 4 Miss Mounteney, who was upstairs in the bathroom, heard the outside door bell ring. She testified that she heard the ring and later heard sounds of persons coming upstairs and going to Mrs. Vermilyea's bedroom. They stayed not longer than ten minutes in the bedroom. The time was fixed as about 9.30 p.m.

Name On Envelope.

During the interval between Oct. 1 and 4, a letter had been received by Mrs. Vermilyea from California, said witness. The name of the accused had been on it as a return address, she added.

Q. You saw this come in? A. Yes, Oct. 2. I delivered it to her.

A thorough search through the numerous marked exhibits for the inlative was engaged in by court officials and it was finally produced. Col. Greer for defence, however, objected to the letter being shown. The envelope was identified by Miss Mounteney.

Col. Greer took the witness:

He elected the statement that some four years ago Mrs. Vermilyea had spent a month's visit to relatives at the home of the accused.

Letters Regular.

Q. How often, Mrs. Vermilyea, receive these letters from her son in California?

A. Sometimes she'd get one every week.

Witness was not definite on the probable period during which these letters had been received so regularly. These letters were as a rule addressed by typewriter. "But they were not from the typewriter?"

A. Yes.

Q. Quietly and methodically Col. Greer pressed the point regarding the periods when typewriter letters were received. He specified time could be named by the soft-spoken witness, whose voice eventually hardly reached the jurors.

Of The Mother's Voice.

Q. So far as your mind was concerned, the first time you saw him was in connection with Mrs. Vermilyea, with a Vermilyea voice?

A. Yes.

Q. There was something common in the voice, to your ear, with that of Mrs. Vermilyea?

A. Yes.

Q. The light burning over the office door of the Farley home was kept burning as a matter of custom, said witness.

Q. Did you recognize this man when you opened the door that night—the first time?

A. There was something familiar about him—something about the voice.

No Disguise

Q. On the second call there was no disguise of voice or clothing; he was talking in his natural; you had a good view?

A. That is right.

Again Col. Greer returned and emphasized the question that no disguise of voice or clothing had been attempted on the second call, and Miss Mounteney's agreement from the nervous witness.

Reading of Notes.

Q. Have you any evidence you gave at the preliminary hearing before Magistrate Cook?

Q. When? A. On Monday, this week, snapped witness.

"I don't remember," answered Mr. Madden, "cautioned Col. Greer. "Don't give your discussions with anyone since? A. No.

Q. Whether it was her own personal notes she had referred to.

Lighting of House

Defence counsel spent a considerable period of time differentiating between the words "dimness" and "darkness" and the floor plan of the lower part of the Farley home.

Q. The hall was rather dimly lighted? A. Yes, it was. Witness agreeing with answers given at the preliminary hearing. Witness assumed a mild defiant attitude, pondered the questions more fully and answered in a low voice.

Q. The hall (in which the caller stood on the night in question) was not dimly lighted? A. Dimly lighted, not so well at the rear? A. Yes.

Q. Counsel referred the public to records of the preliminary hearing at this point.

Question of Voices

A half hour of questions was devoted to the identification of the voice of the caller. Crown Counsel Greer objected to the suggestion by defence that the jury retire and a ten minute intermission be allowed was permitted by Mr. Justice Jeffrey. Miss Mounteney resumed the stand, and the first request of counsel was given a chair.

Col. Greer: "Is my client present in the room?" The floor plan of the upstairs part of the Farley home was again gone over.

The voices heard upstairs by Miss Mounteney while she was in the bathroom on the second night of the visit could not be distinguished as either male or female, stated witness. She was then excused following further brief examination.

Adjournment was made by Justice Jeffrey until two o'clock.

'FARE' LOOKED LIKE VERMILYEA SAYS J. BANNAS

Taxi Driver of Toronto Occupies Long Time on Stand

TWO TRIPS MADE

Testifies Man Was Not Nervous and Talked Little

A neatly attired Polish-born taxi driver, resident of this country for the past twenty-eight years, added his testimony to the crime's evidence against Harold W. Vermilyea during the afternoon session of the latter's trial for the murder of his mother, yesterday afternoon.

John Bannas, Toronto, formerly of an address south of the Canadian Shrine and a member of the Intelligencer staff during that time, was the star witness during this stage of the proceedings. He gave testimony from the stand relative to Vermilyea as the man, who strongly resembled the one, who had purchased a hatchet-hatchet from him in the afternoon of October 2nd. The sale of those hatchets, pointed out the youthful clerk was an infrequent occurrence. He would thus be more liable to remember one.

Two types of hatchets were given the purchaser, recalled the clerk. One was the type marked as an efficient, the second was an ordinary "chopping" hatchet. The one purchased had been "marked down from $2.75 to $1.50. On the one sold the figures ($2.75) had been scratched, witness said; half way down the handle. Handed the hatchet, witness held it at arms length and pointed at some blurred figures on the head of the handle. The figure "1" was plainly visible, it was pointed out, but the remainder of the figures could not be made out. "Very often, however" said witness in answer to a question by Mr. Urquhart, "this grease pencil marking rubs out."

There had been a label on the hatchet when manufactured but this also had been rubbed off. The marked spot was shown by the witness.

Col. Greer following the questioning of the hardware clerk by Mr. Urquhart, took the labelled hatchet.

Q. This $2.75 that was on there when you swear you put it there?

A. No, sir.

Q. And that grease pencil does rub off, doesn't it? A. Yes, Sir.

Witness was handed the hatchet for further examination. Some scratches on the handle were pointed out. The hatchet was then passed to the Jury. Col. Greer pointed to a mark on the handle "This stroke you see might be just a "1", he explained to the jurymen as he passed the tool along.

G. Simpson's does not handle the whole copper of the factory which manufactured this lath hatchet? A. No.

Q. Do you know the weight of it? A. No.

Q. The length of handle? A. No.

Q. How long have you been in the hardware trade? A. 15 years.

Witness took the hatchet, stepped again to the jury and defined the hatchet in question as a "standard size." The tool was again handed to Justice Jeffrey, who also closely examined it. Throughout the whole proceedings, Vermilyea remained entirely outwardly oblivious of the heightened interest in the courtroom.

Bannas on Stand

John Bannas, Toronto taxi driver told of the night of Sept. 30th and remained sitting in his taxi on that occasion. It was Sunday night. I was sitting there and noticed a man talking to the driver of another cab up ahead. I got into conversation with him later. He said he wanted to go to Trenton tomorrow. He asked me how much and I told him $20.00. He said "that was too much money." He told me he might be going down two or three times this week. I told him I might be able to make it for $18.00. I got a pencil and piece of paper and marked the name "Carter-room 303, Walker House."

Questioned by Mr. Urquhart:-

Q. You marked this yourself? A. Yes.

Later witness made an appointment for the afternoon of the next day, Monday. He called at the Walker House Just before three o'clock. The man resembling Vermilyea came out, gave witness a ten dollar bill and told him to "fill up the tank". Clothing worn by the "fare" was described, The coat was light and of a sandy color. Of two coats held up by Mr. Urquhart, one was tentatively identified as very much resembling the top coat worn by his former fare.

Blankets Taken

The passenger sat in the front seat as the car headed from Toronto to No. 2 highway. At the request of his passenger two blankets previously been provided. The car arrived at Trenton at about 7 p.m.

Q. Was it dark then. A. Just getting dark.

At Trenton the driver and fare stopped at the "Checker Cafe", where they had supper. Then they up one-half hour. The same table was used the two occasions. Witness was not a very good conversationalist.

"After the meal the fare said: "What are you going to do now, John?"

I said if I have enough time I'll go to the show. He said to me, Then he was gone for about fifteen minutes. When he came back he wanted to go to Belleville. He offered me more money to drive him there.

"When the first bargain for the ride was made, was anything said about a further trip than Trenton?" asked Mr. Urquhart.

"Yes, we talked of it, and I said if we did have to go farther I'd charge him five cents a mile."

Location Not Known

Entering Belleville on Monday night, Oct. 1st, the taxi carrying the man resembling Vermilyea, drove to a point not clearly known by the witness. Then he was told to wait while his fare walked off. He was away some twenty minutes. When he came back, said witness, he gave the order to drive back to the Walker House.

Again the clothing worn by his fare was gone over. The hat had been changed to a cap before leaving Trenton.

On the return trip to Toronto and the Walker House, his fare rode in the back seat. They arrived at the hotel shortly after one o'clock.

The same man was again seen on Thursday, Oct 4th, just before two in the afternoon, continued Bannas. "I got a message to go to the Walker House and met the same man again in the lobby. He was dressed in the same clothes but wore a hat this time."

Little Conversation

On this occasion no bargain over the fare was made, and there was little conversation. "He simply said: 'Are you here?' and then: 'I want to go to Belleville'", said witness.

He also asked for blankets for the car. These were procured.

On the second trip the taxi arrived without incident in Trenton. From here a phone call was again made. The taxi left Trenton at about 8 p.m., and arrived in Belleville about one half hour later. When it got there, his passenger said witness, complained he was thirsty. He wanted a glass of beer. After we stopped he got up was away about 15 minutes and came back with a small case of beer. "We each had a bottle," said witness. Then the car drove on and stopped in front of a residence with a cement fence.

Identifies Residence

Several pictures were submitted to witness and jury. A house on William Street was identified as the place by the witness. When the car stopped it was on the west side of the street facing south.

Witness continued:

"After we stopped, he said to wait. Then he walked off and was away north. It looked as if he was walking up the side entrance of the white house."

"After about 15 minutes he came back and said, 'are you still here'?" Then he went away again.

"In about another fifteen minutes he came back again and ordered me to drive back to the Walker House."

Witness computed the time in Belleville at between 30 and 40 minutes on this occasion.

Rods in Back Seat

On the way back to Toronto, the fare rode with witness in the front seat a little past Trenton and then stopped the car and got in the rear seat. "My back is sore," he was reported by witness as saying.

Upon invitation of Justice Jeffrey at this point, the jury filed out for a brief intermission while the court was thoroughly aired.

Mr. Urquhart resumed the questioning of Bannas.

Q. What clothing did this man have on the last time he came down? (Again the description was repeated).

"The taxi arrived back at the Walker House at about 4 p.m. When it arrived there, said witness, a five dollar bill was handed me. Four of his fare walked away. When the fare got out of the car he had a cap on instead of a hat. An extra coat was also carried.

Blankets Identified

Two blankets were exhibited and identified at the request of Mr. Urquhart, the serial and license number of the taxi was looked up by the witness.

Question: After this man left you on the morning of the 5th did you see him again. A. "No."

Later witness took his car to a garage, where an examination of the seat and interior was made by Dr. Frankish. "Something was scraped off the face of the front seat," said witness.

The blankets were also given Dr. Frankish.

Col. Greer for the defence took up the questioning.

Q. The fare of yours suggested these blankets in the car?

A. Yes.

Q. Why?

A. He said he might get cold or want to take a nap.

Col. Greer referred to the trip from Toronto the first time, of the parking of the car and the passenger leaving for one half hour and returning.

Q. He didn't appear excited?

A. No.

Reference was made to the fare, "who appeared to be sleeping" on the back seat, returning in witness words.

"You remember me examining you before?" reminded Col. Green, referring to records of the preliminary hearing.

A. Yes.

Defence counsel through search of the records of the preliminary hearing brought the statement from witness, that the fare as far as he knew, slept from Bowmanville to Toronto on the second trip from Belleville.

Q. He never, on either trip, appeared excited or nervous? questioned Col. Greer.

A. No.

Q. And after the first trip there was no arrangement made for a second one?

A. No.

Col. Greer referred to stopping the car different times at Trenton and Belleville. "Nothing ever indicated to you during these stops that your fare had been carrying anything that might have resembled, say, this hatchet?" "No." readily stated witness.

Col. Greer pursued the question of the fare showing any signs of excitement or nervousness on either trip.

"Nothing in his conduct ever gave a hint of anything out of the way," witness agreed.

Court adjourned at the time until Friday morning.

5 JURORS SWITCH IN THEIR STAND

How Voting Stood in Decision on Fate of Hauptmann

Flemington, N.J., Feb. 15 (AP)—The twelve Hauptmann jurors were unanimous on their first ballot for conviction, it was learned authoritatively today, but five were opposed to the death penalty.

On the first ballot, it was ascertained, those voting to send Hauptmann to the electric chair were the foreman, Charles E. Walton, Sr., Charles P. Snyder, Mrs. Ethel Stockton, George Voorhees, Mrs. May Breiford, Lisonn C. Case and Howard V. Biggs.

Five, holding out for life imprisonment, were Mrs. Rosie Pill, Mrs. Verna Snyder, Elmer Smith, Robert Cravait and Phillip Hockenbury.

In the five ballots taken, it was learned, the two women were the first to switch to the death penalty. Hockenbury followed one or two ballots later. Smith joined the majority next and Cravait held out to the end.

Cravait's argument was reported to have been: "Ten years hence something will turn up, and we'll all be sorry."

Flemington, N.J., Feb. 15 (AP)—Anthony M. Hauck, Jr., Hunterdon County Prosecutor, said today alleged evidence of perjury by at least four defence witnesses in the Hauptmann murder trial probably would be presented to the Grand Jury next week.

Among such defence witnesses, Hauck said, were Mrs. Bertha Hoft, of Lyons, N.J., Louis Klas, New York silk painter, Elvert Carlstrom, New York carpenter, and Benjamin Heier, restaurant cashier of Brooklyn.

SCIENTIFIC RESEARCH TELLS YOU HOW

Scientific research workers have recently made two vitally important discoveries.

1. A very high percentage of apparently healthy people (as high as 80%) have too little iron in the blood.

2. From 25% to 90% of the iron we get in our foods is not assimilated.

Think What These Two Vital Facts Mean

Fact 1 means that probably you, your family, your friends—would all have more pep, more vigor, better colour, more resistance to disease if you got more iron every day.

Fact 2 means that an additional source of easily assimilated iron is essential to supply this need.

Conacher And Horner Draw Penalties For Participation

(Canadian Press Staff Writer)

If New York Rangers and Toronto Maple Leafs meet in the five-game series for the National Hockey League title—and it appears likely they will—the odds on past performances should all be with the New Yorkers.

That goes even though Leafs made a runaway race of the International division all season and the Rangers were mired in the cellar of the American section most of it.

For in contests between the teams Rangers have had a big edge, winning four and losing one. They defeated Conny Smythe's team again last night in New York, blanking them 3-0 before a crowd of 16,000 attracted to the Garden by the sweeping Ranger comeback.

The convincing victory over the Leafs, who had Frankie Finnigan in his uniform but were without Happy Day and Harvey Jackson, left the Rangers in a tie for first place with Chicago who shut out Red Wings 3-0 in Detroit. The idle Boston Bruins dropped out of the previous triple tie into second place.

Red Wings Nearly Out.

Detroit are 11 points behind Boston and their failure to win even with the help of Scotty Bowman and Syd Howe, the $100,000 pair they bought from St. Louis, practically eliminates them from play-off consideration.

Toronto lost none of their eight point edge over Montreal Maroons as Tommy Gorman's team were taking a 3-0 lasing from Canadiens in Montreal. Wilf Cude played back to his best form to shut out the Consacrbeau Commandiers.

Goals by Murray Murdock and Bill Cook in the first period and by Cecil Dillon in the second won the New York game for Rangers. Toronto fired 36 shots at Davie Kerr but the young goalie was at his best and turned them all aside.

A battle royal in the third period highlighted the struggle. Red Horner and Charlie Conacher, of Toronto, and Earl Seibert, Rangers' getting majors for their part in a fistic set-to that held up the game for 19 minutes.

Horner and Seibert tangled first, the red-thatched Leaf swinging on the Ranger defenceman's jaw after a battle-axe duel. Conacher got into it later with a right to Seibert's jaw.

Patrick Plays Well.

Lynn Patrick, son of Coach Lester played a valuable game for the New Yorkers, making the goals for Kerr on the Murdoch and Dillon goals.

Tommy Cook paced the Hawks at Detroit, scoring the first and assisting in another. The victory that broke Hawks' four winless streak was witnessed by the smallest Detroit crowd of the season, 5,000.

All three Hawk goals came in the final period, Cook scoring first and Louis Trudell and Carl Tromabley following through. The game was exceptionally clean. Roger Jourdain got the only penalty for tripping Herb Lewis in the third period.

Canadiens' shut-out marked the first Cude has been able to chalk up this season. He has had to stop only 19 shots but most of them were from close in and gave him more trouble than twice as many longer tries.

Pete Lepine played a stand-out game for Canucks getting one goal himself and assisting on another that went in on Cliff Brunet's stick. Aurel Joliat got credit for the flukey counter which came early in the second.

Maroons protested Lepine's goal claiming the bell had rung to mark the end of the second period when he scored. Mike Rodden and Bobby Hewitson, the officials, went into a huddle and after a long delay announced the goal was good. It had been scored a split second before the bell rang. The time was given as 19.59.

O.B.C. DEFEATS ALBERT BY 4-2

Two Schools in City Enjoy Clean Game of Hockey

Last Tuesday afternoon, the Ontario Business College played Albert College in a well-contested game on the Albert Rink. The game was well enjoyed by the players, and the supporters of each team alike. The final score was 4-2 in favour of the "O.B.C."

The scoring was opened by the visitors after ten minutes of play, Hinch of the "O.B.C." was responsible for the goal on a pass from Fisher. Sylvester a hockey player of no mean calibre from the Sudbury district scored the equalizer on a rink-wide play from A. Macdonald. Halfway through the second period of play, Dennis Roy put "O.B.C." in the lead again. Then came a real passing team work by Grigg of Albert, which was rewarded by P. Lake slamming in a rebound from Grigg's rebound to tie the score for the second time.

During the final stanza "O. B. C." played heads up hockey, and were rewarded by two well-earned goals by Dennis Roy and Talbot. Albert were repeatedly in a scoring position, but failed to capitalize; mainly through the stellar goal-tending of Blemin, and the close checking of his team-mates. Hodder in the nets for Albert made some spectacular saves, which were ear-marked for sure goals. He was ably supported by Albert's defence composed of A. W. Bishop and J. Grigg. Dennis Roy playing left wing for the visitors was always a real threat for the Albert team.

Ronald Claxton as referee handled his position very impartially. This was the first time these teams have met, and further play will improve the combination and effectiveness of each team considerably.

Teams:—

O.B.C.—Goal, Slemin; defence, Hinch, Talbot, Langton; centre, Fisher; wings, Dennis Roy, McCrie.

Albert— Goal, Hodder; defence, Grigg, A. W. Bishop; centre, A. Macdonald; wings, Sylvester, Lake, Dube—Redmond, Campbell, Scott, Hillmore.

Referee—R. Claxton.

Secretary-Manager Bishop announced Belleville district meeting a hockey team with either "O.B.C." or "Albert" may do so by getting in touch with Fred Fisher of the "O.B.C." or A. W. Bishop of Albert College.

CAN THEY LIFT REDWINGS INTO STANLEY CUP PLAYOFFS?

HOWE — GOODFELLOW — ROACH — LEWIS

Hard-hitting contenders in the Stanley Cup finals last year, losing by the narrowest of margins to Chicago Black Hawks, Detroit Red Wings have slipped far down the N.H.L. ladder this season and have only a remote chance of gaining a play-off berth. In an effort to bolster the slumping squad, owner James Norris spent $50,000 for Syd Howe, LOWER LEFT, and Scotty Bowman, TOP LEFT, both of the lacking St. Louis Eagles. Howe is a stellar forward and Bowman a hard-hitting and dangerous defenceman. Manager "Smiling Jack" Adams, TOP CENTRE, hopes with these reinforcements and the best of his present regulars to get land in the league play-offs. Larrie Aurie, TOP RIGHT, with Eddie Goodfellow and Herbie Lewis have made their mark on the scoring records despite the team standing below John Ross Roach has made a great comeback as the regular net custodian.

LOCAL JUNIORS ARE ELIMINATED

Defeated by Napanee 9-4 on Game and 17-8 on Round

Falling before a powerful offensive play the Belleville juniors were eliminated from further O.H.A. competition when the Napanee kids trimmed them by the score of 9 to 4 at Napanee last night, the winners taking the round by a 17 to 8 count. The elimination of the Belleville kids by the Gibbards gives the Napanee team the right to continue on in quest of further junior "B" O.H.A. hockey honors and meet the group leading Tweed team in a home and home play-off for the championship.

Last night's game was played on rather soft ice, many pools of water dotting the playing surface and impeding the progress of the play for both teams. The forwards showed visible signs of fatigue long before the game was half finished. The footing proved so heavy that it eventually took its toll on the players and many outbreaks of roughness were penalized by Referee Smith in a hectic last period. Enjoying a four goal lead to start the contest with the homesters played inspired hockey while the local Colts bided their time and took matters rather easy the last period, the game being hopelessly lost at that time.

Four goals up starting the game, Gibbards pressed hard from the opening whistle and after minutes' tompkins got the first tally of the game when he sifted W. Jackson's pass into the net. The visitors' defence tightened and Hinton repeatedly saved. McGuire evened the score on the game as he golfed one from the blue line after a face-off that bounced over Currie's stick.

Three minutes later McBraith put Belleville one up as he batted in one from a scrimmage. In the second period the locals showed the home fans how they doubled the power in Belleville as they hemmed the play around the Napanee net in three-quarters of the period and led by their starting line, outscored Belleville 4-1 and was leading at the end of the period 5 to 3. The locals checked to perfection and only fine work by Hinton prevented at least four more goals.

Visibly tired from the two previous periods and showing the strain of playing with only two subs and minus the services of Greer and Kidd, two regulars, the Belleville kids, after getting their final goal of the game three minutes after the third period started, were unable to further hold the locals in check.

After the ten-minute mark they spoiled their chances, as they resorted to slugging and tripping tactics that resulted in six penalties. Hinton, McBraith, McCreary and Lamore were best for Belleville, while W. Jackson with four goals and one assist, Tompkins with three counters and Curry starred for Gibbards. Belleville—Goal, Hinton; defence, McBraith and B. Burley; centre, Lamore; wings, Semark and McGuire; subs, R. Burley and McCreary.

Gibbards—Goal, Curry; defence, Murphy and Richardson; centre, W. Jackson; wings, Tompkins and C. Jackson; subs, Evans, Gerow, Leary and Barragar.

Referee—Joe Smith, Kingston.

CURRENT SPORT

(Day By Day)

The weatherman in no way assisted the Belleville juniors as they were rubbed out of the O.H.A. picture at Napanee last night. The ice was very soft and literally covered with water, naturally impeding the progress of the play. Of course after kicking back over the semi-final series, we now find, that the Napanee kids took the locals for a ride to the tune of 17 to 8 on the round in a rather one-sided affair to say the least. The Gerow-led clan trimmed the locals 9 to 4 here in Belleville and then went out and shovelled in 9 goals to the Colts' four at Napanee last night, making a grand total of 17 to 8. One thing has been established by Manager Thomas this season, however, that is the bringing out two local lads, who have made their mark in the junior ranks. Ab Hinton, playing his first year in the O.H.A. and McCreary, a forward, are youths of a tender age, who should go far afield in the hockey realm. The Napanee crew now meet the group leading Tweed kids in the loop finals. This series should be interesting, as both teams are quite evenly matched.

According to information received in the city early today Harold Farlow, of Toronto, has been named as the referee of the night. When questioned on the matter of tonight's game, Manager Thomas said he rather quiet early today. "Of course the game may be cancelled any minute, as the weather has been terribly mild and the continued rains will naturally make the ice soft and sticky. I don't think that Eddie Wright wants to play on soft, wet ice any more than we do, but unless the game has been cancelled before 1.30 p.m., we'll leave for Peterboro," added Skipper Thomas as he intimated that the same team that won here on Wednesday night, would start against the Petes this eve. Some of the local players are not altogether in love with the work of Referee Farlow, but nothing was done about a change up until noon today.

A highly successful minor league manager, Frank Nighbor, one-time National Hockey League "great" has no desire to return to the N.H.L. as a manager. "I don't want to go up to the National League and I don't intend to," he said. "I love working with boys and helping them to get somewhere in fact, I'd like to make it my life work for the rest of my sport career."

The Peterboro sport scribe is still in a quandry as to how th: Petes tumbled from the group leadership to such low levels in so short a time. His labours on the Remington following Wednesday night's game, read as follows:—

"There will be much raucous laughter from the Belleville hockey players and the guy that writes 'em up now after last night's defeat of the Petes. Well, we still maintain they've only got a couple of guys to say the least, the rest just going along to fill in and keep them company—and if the Petes can't beat 'em on the round, they've got no sympathy. We didn't see this game but talked today to some of the intermediates and they were plenty peeved and disgusted. 'Sure we ought to beat them,' they said, 'and we rated a win down there last night. We muffled a flock of swell chances and got gypped on one goal by a Belleville goal-jugger.' The final ten minutes the Petes swept in repeatedly to slip rubber at Belleville but he was good, as well as lucky. And heavy ice means a lot of over-skating."

It is too bad, that the Liftlock scribe, missed that hectic first period here last Wednesday when the locals should have had at least a dozen of goals on Petes' Bell, their goalie, stood alone between Belleville and a much larger lead for last night's game. Jeffery starred for the locals in the last frame, pal, but Mrs. Foley's little boy, Tommy, saved Eddie Wright and his merry band from ruination and disgrace, with his repeated miraculous saves in the first 20 minutes.

Rumours are about the streets to the effect that Manager Jay Perris and his Campbellford Maroons are in nervous regarding the welfare of the Petes, that they are afraid to sit down with tonight's game, believing they lost much weight during Wednesday night's tilt here 'tis rumoured.

LOVE SCHOOL

By MARYSE RUTLEDGE

Oh, why is a moment of confidence had by ever mentioned setting Hunter in the shop! Patth got up from the bed, went over to the mirror and took down the green chiffon dress. "I'm not in love with anyone," she said, and would have closed the bathroom door, but Agnes pushed in with her.

"Your Prince Charming," he sneered. "Well, you might as well hope to marry the Prince of Wales, darling. Tell me another."

"Don't be so vulgar," Patth said in a low, furious voice. "I'd like to take my bath, please."

Agnes leaned back her mop of henna-ed curls. "Take anything you want. You will, anyway." Suddenly she dashed back into the bedroom and flung herself on the bed, and sobbed violently. "I don't care—Roger was crazy about me until you began making up to him. Now I've spent nearly all my money, and he will leave me, I know he will—and I'm miserable—I don't know what while to cling to. Building up nothing but pain and disillusionment for herself! Patth walked quickly over to her. "Aggie, for heaven's sake don't worry. Rogers not worth it, dear," she said gently.

Agnes dug her head deeper into the rumpled pillow, shaking and strangling.

Patth looked down at her with pity. In jerking about on the bed Agnes had torn loose a shoulder strap of her step in. She bulged from both sides. Drowning fat from too much cheap alcohol. Losing her looks, Patth thought.

After all, Agnes had been kind to her, taken her in when she left Philly, was down to her last dollar. That was when Agnes had a job in Plaza-ganz Hall. Patth couldn't help thinking that since then she had paid most of the rent from her small salary. And lately, any decent, healthy food they bought, Patth had to pay for. Agnes was when's fair."

"Listen, Agnes". Patth's tone grew slightly impatient. "You've known very unwise about Roger. No really decent man would take money from a girl the way he does. Why don't you forget him and try to get some work again?"

Agnes raised her head and swung around. "You mind your own business," she said fiercely. "And you keep away from Roger, do you hear me?" Her voice rose almost to a shriek. "Keep away from him or I won't be responsible for what I do. I love him, if you want to know. And you'd better be careful—"

The doorbell rang—two short rings and a long one. Roger's signal. Agnes jumped up from the bed with one of her sudden changes of mood. "Let him in, you fool!" she ran to the mirror, dabbing at her nose. Powder was caked on her cheeks. Her eyes were inflamed.

Patth went to the door. She would have to dress later. She closed the door of the bedroom before crossing to the hall door.

With a quick glance at her, Roger tipped in, laid his packages on the table, jerking his head questioningly toward the door of the bedroom. "Agnes will be ready in a moment," Patth said unemotionally. "I could only get three of the crowd. They're coming in." Roger sidled around until he stood next to Patth. Suddenly, without warning, he seized her. "Don't be so cold, Patth," he mumbled, his lips hot on her neck.

Patth pushed him from her with all her strength. Her face blazing in contempt. Stepping back, she hit the small gilt table by the radio. It toppled over.

Roger reached out for her. "Come here, you cute kid, and I'll be good." His black eyes were shiny, greedy. "Tiny—"

"Let me alone. I hate you."

But he had caught her to him again.

The bedroom door opened. Agnes, a dressing gown flung around her shoulders, stood staring at them.

"ACCIDENT" OR "MURDER"

CHAPTER FOUR

Roger let go of Patth. "Now, honey, we were just fooling," he coaxed Agnes. His uneasy glance roved to the hall. The three expected guests were crowding in the door, also watching the fun. "Hope we're not intruding," one of them snickered.

Patth stood proudly aloof. Let them fight it out.

"Snakes!" Agnes hissed. "Come right in," she cried shrilly to the others. "Think I care?" She crashed to the radio, let it blazing. "I'll show you if I care when I get on my dress." The door of the bedroom slammed behind her.

"Phew," someone whistled. "A good time is going to be had by all."

Patth pulled a chair over to the wall and sat down. She felt sick. She had gone through things around her before, sometimes in the apartment, sometimes in sundry hotel rooms, where the host was most often a stranger. When she had first come to Philly with Agnes, she had looked up to her as to someone who knew the people of the theatre. In those times, the radio, coming from the joyless background of dirty rooms on a shabby street, of endless hours in drab jobs, this Greenwich Village "artist" was the most exciting, most like luxury. She had even thought the tinted lights and the shaded lamps pretty. The music and dancing had represented—safety.

But spending her days in the Hall Bedroom, she had found out about how swanky was Agnes' life, with its quarrels and intrigues. Agnes' drinking, the men who came to see her, the scenes in the shop, were not the real thing. She could never be one of them, and they felt that. The women thought her stuck-up. The men, from whispering behind her backs dropped her as a poor sport. Agnes alone insisted that Patth was all right. That was until Roger came on the scene three months ago.

Tonight Patth wondered how she could stand it another moment. Agnes, ignoring a scene out on the bedroom. While two boys whom Patth knew only as Dickie and Bob mixed drinks, a girl they called Ethyrn caught up the skirt of her yellow satin gown and danced voluptuously with Roger in the tiny cleared space between the couch and radio cabinet.

Agnes, dressed in her new pink chiffon, applauded wildly to show everyone that she had forgiven Roger for letting himself be taken in by a scheming creature like Patth. Every once in a while Agnes would sneaked out to the kitchenette for a solitary drink.

No one asked Patth to dance or paid any attention to her. She was still in her black taffeta, but had moved to the window, a stilled little smile pinned on her lips, in her heart a cold fury against Agnes and a burning sense of humiliation that they had all seen her in his arms.

Occasionally from the radio lovely dance music trickled in, the haunting rhythms through the little room. Then, with an almost intolerable pain, Patth imagined the soft lights and soft decorations of some glamorous ballroom where, on the polished floor, Hunter Barclay and Mrs. Stevens smoothly glided. With them went her last hope. Because it really! And again there flashed in the smoke-laden, drunken atmosphere of Agnes' party, the image of Philip Stevens' congested face.

So absorbed was she that the actual sounds in the room seemed a long way off. With a start, she glanced up, to find Dickie, wobbly on his legs, solemnly bowing before her and offering her a glass of ginger ale and gin.

"Have a B'l drink," he hustled with owlish gravity. "It's an honor to us all, your 'ot drink', Puffed-ly good stuff. Puffectly great stuff it is."

"Oh, leave her alone, Dickie," cried the girl called Ethyrn from her perch on Bob's knee. She had got back a large bite out of Bob's cheese sandwich.

There was a silence when they all seemed to be staring at her disapprovingly.

"I'm awfully sorry," Patth said, rising, with as friendly a smile as she could manage. "I've got a bad headache tonight. And I—"

"Awri—dance, then," Dickie urged, holding out his arms.

From the corner where Agnes sat, flushed, her arms tangled around Roger's neck, came a brittle laugh. "You're not Park Avenue enough, my dear," drawled Agnes. Her blue eyes were glassy as she stumbled to her feet and with a simper held an imaginary keynote, advancing with mock queenliness to the middle of the floor. "Meet the Duchess of Ritz", she said dipping an unsteady courtesy.

It was all so crude and stupid, Patth thought, facing them in her slim, golden youth. They wouldn't even understand her anger.

"I call that in very bad taste," she said quietly. "If you'll excuse me, I think I'll go out and take a walk."

Dickie clumsily caught hold of her arm. "Gimme a kiss first. You kissed Roger. I wanna kiss—"

"Get away from me," Patth tried to avoid him. She must keep her temper.

"She doesn't want you, poor boob. She wants Roger. The Princess wants Roger—" Agnes, with mounting hysteria in her glazed blue eyes, grabbed up a glass and emptied its contents with a tilt of her head.

Agnes wasn't responsible, Patth realized. This cheap gin made her wild, quarrelsome. How blind she had been all evening not to feel this tenseness; not to know that Agnes, after a few more drinks, would work herself up to some sort of scene.

"Why don't you go to her, Roger?" Agnes ran a hand through her coppery curls and beat they stood out around her thickly powdered face. Her laughter rose strident above the radio.

Someone tinkered with the dial. A tango throbbed in minor beat, lugubrious, insinuating.

The girl called Ethyrn jumped up, upsetting an ash tray. "Come on, Bob, I'm crazy for a tango."

Agnes stamped her foot. "Go on —you—" she cried. Roger rose with a slow deliberateness. There was a little grace in his narrow hipped body, an invitation in his brilliant black eyes and full red lips. He walked with the short springy steps of a Spanish dancer over to Patth who hadn't moved.

"Want to try?"

For a second Patth wondered if it wouldn't be wiser to go through with a few steps and then slip out. But she had never danced the tango.

Roger guessed her hesitation. "I'll lead you," he said, and bending himself the centre of attention, he stretched a few steps with his arm around her waist, and then, with a row feet.

"She doesn't know it," Agnes taunted, "even women doesn't know the tango."

"Meaning she's got class and I haven't. There spoke of real blood out on Agnes' cheeks. Her mouth twisted, curled back. "I don't you dare dance with her, I forbid you to."

"I'm not dancing", Patth decided and tried to pass them; to get into the bedroom and shut the door, close the door. There was a ghastly resemblance in the scene to those in the shop only this was worse. Philip Stevens' insanely jealous of Hunter, and Agnes' curled back mouth.

"Let go." Roger shook himself free. "Look, Agnes, I'm tired. You're making a show of yourself."

Agnes backed three the mount as she swung a vicious blow on to the couch.

"I'll show you." She flew back at him with a gesture of clawing.

He caught her wrists and held her still. "Now will you be good?"

Patth stopped at the bedroom door. Roger's breathing revelled her after all Agnes had done for him. "Don't you see there's nothing Agnes," she reasoned "you'll feel better."

She's just drunk enough to fall down if I let her go," Roger grunted. He caught her wrists and held her still. "Now will you be good?"

Patth stopped at the bedroom door. Roger's breathing revelled her after all Agnes had done for him. "Don't you see there's nothing Agnes," she reasoned "you'll feel better."

She's just drunk enough to fall down if I let her go," Roger grunted. He caught her wrists and held her still. "Now will you be good?"

"Drunk, am I?" Agnes flung back her head and laughed. It was a dangerous laugh with the mad gasp of hysteria. scaling to a high note. "You liars. You and your Philip to rise again."

"Oh, God—What you make that noise?" The girl called Ethyrn held her ears.

Patth took Agnes by the shoulders and shook her "Be quiet," she ordered her sharply every one on Agnes' wild, hating face.

The dreadful laughter broke suddenly. "Give me a drink." Agnes said in a smothered voice.

In spite of Patth's protest, Bob brought one. Agnes tossed it down, then turned on Patth.

"It's all your fault" she blazed "You're a snake in the grass that's what you are, Oh, shut that thing off." She waved at the radio.

"I'll do that thing that's her—She didn't say yes, and she didn't say no." I'll go mad if it doesn't stop—"

But no one heard. It was as if they were attending a dramatic performance and didn't want to miss a word. The radio ground on with the same terrible indifference.

"A snake in the grass." Agnes repeated on a higher note. She was crying now. "Lots of self pity. I took her in, fed her, clothed her. And that's how she do!"

Patth's cheeks were hot with shame, "Agnes!" she sharply reproached.

"Let her rave" Roger put in. "She's tight, you could see that."

It was adding fuel to flames. "She lied to me", Agnes raved. "Pretended she was in love with someone else. And then went after Roger. You say them yourselves tonight. Through after this, It's the first and last time you'll ever call me a gigolo."

Little Benny's Note Book

After supper ma said to pop, Wall Willyum do you notice any change in—room? and pop looked aro—, saying, You've been moving the furniture again.

Now Willyum that's just a blind guess in the dark, and what's more it's wrong, ma said. Does you see there's a small new rug over by the window? Yes, I said, but that has space? she said, and pop said, O, that, ag there is, so it does.

What do you think of it? ma said, and pop said, I think it just fills the bare space.

I know, but do you like it I mean? ma said, and pop said, It doesn't match the big rug very well, does it?

Well, it doesn't, that's its one flaw, but after all when you're lucky enough to get a thing wholesale you're not supose to lend a gift horse by the mouth, ma said. There was a limited time sale at Sockbinders, and naturelly I'd got a altsly different color if I'd best it there, but when a bizy wholesale man in a big flourishing factory is kind enough to give you a little valuable time just as a favor, the least you can do is to take what he offers you and not demand a widespread choice of colors. It's a genuine krasweave rug, direkt from the krasweave factory. Stand Rewe knows one of the big men there and she took me down herself, ma said. I'd just like to see that factory to all a way on the outskirts of town somewhere, isn't it?

Well, it's a endless distance, and of course they wouldn't deliver it for me, so I drove it home myself, ma said. Naturelly I had to take a extra day off, I took another auto to the place, because I could hardly ask Maud to ride in the trolley after she was kind enough to volunteer to take me. Now that I figure it up the 2 autos cost almost 3 dollers, where are you going, Willyum? ma said, and pop said, Nowhere, I'm just the cigar, and see if I can pick up a couple of broken cigars at just a little over the usual price.

Being sourcastic.

Numa was looking straight into Tarzan's eyes now, evidently aware that the ape-man was alive. Presently the lion cocked his head to one side and whined. Tarzan knew the note meant neither rage nor hunger; and then—he risked all—

—on a single throw, encouraged by that whine. "More Numa!" he commanded, and placing a palm against the tawny shoulder he pushed the lion aside. Then he rose with hand upon his hunting knife, awaiting that which might follow.

It was then that his eyes fell for the first time on the body of Sheeta. He looked from the dead cat to the live one, saw the marks of conflict, and realized that Numa had saved him from the panther. It seemed incredible—yet the evidence clearly pointed to that fact. Without fear he now approached and examined Numa's wounds. As Tarzan knelt beside him, the lion rubbed against the naked, brown shoulder, and the ape-man's heart warmed toward Numa's great head.

PERTH PHYSICIAN HELD FOR MURDER

Miss Lila Pickering is Found Dead in Office of Dr. W. J. Hobson

Perth, Ont., Feb. 15 (CP)—Arrested early today Dr. W. J. Hobson, 55, prominent physician of this town, and Rupert Mackie, 38 also of Perth, were charged with murder following the death last night in the doctor's office of Miss Lila Pickering, 38, of Carleton Place. The arrest was made by members of the Ontario provincial police.

Both men appeared this afternoon before Justice of the Peace Edward Young and were remanded without pleading for a week.

An inquest, opened by Dr. A. W. Dwyer, coroner, was adjourned until next Tuesday after jurors had been sworn. Acting on instructions from W. W. Pollock of Carleton Place Crown Attorney for Lanark County, Sergeant H. Storey and Constable W. H. Wandell placed Mackie under arrest at his home at 3 o'clock this morning. The arrest of Hobson followed at 7 a.m.

According to the police, Miss Pickering had been working at Carleton Place. Her home is here at Renfrew. About 11.30 last night Sergeant Storey was called by Coroner Dwyer to go to Hobson's office.

Arriving there he found the girl dead. Her body was removed to the morgue. The investigation which was immediately launched resulted in the arrest of the two men.

Dr. Hobson is a widower, his wife having died some three or four years ago. For the last 15 years he has made his home in Perth and had a large practice in the town.

Mackie also is well known in Perth.

Rev. W.H. Daw Asks Order to Prohibit Trial

Toronto, Feb. 15.—(CP)—Application for an order prohibiting the court of the Anglican Diocese of Niagara, consisting of Bishop Lewis Wilmot Brougball, Dean Riley and Judge J. Thompson of Wentworth County, from proceeding with the the trial of charges against Rev. William Henry Daw, Hamilton, was made on behalf of Mr. Daw to Mr. Justice J. A. Hope in Chambers at Osgoode Hall today.

Mr. Daw, formerly assistant at the Church of St. John the Evangelist, Hamilton, and is now conducting services at the new Church of St. Francis of Assisi, is accused of officiating in the Niagara Diocese without a license from the Bishop; of holding services in another clergyman's parish without leave of the latter; of violating his canonical oath of obedience and of schism or separating himself from the communion of the church.

J. R. Cartwright, K.C., and O. M. Walsh, K.C., acted for Mr. Daw and Shirley Denison, K.C., and T. H. Simpson, K.C., for the Bishop of Niagara.

Mr. Cartwright related Mr. Daw was ordained deacon in the Church of England in Canada May 26, 1929, was ordained priest in the following year and licensed as assistant at the Church of St. John the Evangelist, Hamilton. The license, Mr. Cartwright said, was terminated on Feb. 11, 1934, by the Bishop of Niagara.

"A great many members of the congregation of the Church of St. John the Evangelist wanted Mr. Daw to remain there," said Mr. Cartwright. "When he was not allowed to continue there, they wanted him to continue his ministry and a new church known as the Church of St. Francis of Assisi was founded within the boundaries of the parish of St. John the Evangelist. Mr. Daw has been conducting services there."

Mr. Cartwright told of proceedings against Mr. Daw in the church courts in the Diocese of Niagara. Counsel informed Mr. Justice Hope Mr. Daw had disputed the authority of the Bishop of Niagara and his two assessors to try the charges laid against the clergyman.

Jurisdiction

The Bishop had maintained his court had jurisdiction to try the case and had said the court would deliver judgment. It was in these circumstances an order of prohibition was sought from Mr. Justice Hope.

"We are submitting that no writ of prohibition would lie from this court to the tribunal my friend has called the Bishop's Court," interjected Mr. Denison.

"This is purely a disciplinary matter in the Church of England in Canada, is it not?" commented Mr. Justice Hope. "It has been established this court will not interfere in a purely disciplinary matter unless a matter of civil rights is involved."

The Supreme Court of Ontario, Mr. Cartwright maintained, would have a right to make the order that he desired.

Mr. Cartwright argued the charges against Mr. Daw of officiating without a license from the Bishop and of violating the oaths of canonical obedience to the Bishop and his successors were not offences against the canons of the Diocese of Niagara, the Provincial Synod or the General Synod of Canada.

Oath of Obedience

As the allegation Mr. Daw had violated his oath of obedience to the Bishop, Mr. Cartwright urged the Bishop should not sit as a judge in his own cause.

Speaking of the charges that Mr. Daw had officiated in another clergyman's parish without the latter's consent, and had been guilty of schism, Mr. Cartwright argued Mr. Daw, having no license from the Bishop, was not a member of the Synod of Niagara and therefore not subject to the jurisdiction of the Court of the Diocese.

"We submit that Mr. Daw has entirely misunderstood the character of the tribunal of which he is complaining," said Mr. Denison. He argued that since there was no relation between church and state, writs from the state courts could not be directed to the church court.

HEARD VERMILYEA TALK OVER PHONE SAYS CHIEF LOCKE

Ontario (Calif.) Police Officer Tells of Arrest of Vermilyea

CLOTHING INITIALLED

Investigation of Car Occupied Made at Los Angeles

On Saturday afternoon Vermilyea was murder was born in Canada, Locke on the stand. Crown Prosecutor Urquhart continued the questioning.

Q. You first met accused on Oct. 4 in the afternoon. A. Yes.

Q. S. Brayton was called by wireless to have been in charge of the residence. Witness had called previously at 11:05 the night before. Three hours difference in Ontario, Canada, and California time was established.

Evidence as to Motor

At noon on Oct. 6 when witness called he had observed the car owned by Brayton in a four passenger coach. Some baggage, which lifted by police, was taken from the machine. A top coat, marked by machine. A top coat, marked by him at the time with a "V I I" in pen and ink was also produced and identified as that taken by him from the car.

A claim check on the car for storage in Los Angeles Chief garage, also identified in court was taken from the floor of the machine.

Check Investigated.

Q. Did you make an investigation of this Chief garage and baggage with the claim check? A. I did.

Q. When? A. The same day.

Q. Did you know the proprietor? A. A. Mr. Fontaine.

Q. Anything else in car? A. The bags contained clothing, but outside of that I found nothing. Each bag was opened and taken to the office, he added.

Q. Any search of the witness? A. At a later date.

'Phone Call

This investigation of the house produced another bag, which was also marked by him with an initial. It was identified in court.

The top opened and baggage were taken to the station that day.

Q. Any time that phone call to? A. I didn't hear.

"I heard him say, 'This is Harold.' I was standing right about it in the Los Angeles paper, how I don't recall.

Q. Anything else you recall?

A. Something about sending a telegram from Chicago, but I don't recall the wording.

Q. Then the Chief said, had been found in a side pocket of the black bag. In the brown bag in blue suit, marked by initial, afterwards placed on it by witness, was also found.

Speaks of Spots on Trousers

Q. Did you examine this suit? A. Yes.

KIDNAP MESSAGE TAKEN BY YOUTH

Innocently Boy Falls Into Trap And is Beaten

New York, Feb. 16—(AP)—A terrified and badly pummelled school boy is in Bellevue Hospital today because the man he thought he innocently offered to deliver for a 50-cent reward was a kidnap note. He failed to obtain the 50 cents as the note writer disappeared.

Both eyes of the youth, Norman Fund, 15, were blackened and his skull was fractured by the brother of the intended victim who was, police said, beaten by the man he had come to meet.

The note was addressed to Augie Del Gado and offered information about a threat against his brother, Tony Del Gado. It required Del Gado to put $100 in an envelope and return it by the boy to the unknown writer.

After investigating, police said they were convinced from what they heard the truth in saying he did not know who the man was.

As the chase increased a middle-aged woman, having glanced over her way through the crowd and snatched Miss Gow by the arm.

"Let me alone" cried the now thoroughly harrassed young woman as she struck a small doubled fist to the woman's face.

When the Berengaria sailed about 4 a.m. today she had safely locked herself away in her cabin after bidding a last goodbye to her friends.

Miss Gow, who came back to testify for New Jersey against Bruno Richard Hauptmann, arrived at the pier with friends who had given her a farewell party in Englewood. She declined to comment to newspaper reporters. She received a reverend agent who headed the Gow party declared, "I have been instructed not to talk."

'Glad Man Got Off Train Constant Worry to Me' Declares Arthur Iszard

Co-Pilot of Plane From Chicago to Los Angeles Testifies

REMEMBERS 'FARE'

Station Operator at Battle Creek Tells of Message

A colored railway porter of Chicago, one of the most interesting witnesses yet produced, an airplane co-pilot of Los Angeles, Cal., and two ticket or passenger agents from Port Huron, Mich., and Battle Creek, Mich., were the last to stand at the Vermilyea murder trial to testify as to the identification of Harold W. Vermilyea at various points throughout Ontario and the United States during the period between Oct. 5 and 6 last, at the hearing of Vermilyea in this morning.

Glad To See Him Get Off.

"I was certainly glad to see him get off. He had bothered me to death," said Arthur Iszard, the porter, in making his identification of the accused. Iszard noted him as a nervous passenger on the Hamilton-Chicago train.

As court opened on Saturday morning Crown Counsel Urquhart, in the hearing of Harold W. Vermilyea the first remark of the Hon. Justice Jeffrey was an enquiry regarding the health of one of the jurors, slightly indisposed on Friday.

Arthur Iszard, colored, a porter on the Canadian National Railway was on Train 17 running between Toronto and Chicago on the morning of Oct. 5. He identified as in charge of a parlor car on that day. The passenger was got on the parlor car at Hamilton was pointed out by Iszard sitting in the body.

The train was due in at Chicago at 8.30 p.m. The luggage carried by the parlour car from Hamilton, the same luggage as identified by previous witnesses was given positive identification by witness.

"Extremely Nervous"

His passenger was "extremely nervous" continued witness. "He asked me for some beer, but I told him he would have to wait until the dining car was put on at Port Huron."

The railway ticket carried by the man called for Chicago. There had been no reservation on the train, said witness, further conversation with his passenger brought out the fact that he was catching an airplane and whether the train would be late.

Dictates Message

At Battlecreek, the passenger dictated a message to the operator at the station. Then he returned to the car. Instead of continuing on to Chicago, he asked if the train would be late. Witness said he gave the name of "B. F. Collins".

The train arrived at the Grd St. stop, Chicago, at 8.30 p.m. On the arrival here, the passenger was insist-

Juror's Health Much Better

The concern felt by the Hon. Justice Jeffrey over the health of one of the jurors on the trial of Harold W. Vermilyea was revealed today. The juror, who has been suffering from the effects of a heavy cold for the past day or so, stated in answer to a question from Justice Jeffrey regarding his health, that he "felt much better today". The remark concerning his health was the first made at the opening of Saturday's hearings on the trial.

ent, that he should get off first. Witness carried one piece of baggage. From here he wanted to call a taxi, but witness advised him to take the fast, cross-town street car to the station.

Witness next saw the accused returning from California a "couple of weeks later". He was accompanied by Constable Fred Izard of the O.P.P. and two other officers.

At the request of Crown Prosecutor Urquhart, Mr. Thompson, Battlecreek station operator was brought into court and identified by witness.

Passenger an Excepiop

Col. Greer took up the questioning.

—In an ordinary tone? A—Yes.

BELL BOY WAS MIXED IN DATES

Admits He Was Mistaken After Close Questioning

The main feature of the Friday afternoon testimony at the Vanalman trial was the positive identification of the accused as the man in whose automobile Harold Bannas rode from Belleville to Toronto and return on the day they had seen at some time or other during the course of his alleged trip to Canada from California.

These identifications were first made by two employees at hotels where each of them gave their testimony in a similar style and were not greatly disturbed by the cross-examination of the defence counsel, C. R. H. Orser.

The testimony given by these witnesses detailed some of the arrangements as charged by the crown. Bannas is alleged to have returned from his trip with Bannas on the 1st December, but according to having for Trenton and Belleville. Whenever he left Belleville, the witness said he started out driver as to whether they would be overtaken at the time he wished to go away as far as to engage a certain taxi for the trip each time he already had one engaged. When this driver was unable to get away and accused him of unfair dealing he accused the man's employers with the promise that he would get a taxi for the trip on the following Saturday, a witness testified.

On his return to the hotel late last night evidence was given that he brought a young person and that he retired in his room with instructions that he be called at 7 a.m. However, he returned downstairs a half hour later, it was testified, with his hand stuck in a bag to be called a taxi and take to Hamilton when a witness was called upon to identify the accused in the former place, that he had seen a man in the lobby of the hotel the next morning and asked the same question as to a taxi, the witness said was the accused as he had on his hat pulled down. A driver was agreed on of $15 he testified he told he was instructed to call at the Walker House at 2 p.m. but when he arrived he found that the man had gone in Bannas' taxi. Draper, according to his story then went to Hamilton in the Bannas' taxi and there found the man sitting in the lobby of the hotel. He asked what the car was for the deal he was getting. He said that he would be hired on Saturday for another trip he was making. Col. Greer brought out that Draper felt he was very badly treated as he had left his place in the taxi business and the possible loss of a paying fare. It was the kind of a witness that declared that helped to impress upon the assembled jurymen that he accused and which helped him to identify the man with certainty at the time he called on the man at the hotel.

M. Morin, the night clerk at the Walker House was the next witness. His testimony he first met the man he said was the accused at 1.15 a.m. on Friday, October 5th when he came into the hotel from the New York Street entrance and asked for his key. He also identified Detectives, the witness swore, that he wished to be called when he left at seven in the morning and then asked witness to get him a morning paper. As there was none in at that time Morin sent out the bell boy who was on duty at the time and who came back with a copy of the Belleville Intelligencer. That the man looked this over hurriedly and then went to his room, was the evidence of Morin.

Witness stated that the man was not wearing glasses at 1.15 a.m. and at 5.30 p.m. he said the man came down again and identified about the same time as the Toronto Star, and then went outside, and that he returned in a few minutes and said that the drivers apparently all charged the same rate for the trip which was three dollars. Under cross ex. the man was carrying a flat paper wrapped parcel about fifteen inches long but Morin was unable to guess at the contents. When the man came down stairs he had also brought his overcoat which he considered a brown suitcase and a black grip. He was dressed, witness said, as he was when he came in and otherwise appeared the same. He identified the bell boy's luggage out and that was the last witness saw Bannas and called on to identify him, he testified.

J. Ward, the bellboy at the Walker House was under quite confused in the giving of his evidence under questioning by Col. Greer and finally admitted that his memory was not very good. However, his story was that accused came into the hotel at 1.15 a.m. and registered on the request of Mr. Morin he purchased a Mail, gave it to the accused and then took the latter's bag in the elevator. He said he next saw him when he came down in a half an hour and helped to carry his bags out to the taxi that was waiting. Accused gave him fifteen cents as a tip just before driving away.

The taxi driver was Dave Dunsinger, who said he drove the accused from the hotel first to Port Credit and then on to Hamilton when the latter asked for accommodation at the house in the latter city. Dunsinger had dickered with him to go to Port Credit for two dollars and a half, he said, when the driver was first there. The former figure was agreed on and they started for Port Credit. Dunsinger said, he would go on to Hamilton for $3 provided that the accused said alright 'go ahead' and he eventually arrived at the Commercial House in Hamilton at 3 a.m. where he was paid off and returned to Toronto.

George Freeth, night clerk at the Commercial Hotel in Hamilton, was on duty when a man he identified as the accused entered in the company of the previous witness and inquired for rates. A room was taken and his luggage was taken up. Witness identified the bags as the

ONLY 7 POUNDS BUTTER IS TAKEN

Check-up at Creamery Shows Loss Not as Heavy as Thought

Local police, following further check-ups in the recent robbery staged at the Belleville Creamery Limited, discovered yesterday, that only seven pounds of butter had been stolen and not 250 pounds as at first stated. This error was discovered, when the employees at the creamery made thorough check-ups of their stock, following previous hurried calculations on Monday. The local police still have the case under careful investigation and, marked progress was reported today to the effect that further arrests are expected of others implicated in the master bandsc W. J. Hedger, who was the only custody yesterday.

The error relating to the statement, that 250 pounds of butter had been stolen, came after a hurried check-up on the stock at the Creamery on Monday, the supposedly missing butter later being found safe in the butter plant, authorities state. Gordon Mankin, and a prospective man named "Red" are being sought by local police in connection with the robbery. These two men were last seen in "Tin Town" the transient village north of Kingston. Only a portion of the stolen money was recovered with the arrest of Hedger. Manahan being alleged by police to be the holder of the back. All of the Platten butter was recovered.

INTEREST SHOWN IN RED CROSS NUTRITION COURSE

First Lesson is Held in John Street Church Hall

The first lesson of the Red Cross Nutrition Course was held Friday afternoon in John Street Church kitchen, but the rest of the lessons will be held on Tuesdays at 2.30 p.m. at the same place.

A very interested group of women attended and fell into the very interesting class in food study but eight are now the number who will complete the course. For attendance at at least five out of the seven lessons a certificate and the economical cook book will be awarded.

The class is fortunate in having the interest of Mrs. Donald Ketchabaw, Miss Lillie Wallbridge and Miss Clara Catron, all of whom will teach the lessons.

Everyone in the class agreed that good food is fundamental to good health. The teacher, Miss Margaret McCready, of the Ontario Red Cross stressed the fact that many daily eating habits are even more vital to a family than daily cleanliness habits and yet the mothers are as careful to insist on regular good eating as on washing behind the ears!

Good food must be used regularly over a period of months before it can build up a strong resistance to ill-health and infection. The Red Cross Nutrition Course is open to all mothers wishing to learn the most economical meals and cookery which will give the best returns in health. Friday's meal of pork liver balls, fried onions potatoes, carrots and prune pudding flavoured with lemon all combined to make up a meal with a high iron content and valuable in preventing anaemia.

And so at each lesson will be prepared an economical meal with a valuable health lesson in it as well. Only with much co-operation locally has it been possible to hold the lessons.

When the unusual storms of 1935 swept all British Columbia they weakened the spire of the Holy Rosary Cathedral in Vancouver, the Catholic Mother church. Board of Education Favors Liability Insurance, Tenders Ordered Called at Meeting

Canadian or British Companies Will be Given Business

PRINCIPAL'S REPORT

State Progress of Classes Disrupted by Sickness

Public liability insurance will be placed by the Board of Education in a non-tariff company and the finance committee will ask for tenders according to a resolution passed by that body at their regular monthly meeting held on Friday evening in the board room of the collegiate institute. Mr. George F. Ostrom asked if it was essential that this insurance be placed and the chairman of the board Col. R. O. Gwen explained that last year tenders were called but nothing was done in the matter.

Trustee Wotten, chairman of finance, stated that when tenders were called, that the agents gave a price in tariff companies but the companies would not stand by the price and would state they were wrong but that does not say, that insurance is not essential. "We have been paying prices in non-tariff companies, which are 15 percent cheaper than tariff companies and I am given to understand they are perfectly safe and reliable," he said. "We are in debt the first year, $125.00 the second and $175.00 the third year and that insures this board against any liability on school property."

Mr. Wotten: "If any action is taken without insurance last year and this year $500 additional expenditure necessary at the present time."

Mr. Wotten: "I guess they are going to have to be very busy last year."

Mr. Gwen: "If there is anything that warrants this expenditure then all right, but I am of the opinion, that last year nothing was called."

Col. Ponton: "All agents should have the opportunity to tender and I am given to understand, that practically all the non-tariff companies are American and I think in the interest of Canadian or British Company, I am against this on the ground of economy, and I would like to know what properties are included."

Mr. Wotten: "Only playgrounds and all places under the jurisdiction of the Board. Nearly a million dollars worth of fire insurance is carried yet not one cent for liability."

Mr. Monerieff: "We have had considerable accidents and if satisfactory settlement had not been made the claims would have been far greater than the premium we will be asked to pay."

R. R. Adams: "I have always spoken against the insurance and my experience in the City Council, at work and in other fields and no necessity of liability insurance. Should there at times arise, that somebody is always trying to get something to somebody."

R. Moncrieff: "If a boy loses an arm in the Vocational department any boy would give him $10,000.00. At the present time we have the Board passed the recommendation.

Report Adopted

The report of the Vocational Committee which was adopted and in this report, the committee recommended that the use of the household science department by the Red Cross for certain periods of work. They also recommended, that standing be done about the guard rail across the basket ball floor in the auditorium, stating, that the visitors of those sitting in that section was endangered in certain games by the rail. The Auditorium Committee will look into the matter. Nurse Zarchman gave her report, stating there was considerable sickness in the schools and that the attendance was down but conditions were infinitely better. She stated that there had been two cases of scarlet fever and three of chicken pox since the last meeting. Ten children were treated for a head condition and one for a skin condition.

Dr. P. C. MacLaurin in his report requested the purchase of 24 feet of linen tape for the medical charts and this was passed on to the supply committee with power to act. He also requested, that the clocks be overhauled with respect to the time mechanism as they were not working properly. H. L. Brown stated that he had been asked done some time ago but was told, that the trouble was in the time mechanism and that the trustees of the Collegiate told the Board, that attention be paid to this matter due to sickness but that the standing of the school was as high if not higher than at the same time last year.

Appointed to Board

C. A. Brown was appointed to the examination board and Mr. Gleen remarked, that the fees for this work had been cut off and probably Mr. Brown would not now want the position. Mr. C. A. Wilkins principal of Queen Victoria, Mr. G. Anderson of Queen Alexandra and Mr. L. A. Kelly of Ing Georges sent verbal reports to the board, stating that sickness among the pupils and the teaching staff was to a certain extent disrupting the progress but generally conditions were in a high state of efficiency.

Mr. Ostrom remarked it was nearing the time, that teachers would have to be rehired for the year and he thought it would be a wise move for the principals of the public schools to give a confidential report to the committee on the efficiency of the teachers. Col. Ponton thought this report should come through the Inspector, but Mr. Ostrom stated, that would be all right but it would not hurt to have that report.

"We should not be fearful and the teachers are the ones, that should know of how the teacher is getting along," said Mr. Ostrom.

Col. Gen: "The Inspector's report is made wholly from the teacher's report to him."

Mr. Ostrom: "I realise that but still I am in favor of the principals giving a report."

Considerable discussion came out of a recommendation, that the price of the auditorium was too high and that the finance committee be instructed to bring in a report on the lowering of rental for the auditorium. Mr. Ostrom brought the subject up, when he stated that the Auditorium was a public building and that if used for educational purposes, it would be more in the nature of social. He referred to the Canadian Legion, who had recently performed in the city by the generosity of the several artists, which will fill the hall. The principle of the Collegiate will have an opportunity to hear these artists at no cost on their part, and in return the board should make some concession.

Mr. Monerieff: "The admission was being charged the public at present. It was on a membership basis and he thought, there should be no distinction made. P. C. MacLaurin was of the opinion, that the association was interested in making the avenue student interested in the finer things in music and it was therefore educational and concessions should be made.

Soot Nuisance Aired

R. L. Brown enquired about the soot nuisance at Queen Mary School and Dr. L. G. Hyde stated there was no remedy unless hard coal was burned, which would be a huge proposition. Mr. Wotten stated the boiler was made for burning bituminous coal but that the coal was in for the season and if smokeless coal was burned the coal would be three to four dollars a ton. Mr. Gearer, Mr. Adams told of complaints he had received about the Tillerary Society, that the entertainments were changing with the times.

Mr. MacLaurin strenuously denied the implication and was quite surprised, that such a report should be made. R. Moncrieff, George Bidwell, R. D. Adams and F. M. Bird will compose the playgrounds committee for the coming year, while the fees committee will continue as constituted until the new ars are set.

Edward Lally, who is the representative of the Swastika School Board in place of E. J. Butler, who was welcomed to the Board by Col. Green and hoped, that he would find companionship on the Board for the coming years. The fees committee will continue as constituted until the new ars are set.

'I AM INNOCENT' SAYS HAUPTMANN AS DOORS CLOSE

Just before his departure for Trenton he was visited at his cell by Bowry Inspector Sheriff and set beside him throughout his trip and with whom he developed a friendship.

Hauptmann autographed one of his photographs for four as his last act before they left the cell block for Trenton.

Under Heavy Guard

Flemington, N.J., Feb. 15.—(AP)—Bruno Richard Hauptmann, convicted slayer of the Lindbergh baby, was removed from his cell in the Hunterdon County Jail and placed in an automobile under heavy guard, for his trip to his death cell in the New Jersey State Prison at Trenton today.

Hauptmann appeared on the front steps of the jail handcuffed to Warden Harry J. McCrea and Lt. Alson Smith, who has been in charge of the detail of New Jersey state troopers charged with his custody since Hauptmann's removal to New York.

The trio, surrounded by state troopers, paused for a few steps long enough to satisfy photographers and then proceeded to the rear of the jail.

They then got into the waiting car and started on their trek to Trenton.

Trenton, N.J., Feb. 15—(AP)— A crowd that hoped for a fleeting glimpse of Bruno Richard Hauptmann gathered at the New Jersey State Prison today, waiting the arrival of the man accused of the kidnap for the murder of Charles A. Lindbergh, Jr.

Trenton police roped off Third Street in front of the prison and kept spectators hurrying at the intersection of Third and Federal Streets, 200 yards from the prison entrance. A few persons stayed around the jail most of the night.

New York, Feb. 15.—(AP)—Bronx County District Attorney Samuel J. Foley said today that Bruno Richard Hauptmann, according to all the evidence, committed the Lindbergh kidnap and murder alone.

"There has never been any evidence," Foley said, "of collusion otherwise, to indicate anybody was implicated other than Hauptmann."

The case is closed as far as this office is concerned."

Chief of Detence Counsel Edward J. Reilly said he had never heard authorities knew of "an accomplice."

Eventually, the police may find some truth in my theory that Hauptmann received by a least four persons, none of them Hauptmann," Reilly declared.

Reilly said he "will no longer try to solve the crime for the police" "I'll let them solve their own crimes, henceforth," he remarked. "And I hope they have better luck than they have had with the Lindbergh kidnaping case."

Reilly said the matter of appeal will be worked out by Frederick A. Pope and Egbert Rosecrans, two of his New Jersey associates in the defense of Hauptmann.

"I understand Rosecrans will seek a writ of error on Monday," he replied when asked how soon the defence would start action on the appeal.

LOCAL CHAMBER VOICES ACCORD

Concurs in Resolution Being Sent to Parliament

The principal business dealt with at the regular weekly meeting of the Directors of the Belleville Chamber of Commerce on Thursday was the problem of unemployment relief.

This matter was brought to the attention of the directors through a letter received from the secretary of The Canadian Chamber of Commerce with headquarters at Montreal in which was stated that the executive of that organization had before them at their meeting on Feb. 7th., a statement of National Unemployment Relief. This statement was prepared by a special committee of the executive which, following the recommendations of their Board meeting in Toronto on Jan. 8th was appointed to study this question.

Report Given

The report of this special committee, which has also reviewed the Bill now before parliament on unemployment insurance, recognizes that unemployment is likely to continue for some time as a national problem; no unemployment insurance scheme initiated today can offer substantial prospects of assisting in the relief of need in the near future; unemployment insurance is only operative for a definitely limited period; the past and present systems of administering unemployment relief have encouraged inefficiency, political influence, mismanagement and the wastage of public funds, all of which have resulted in the straining of budgetary finances; there is therefore an urgent need for the co-ordination of the whole relief programme by the setting up of effective leadership and proper standards in administration; the bill now before parliament on employment and social insurance provides for governmental machinery which could also serve in the desired co-ordination.

The new relief policy will be decided upon by the Federal Government before the end of March. The executive of the Canadian Chamber of Commerce therefore requested that the directors of the Belleville Chamber consider the following recommendations, which the Canadian Chamber intends to submit to Ottawa and advise if they are fully in accord with them:

Statement

With the submission to Parliament of an Unemployed Insurance Act, accepting the principle of the features already stressed by the Chamber, it is believed that the time has now arrived when we can still further step toward the effective co-ordination of the whole Canadian unemployment relief programme.

To this end, it is recommended that the administration of unemployment should be placed in the hands of the Federal Commission to be set up by the new Act on Employment and Social Insurance, which Commission, according to the terms of the Act, will function through a Federal Committee with regional divisional boards, advisory and assisting committees, together with a general Advisory Committee. The fact that the administration of relief in some such general outline has appointed by a special committee of the Canadian Chamber some few months ago. The foregoing recommendation, it is considered, recognizes the necessity of financing unemployment relief out of ordinary separate funds from those earmarked unemployment insurance.

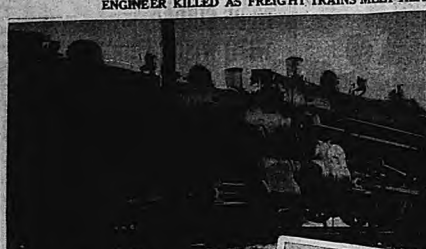
The Chamber has been led to this conclusion because of the experience of the past few years in the field of Canadian relief expenditures. It is only natural that the relief history of the Federal Government should have changed from time to time, at one contributory period after another has failed to meet requirements, on account of the inadequate supervision which the provincial and municipal governments have given to the administration of the funds.

It is felt that the Federal Government has not only generously given direct relief, but that it has sincerely endeavored to assist relief unemployment relief handled in the most efficient way.

Perhaps the one needful factor, which has not been sufficiently emphasized by the Federal Government, is the setting up of definite standards, according to which the relief money voted by Parliament and allotted to the provinces should most effectively be spent. There is now urged, therefore, the assumption of practical direction on the part of the Federal Government, which would assist the provinces to put such standards, equitably adjusted for different parts of the Dominion. In this way it may be possible to secure a maximum of efficiency through an administration which, removed from the influence of local politics, would best assist the individual in need of relief, and which would conserve public funds. Moreover, a continuity of policy for national unemployment relief would thereby be brought about.

It is further recommended, as has been intimated previously by the Chamber, that there should be adopted a registration system for identifying the unemployed, similar to that provided in the Act on Employment and Social Insurance for the identification of those actually employed.

Inasmuch as (1) unemployment relief has cost Canada, it is estimated, some $415 million during the past five years, of which $175 million has been contributed by the Federal Government, $135 million by the Provincial Governments and some $106 million by the Municipal Governments; (2) unemployment relief is at present the heaviest burden on the various governmental treasuries (3) the whole system of relief administration is but loosely integrated; (4) unemployment relief is subject in many cases at least to political influence; and (5) governmental machinery additional to that provided for in the Employment and Social Insurance Bill, would be duplicatory and unnecessary, it is therefore recommended that both unemployment insurance and unemployment relief, although financed out of different funds, should be administered by the proposed Employment and Social Insurance Commission.



The directors of the Belleville Chamber of Commerce endorsed the position taken by the Canadian Chamber and a recommendation to this effect will be brought before the annual meeting of the Belleville Chamber which will be held in the near future.

Mr. J. B. Boyce, the president, presided at the meeting and the directors present were Messrs E. P. Robertson, Leo B. Riggs, W. H. Morton, W. C. Springer, E. V. Illsley and Mackenzie Robertson.

ENGINEER KILLED AS FREIGHT TRAINS MEET HEAD ON

When two C.N.R. freight trains crashed near Lynden, Ont., one engineer who leaped from his cab when the crash occurred was killed. A trainman was seriously injured. Great damage was done to the engines and freight cars. Tracks were torn up for hundreds of feet in the head-on collision, which took place only eight miles from the scene of the Christmas night train wreck near Dundas. Layout shows the scene of the wreck. A heavy fog is said to have caused the accident by obscuring signals.

81 MEN ABANDON MACON

Hitre is pictured the rubber life craft of the U.S. navy, similar to the life rafts aboard the U.S.S. Macon, lighter than air dirigible. In such equipment as this the eighty-one survivors of the Macon tragedy were set adrift at sea to be picked up, fortuitously, by four United States battle cruisers that chanced to be in nearby waters. This is the type of life craft that Admiral Byrd had aboard his airplane when he crossed the Atlantic via the Azores. Only two men were carried in each craft. There was a Filipino mess boy and the other was a man named Daily, the radio operator of the Macon, variously reported as having gone down with his ship or to have leaped 125 feet into the sea and drowned after sending the last desperate message from the plunging dirigible.

MACON'S SOS ELECTRIFIES COAST

Pre-Historic Plant Life Told to Horticulturists By Rev. Harold W. Reid

Horticulturists of the city, who devote much of their time to the development of lovely flowers of today had the opportunity of learning last evening something about the ancestors of these favourite blossoms of plant life, which flourished in ages long past, when they heard with interest an address on "pre-Historic Plant Life" delivered by Mr. Harold Reid. Mr. Reid was guest speaker at the annual banquet of the Belleville Horticultural Society held last evening at the New Queen's Hotel.

The enjoyable function took place in the private dining room of the hotel. Blossoms to delight the most exacting of flower lovers graced the tables, daffodils and tulips being used in the decorative scheme. The guests enjoyed a delicious menu after which an interesting program was carried out.

President in Charge

Mrs. George A. Bonisteel, President of the Society, occupied the chair and very gracefully carried out the duties of chairman. Mr. Sid Hector, well known soloist, contributed three songs, "The Ragged Vagabond", "Over the Dunes" and "On the Road to Mandalay" which were greatly appreciated by the audience. Mrs. H. W. Dillnutt acted as accompanist.

Mrs. Bonisteel in her opening remarks referred to the three or four exacting years past and pointed out that horticulturists, through their very profession, were given to hopefulness and always looked forward with bright prospects to the season to come. She was pleased to announce that the annual Flower Show which had to be suspended that year would be resumed this year and spoke of the Society's aim to acquire more members than ever before.

Greetings From Board

Mr. Charles Symons, representing the Belleville Parks Board extended greetings to the Horticultural Society. He referred in glowing terms to the contribution the Society had made to the beautification of the city and to the harmony that existed among all coordinating organizations in Belleville.

The good wishes of the City Council and appreciation of the activities of the Horticultural Society were feelingly expressed by Alderman Harry Hill.

Mr. C. O. Hetherington was called upon by the president to introduce the speaker, whom he had known all his life and with whose father, the late W. C. Reid, he had been associated.

Mr. Heritly said that the proudest moment in his life was when, as a boy, he had taken exhibits to Madoc Fair and had received a special prize awarded by W. C. Reid, of Enterprise. Mr. Reid had since won the confidence of the people and among those who had been benefactors of Belleville in the past, among them, was numbered Mr. W. C. Reid.

Mr. Heritly contrasted the Belleville of twenty-five years ago, drab, dreary and down at heels with the fine blocks now grown to Belleville, its present appearance. A great deal of credit for the transformation was due Mr. W. C. Reid, who preached the gospel of the beautiful.

Mr. Harold Reid had come back to the city to continue the work so assiduously and faithfully carried on by his respected father. Mr. Heritly referred to his career in the ministry and his work as one of those of the classics in Queen's and Toronto University and welcomed him as the guest speaker of the evening.

Off Beaten Path

In discussing "Pre-Historic Plant Life," his words, Mr. Reid said, were probably away from the beaten paths trod by horticulturists of today and perhaps those who delighted in living plants would be impatient with an attempt to lure them from the gardens of to-day to the forests of bygone days. Nevertheless many have wondered how so many plants came into being and how matters of life are correlated to present living plants.

Horticulture has recently been classified in the classification of plants according to their aesthetic and commercial value. Sometimes they regarded with the utmost contempt—living known by the name of weeds. But a worker co-related to the horticulturist the botanist, rescued these unfortunate specimen from the trash heap. To them there is no such a thing as a weed and they are peculiarly interested in the classification of plants according to the scientific basis of their structure.

But it is not from the realms of palaeo-botany, nor from archaeologists, but from the geologists, that this gains some knowledge of the plant life of the vast eras of the pre-historic period. It is through rocks, their agencies and processes that the various stages of plant and life are recorded.

Three Periods

Geologists agree that there are three distinct periods of development although there is much uncertainly as to the years each period represents, some reckoning them in thousands, others in millions. Yet the "rocks records" of the various ages have maintained in minutest details the form and structure the great variety and beauty of plant life so that its history may be written.

The most valuable form of record is when the plant life has been turned to stone and the most impressive example of this is seen in certain trees in Yellowstone Park in Northern Arizona where trunks ten feet in diameter of trees two hundred feet high were preserved in fossilized form. Mr. Reid also described a most amazing sight in the State of Wyoming, the Amethyst Mountain, where the remains of a fifteen foretaste one on top of another, exists, extending two thousand feet above the valley.

Mr. Reid, in a most interesting manner, described the plant life of the three great periods, the Palaeozoic, Mesozoic and Cainozoic.

In the second period, that of enormous dinosaurs and huge, hideous flying reptiles, tropical plants flourished almost to the Arctic region. A descendant of that age, the "ginkgo biloba" grown in Belleville, is interesting to note.

The last age marks the mastery of flowering plants over all types. This was followed by the Glacial period and the changed type of plant life, suited to changed climate.

Mr. George Watson, secretary of the Society, expressed the sincere thanks of the guests to Mr. Reid for his scholarly address and the hope that an opportunity would be afforded to hear him again.

CRASH VETERAN

Lieut. Commander Herbert Wiley

Lieutenant Commander Herbert Wiley, one of the four men who survived the dirigible Akron disaster, and one of the survivors of the earlier Shenandoah crash, was in command of the Macon when it plunged into the sea off Point Sur, near Carmel, Cal. The lone lighthouse keeper at Point Sur told of seeing the Macon struggling against terrific headwinds off the Santa Barbara Channel earlier in the evening and of how the trim craft rose and sank against the heavy air currents, retraced its course and then battled forward again. Then he saw the "topside" rip open and the vessel plunged! Only to lift itself again as cargo was jettisoned

Too Well-Known

It does not pay to steal something one cannot get rid of. Some one snatched a ten thousand dollar volume of the third edition of Shakespeare published seventeen years after the poet-dramatist's death. The New York police have received a package containing it. The book had been stolen from a bookshop two years ago last December.

Probably since then the thief has been wondering how to get rid of it. He did not have long before he learned he could not dispose of it, so well is it known.

It even cost that man trouble and expense to be dishonest.

Power from Sun

Professor Burton of Toronto University thinks that some day in the future the heat of the sun will be harnessed, though present applications of the experiments which have been made are not very satisfactory. He points out that the harnessing of the sun's power is like the taking of gold from ocean water—while there are billions of dollars worth of gold in the oceans, the expense of recovery is so great that it is not profitable.

In the United States experiments are under way in an effort to make the sun-power into steam power by the use of mirrors reflecting sunlight on glass heater tubes containing black oil.

Others have a different way of using the sun heat by allowing it to heat tanks of water for circulation in homes.

The power of the sunlight is so potent, even if the source is so many million miles away that it does seem that the sun may be made some day to do more than add its aristocratic warmth in melting ice, heating the fields and causing vegetation and growth as well as keeping the earth from growing colder in winter. It does not seem possible that man could convert so much sunlight as to chill materially the world by robbing our atmosphere of the effect of its rays.

Book Censorship

Shall there be a novel censorship? has been asked. The question is perhaps not unnatural in the light of some books.

But to the glory of humanity it must be said that librarians exclude books of a character which are immoral and that the great mass of the people do not read filthy trash which is published. Of course some of the poor stuff must find a number of readers or it would not be written but mankind yet has sufficient sense to trust itself with the freedom of print.

Good books find sufficient readers to make the writing and printing of good books a profitable undertaking.

The chief objection to censorship of book publication would mean certain disadvantages. It might mean the danger that the lines would be drawn too strict and there might be an era of extreme dull books as those in authority might rule out certain books as not suitable for reading because of the presence of wit or because of treatment of certain themes, when much authority is given into anyone's hands, that person or that body must be sufficiently intelligent in every phase of human life to know what to allow and what to prohibit.

One thing is certain, the average newspaper is much cleaner than much of the conversation which goes on in certain families or groups. Things which cause a laugh in conversation, things about which people like to gossip to their hearts' content, whether the truth be in what they talk about or not, amutity stories, are not told in the press. And then, whether blunt books are much more vile than the talk which is often indulged in, is questionable.

The public cannot afford to read "bad" books, that is, immoral books. The chance of contamination is too great, but so is the danger with careless companions, men who are careless in their ways of living, careless about their ideals, and careless in their conversations. Yet, of course, there is this danger, one might be ashamed of evil companions, but cherish a vile book with terrible consequences.

Public libraries are serving the people a good fare of books and the public knows it. There are safeguards against vulger and immoral books. Those who want immoral books have to go hunting for them.

There was a time when it was an offence to bring in a certain journal. And that journal was smuggled. Today the ban is off and nobody cares much whether he reads it or not. Ability to say "yes" or "no" is what satisfies the people. That is doubtless true with books. It is the human quirk that repression generally means publicity.

In the past there has been a battle fought for freedom of the press, and that includes the publication business. It is not well to suppress thought, even if one cannot agree with it. All that should be necessary is that there should not be filth, or what is calculated to lower the moral tone of the people. Today fortunately that freedom is ample which allows all shades of thought.

Now It's the Oyster

A Long Island oyster farmer tells us that because the oysters are fat at this time we shall have another six weeks of winter. The oyster knows, he says. But on the groundhog test the oyster is wrong, according to the old legend, the groundhog came out of his hole on February 2nd, the sky was overcast, he couldn't see his shadow and that means an early spring. Our favourite patent medicine almanac, working on the good old theory that nobody can be wrong all the time, votes for the long winter. However, we haven't heard lately from the chap who predicts the weather by goose bones, by the bark of trees, by the winter coats of wild animals or the migration of birds, and so the situation is left in doubt, not to be dissipated even by the plumpest of bluepoints.—Ottawa Journal.

Hobbies That Have Grow Up

Hobbies are often an excellent way of helping children to find their vocations. The late Cyrus Curtis, founder of the Curtis Publishing Company, as a small boy published an amateur newspaper. Helen Hoskinson, famous magazine cartoonist, as a child loved nothing better than to amuse her teacher and fellow-students. A little boy named Boucher was a tireless constructor of small boats—today the H. E. Boucher Manufacturing Company is the largest concern making miniature boats and parts.

Some grown-ups have turned hobbies into profitable businesses. The kiddie-car was developed by Amos W. White in a whittler's idle hours. A fisherman invented a new kind of bait to attract more fish —and the Al Foss Ford Rink Minnow, nationally known, sells well. A Chicago bond man named Dodson built bird-houses for fun—today, Dodson bird-houses are sold far and near.

"Hobbies," said Mr. Curtis, "make us interesting to other people and interested in life." He offers this prayer for parents: "And give to my sons and daughters the hobbies that will make them earnest interest, which arouse their greatest enthusiasms, which make them painstaking and persistent, and in which they can lose themselves completely, Amen."—Rotary Magazine.

Getting Together

Cables from London indicate an end to the economic war being carried on between the Governments of Britain and the Irish Free State. Both countries are realizing the folly of such trade battles, though, no doubt, the Free State has been the heavier loser. Britain is her natural market for cattle, butter, eggs and other farm products and with this curtailed the prospects of the island are darkened. The Free State sought to develop reciprocal trade with Germany along certain lines, but that did not work out satisfactorily, and evidently the experience has convinced the Dublin Government that trading with the next-door neighbor who has the coin is the best policy.

Already there has been adopted a plan of exchanging British coal for Irish cattle, and the disposition appears to be to extend the list. Besides, the cables from London indicate Government reluctance to agree to this until there has been satisfactory arrangement of the land annuities withheld by the Free State Government, which turned the money into a special fund.—Toronto Globe.

A Bishop Looks Ahead

When, in a characteristically forceful sermon yesterday before the newly organized Anglican Churchmen's Association of Brant Deanery, Right Rev. C. A. Seager, Lord Bishop of Huron, spoke in terms of "a new morality" he epitomized the trend of thought of an ever-increasing multitude. A noted churchman, skilled administrator and keen student of affairs, Dr. Seager's utterances therefore command attention. What he said here must have made a profound impression on those who heard him. He spoke of movements within the church, of the useful philanthropic institutions known as "service clubs" and of fraternal organizations of various sorts as being simply expressions of what he described as "a movement on the part of men of our day to help out the general good and welfare," a movement, moreover, affecting the whole of human society. The sound logic upon which he bases his optimism for the future also is encouraging. In the current confusion of a whole series of "new deals", social and economic, and with the present outlook often beclouded, it is always easy to become disheartened. But, taking the long view, there is every ground for concurrence in Bishop Seager's prediction that out of the turmoil will emerge "the real 20th Century," just as, from out the dark days of the early 19th Century came a lengthy period of brilliant achievement. History has a habit of repeating itself.—Brantford Expositor.

Somewhere, Spring!

Who would travel once again
On a path where loss and pain
Had beset him day by day,
Under skies all bleak and gray?
Who would turn from peace and rest
To resume a weary quest
After love or fame or gold?
Who would barter bliss untold
For the turmoil and the strife
While once more the call of life?
Cease your tears and questioning . . .
Winter here; but somewhere, spring!

ARMY OF OUT OF WORKS AND WON'T WORKS marching up and down the land seems to be increasing according to the figures given in Chief of Police Kidd's annual report. During 1934 transients accommodated at the Belleville police station with a night's lodging numbered 3,669 which was 1892 less than in 1933. Size of this wandering army is significant —of course there were some repeaters but they would probably balance with others who passed Belleville up altogether. That there were over one thousand less in 1934 than the previous year would seem to indicate that times are improving. Of course this army of wanderers contains a large percentage who do not care to work, some seasonal workers and probably quite a number of won't works. The professional tramp and panhandler finds more comfortable quarters in municipalities anced by ability and experience as well as the widespread knowledge that work for transients such as these is not to be had, so the "looking for work" story fits well with the "Gimme a dime for a cup of cawfee" racket. And do these travellers know all the soft spots where good eats and plenty of them can be had for the asking—and the kind of people to panhandle? That's part of the profession. No professional hobo goes hungry, nor naked, nor does he lack an occasional bumper of beer or canned heat or shoe polish, or what have you. Those new to the road find the going hard, however, and either make haste to leave the road or take lessons from the more experienced Knights of the Road.

JUDGE WHO SAID life is just a lot of dreams, and guy who insisted that life is just a bowl of cherries, should get together and decide which is which or whether. As a matter of fact most folks have found out that life is compounded more than dreams or a bowl of cherries, weightier things at that. From the cherry angle it may be argued that there are sweet cherries and sour cherries and that's where the pleasant dreams and nightmares—but life is more than that, considerably more.

ROMAN LEGIONS ARE EMBARKING for Africa once more as they did in the days of Caesar, Antony and Cleopatra, and the power of Mussolini's Rome will be used to make the King of Abyssinia apologize, pay an indemnity and generally kowtow to Il Duce. Foreign troops have invaded Africa on several occasions and the result has not always been happy for the invader —they were mostly glad when they got out with whole skins. The Duke of Wellington's Egyptian campaign was a costly experiment which got him nowhere, and Mussolini's expedition against the hairy hordes of Abyssinia can not possibly prove profitable no matter what happens. Lives will be lost, great expense incurred for destruction, hard feelings engendered, and the net result will be loss all along the line.

MAN'S LEG UNJWED OFF by a beaver while he slept, press dispatch from Perry, N.Y., which made Front Page, is interesting if true. Of course the leg was wooden, but even so to sleep through such an operation would be a feat. Herman Strutter was the man and he alleges that the beaver gained entry to his bedroom floor sleeping porch where he slept and did the deed. Strutter says there were chips on the bed in the morning and the marks of the beaver's teeth on the leg. Irving Berlin wrote a song about the Darktown Strutter's Ball, and he might add another verse about Strutter's wooden leg and what the beaver did to it.

YOUTH NEEDS TO BE GUIDED WITH WISDOM

Intelligent Guidance In Adolescence Molds The Future Man

By Louis H. Bisch, M.D., Ph. D., Famous Authority on Health and Psychology.

Copyright, 1935, King Features Syndicate, Inc.

Boys may be divided into two general groups. There is the timid, shy, retiring type and there is the robust, adventurous, daring sort.

Since man's success in life depends largely upon his self-assurance and fearlessness in overcoming obstacles, the aggressive boy does not find it so difficult to adjust himself when he grows to man's estate.

However, we must consider that too much toughness of mental fiber is as bad as too much tenderness. An over-confident and fearless boy may easily become uncouth and overbearing to a degree that make him an objectionable personality.

Such a boy must be toned down a bit. He must be made to learn the advantages of self-control as to others of kindness, consideration, gentleness, respect, love and sentiment.

The bold boy is egotistic and often conceited. His pride, therefore, is the weakness in his armor. Touch that and you have got a lot with him. Make it a point of honor that, because of his strength and masculinity, much more is expected of him in the way of chivalry.

On the other hand, the boy who has best to stay by himself, who shrinks from entering into the rough play of children of his own age and who, in general, is not a good mixer, should be encouraged to be more rugged and less sensitive.

He should not be forced, but the advantages of growing into manhood unafraid should be stressed at every possible opportunity.

Athletics and all forms of competitive sports, especially in the open, are excellent for all boys. For the seclusive boy, nothing is better. However, care ought not to be too difficult at first, else they discourage and depress rather than cheer a spirit that is fearful of self-expressing.

When once the cautious boy finds himself and realizes that he can do certain things well, he will go further as the others. It does not take long before the combative instinct of the human being will assert its strength. With repeated trials and successes, the boy will come forth equally as certain of himself as the rest.

Often, indeed, a timid boy eventually becomes an overbold man. The pendulum often goes far in the opposite direction toward boldness as it lagged behind in childhood toward shyness. Such a possible development must also be watched and guarded against. Exaggeration of any character trait, good or bad, is detrimental, no matter who may possess it.

Mothers should not stress the physical side of their boys too much. Over-demonstration of affection may have pernicious effects, making the growing son so attached to his mother that it will seriously interfere with his ability to fall in love, marry and integrate the race later on in his life.

Mothers should try to preserve the spiritual bond existing between themselves and their sons. This very easily be accomplished while the weaning-away process is going on.

Make a little man of the boy as early as possible. Teach him the joy of service to others and make him feel that catering to one's own interests is not a desirable aim in life.

When a boy does a piece of work or performs an act that is creditable, be sure to praise him. Do not overdo it, but let him know that you are pleased.

Make him want to do better than the other children of his age. Set standards high, but not so high that they are manifestly unattainable. In a step-by-step manner push him on to a little farther ahead.

Study your boy as you would a book and let him know that you are studying him. This will not make him conceited, but rather will him feel that what he does really matters and he will respond all the better to your training and teaching.

Dr. Bisch's Daily Diet Hint

A soft custard is prepared by taking one egg yolk and adding it to a half-cup of milk, plus a heaping tablespoonful of sugar. Cook this to a creamy consistency. This is usually digested by convalescents and the aged and makes a most palatable as well as nutritious food.

OFFICER'S DEATH CALLED HERO'S

Testimony Likely to Show Dr. Beasley Victim Trying to Save

Glencoe, Ont., Feb. 15 (CP)—As the coroner's inquiry into the deaths of two Essex Scottish regiment officers opened here Friday afternoon it was learned testimony would tend to show Dr. W. W. Beasley died a hero's death in a vain attempt to save his fellow officer, Lieut. Hamilton Askin.

Sixteen witnesses will be examined by Crown Attorney Norman Newton so the jury might decide what occurred on the fatefull night of January 26. Press reports since that is unexpected is given, however, it is learned the theory advanced at the inquest is that of the train, after holding Askin from death, left the unfortunate.

The theory is the officers left the heated C.P.R. train for a breath of fresh air, going to the rear platform together.

Askin is supposed to have slipped and was about to fall from the train when Capt. Beasley caught him. It is further supposed that Beasley lost his grip and Askin fell to his death and Beasley, while later Beasley himself, weak from hanging on, also fell from the speeding train.

PILE SUFFERER GETS RELIEF

New Brunswick Man Praises Rejuvenator

Gentlemen: I wrote you recently in regard to piles, as I had a bad attack of them. I was operated on 18 years ago and again 7 years ago. The first operation cost me $50.00 and the last $80.00 for doctor and hospital, so there is $130.00—each were supposed to be permanent cures. Now I know what the knife cure is for piles—a temporary relief, so I proceeded to use my Rejuvenator as you said. I treated myself for one week, twice a day, and the piles all left, but on account of the irritation of my spine I had to stop. It is four weeks past and no sign of piles since. I am not saying I am cured of piles, but this I will say—I have an instrument that will stop piles, for how long I don't guarantee, but if they do come back again it is a great consolation for me to know I have an instrument that will knock them cold. And I can say the same thing about rheumatism in my shoulder and arms—and the neuritis in my left shoulder and arm. I was crippled. I treated myself for 2½ months—and for the past three months I have had no sign of it. I work 12 to 15 hours every day in my meat market, exposed to all kinds of temperatures, but no more neuritis nor rheumatism. Thank God—for I don't know who, if not Him, imprinted on my mind to buy this wonderful instrument. I have tried it for headaches and toothaches and will say it is almost instant relief for toothache and neuralgia—and sure relief for headache. I have used it on several people and they all said it stopped their headaches at once.

Now, gentlemen, if you wish to publish this letter you have my utmost consent to do so, as I know how to sympathize with my fellow citizens who may be afflicted with these complaints. I vouch for what I have said, and if anyone wants to write me personally I am at their service at any time to tell them just what my experience has been with the Rejuvenator. I was a total wreck 8 months ago—to-day I am keeping a little meat market and do the principal part of my meat cutting—and I feel as happy as a "clam at high water" to be able to make my own living. It is too bad that so many people have to suffer for the want of one of these life-savers — life-preservers — life-protectors and "life-worth-living-for" Rejuvenators. I am sending you my photo which you may use if you think it will be of any benefit in helping the distribution of this wonderful invention—The Rejuvenator. Thanks again to Higher Powers. Yours resp.

DAVID GAY,
Campbellton, N.B.

SUFFERED AGONIES WITH NEURITIS

Sir—Please find enclosed money order for new battery, also photo of myself age 77. I certainly cannot speak too highly of the wonderful help that your Rejuvenator was to me. I have suffered agonies with Neuritis in my arms and neck, which kept me awake night after night. It was getting to be more than I could tolerate, but after a very short time it disappeared and I am now enjoying a good night's sleep, and can honestly say that I scarcely ever feel the Neuritis—thanks to the "Overbeck Rejuvenator."

Thanking you, I remain,

RHEUMATISM BANISHED

Man of 81 Now as Fit as in the Prime of Life

SO ACTIVE; FRIENDS ARE ASTONISHED

Sir,—It gives me great pleasure to let you know what wonderful things your Rejuvenator has done for me. I have been using your instrument for the last two years, and am often congratulated on how well I look and how active I am. People seem astonished when they hear I am 81 years of age. I have no trace of rheumatism now, or, in fact, any other complaint, and am as fit as an ordinary man in his prime. When my three daughters at home feel anything amiss they make for the Rejuvenator. It keeps them fit. I look forward to many years of activity and am constantly recommending my friends to try it, and get rid of their troubles. I think every household should possess one of your wonderful machines.

Mr. John G. Dobson.

BAD HEART CLEARED UP

68-Year-Old Alberta Man Enjoys Relief from Cold And Chest Troubles

Sir,—Kindly send me another book on the Rejuvenator as I have lent mine once too often.

Since we got the machine I have used it faithfully twice a day and my wife once a day, and I can truthfully say it has done for me all that it did for Mr. Overbeck, in the same time.

A year ago my heart was in very bad condition, it would halt from fifteen to twenty times a minute, sometimes only giving one beat between halts.

This is all gone now.

I was subject to sore throat and chest troubles, but I have only once had a severe cold and by taking one extra treatment, it disappeared.

My blood pressure, which was low, is now right and my veins filled up.

I am 68 years old and white of hair, but a few colored hairs are now putting a dark shade in it.

Yours sincerely,
R. B. B.,
Edmonton, Alta.

HALIFAX MAN ENJOYS BETTER HEALTH

DIGESTION AND NERVES IMPROVED

Sir,—I have used your Rejuvenator for a period of two years with very beneficial results. It has helped my digestion and nerves wonderfully, as well as being a great help in the treating of spinal irritation, the result of a severe spinal injury some ten years ago. When I began using your instrument, there was still a weakness in the dorsal area, but this seems to have completely cleared up during the past six months. Chiropractic and osteopathy were not able to overcome this weakness over a period of eight years' treatment. I consider this result remarkable. The battery supplied is still in good condition. Your machine is the best on the market, especially adapted for home use. I am,

Yours truly,
G. L. K.,
Halifax, N.S.

87 Years Old, Neuritis Disappears

Sirs,—I must say that I have received excellent results from the use of the Rejuvenator I bought from you. The doctor told me I was suffering from neuritis. I had a severe pain in my right side at the base of the ribs, which has disappeared. Also I had a lump on each hand at the base of the thumb near the wrist—both of these have disappeared since using your Rejuvenator. I feel much better in many ways and, being past 87 years of age, I could not expect much more.

Yours,

AN IMPORTANT PUBLIC ANNOUNCEMENT!

EVERY ailing reader of this page will learn with eager interest that a British scientist has discovered a remarkable new process of creating healthy, active cells in the body. To do this is certainly to ensure length of days, for health, and long life depend on the activity of the cells which compose our bodies.

How completely this new process restores waning vitality is shown by the astonishing testimony printed on this page.

No one can read these moving letters without perceiving that a health method has at last been discovered which really does strike at the root cause of most disorders.

It is lack of bodily energy to keep our organs going at full speed that is the real cause of most of our ailments.

This deficiency can now be supplied by the new process announced today.

The cells greedily absorb the fresh supplies of energy which are fed to them by the new process. As a natural consequence all the organs begin to function more vigorously, and a feeling of well-being and happiness begins to pulse through the whole system. Tired muscles regain suppleness and strength. Weary eyes feel fresh and youthful. The stoop of age gives place to the upright bearing of the prime of life. Thoughts come quickly and action quickly follows thought. A new sense of capability, in fact, takes possession of the man or woman who only a short time before was in a state bordering on despair.

Such, in brief outline, are the claims which may be based upon the voluntary testimony of those who have put the new health process to the severest of tests.

The man who has discovered this new health method is Mr. O. Overbeck, F.R.S.A., F.G.S., F.C.S., the well-known scientist, who was the first to discover the food value of yeast, and who originated the de-alcoholization of beer at low temperature without altering its flavor or other characteristics. He is also author of a book, "Overbeck's Electronic Theory of Life," which has aroused much interest in scientific circles.

O. C. J. G. L. OVERBECK F.R.S., F.G.S., F.C.S., F.P.C. (London), etc., the Inventor and Patentee of the Overbeck Rejuvenator. For which in 1929, he was awarded the Diploma of Merit at the International Exhibition of Inventions. In 1930 created a commander of the Universal Order of Human Merit, in recognition of services rendered to humanity and for the particular aims, which the Letter of Nomination sets forth, as follows:

"An eminent chemist and indefatigable scientific investigator, Mr. Overbeck is the inventor of an ideal apparatus for the practical application of the marvellous discovery embodied in the 'New Electronic Theory of Life and rejuvenation.' For helping in the war against the diseases of humanity, for presenting many important papers before the English scientific societies, Mr. Overbeck takes a merited place in the great family of mankind."

"FOR THE COUNCIL OF THE ORDER, Etc., Geneva, April 15, 1930."

Mr. Overbeck has renewed his own health by this new process of feeding the cells with fresh supplies of energy and looks quite twenty years younger today than he did when he first began to try out his process on himself.

This process is applied by means of an instrument which has been given the fitting name of Overbeck's Rejuvenator, for it does in very truth bring back the health and vigor of youthful days.

Let the testimony printed in the adjoining columns prove that this is no mere hollow boast, but a statement thoroughly founded on fact.

SUFFERED FROM POOR CIRCULATION

NOW SLEEPS LIKE A CHILD

Sir,—A short time ago I purchased one of your rejuvenating instruments, from which I have derived great benefit. I had been a sufferer for years from very poor circulation in my legs, but since the first treatment the pain was almost gone and now I sleep like a child. My wife suffered from a nervous throat and she obtained very much benefit from the instrument. Sincerely yours,

J. T. S.,
Winnipeg, Man.

"I am pleased to say that I am using the machine regularly and finding great benefit from it."

MRS. J. I. E.,

STOP THE COMMON COLD

Many sufferers have told us a few treatments with the Rejuvenator will completely banish a common cold, if applied before the cold has had time to develop.

CONSTIPATION BANISHED

Sir,—I am writing to you to let you know how I am getting along with my medicine. I must say I have been getting stronger ever since I began using it. My heart, I noticed first, that I did not get so easily tired, secondly, the constipation doesn't trouble me. I was almost in despair till I used my Rejuvenator, as I have been troubled for over seven years. My husband sees a great change in my appearance and I have only one regret, that I did not know of it sooner. I will not forget to write and let you know from time to time how I am progressing.

Yours respectfully,

MARVELLOUS HEALTH PROCESS THAT FLOODS INACTIVE CELLS OF THE BODY WITH NEW ENERGY

Tired Organs Restored to Full Activity And Diseases Due To Sluggishness Of The System Speedily And Permanently Banished

SOONER LIVE WITHOUT EATING THAN BE WITHOUT REJUVENATOR

Says 76-Year-Old Vancouver Woman

Sir,—I am writing to say that in my own particular case, I think it would be better to have your special battery. I am 76 years of age and would not like to try anything else.

Am also giving you information of what the Rejuvenator has done for me. I feel I had rather live without eating awhile than to be without it.

It helped my knees and also pains in my back, more like lumbago than anything I think, between and just below the shoulder blades. Most of all I noticed the vitality it gave me, building up generally of my entire system.

I am enclosing P.O. order for the amount of a new battery.

MRS. A. A. R.,
Vancouver, B.C.

QUEBEC MAN FEELS BETTER

Sir,—I have decided to keep the Rejuvenator. Can truthfully say that after each treatment the individual parts treated and the whole system generally experiences a sense of well being. I am pleased. Common sense tells me that a serious complaint or breakdown of nerves takes some time to effect a radical cure, as one can not build up in thirty days a condition which has taken years to bring about.

Yours truly,
MR. O. S.,
Westmount, Que.

RECOMMENDS REJUVENATOR TO FRIENDS

I am now feeling very fit and am glad to believe the machine has been very beneficial to me. My wife had very severe pains at the base of the skull, she is now using the machine and has derived great benefit from the use of it. I feel quite confident in recommending the machine to my friends and others.

MR. J. F. M.,
Vancouver, B.C.

MR. JASON JONES

EDMONTON MAN CAN NOW READ WITHOUT GLASSES

Sir: I am pleased to advise you that since using the Rejuvenator I have been greatly benefited. See me standing and reading without glasses. This I could not do before using the Rejuvenator. Find enclosed my photograph, to be used as you wish.

Yours truly,
JASON JONES,
13128—64th St., Edmonton, Alta.

VANCOUVER FAMILY BENEFITED

Sirs: It gives me much pleasure to inform you that myself and family have derived great benefits from the use of your Rejuvenator.

A number of my friends who have bought your Rejuvenators have expressed their appreciation for benefits received.

I shall be pleased to give all information to anyone interested.

Yours very truly,

RHEUMATISM MUCH BETTER

WOULDN'T BE WITHOUT REJUVENATOR

Sir.—I wish to say my husband's general health is good and the rheumatism much better and wouldn't be without the Overbeck Rejuvenator. It has certainly helped him a lot. Yours truly,

MRS. E. A. T.,
Penticton, B.C.

WAS NOT MUCH HOPE

REJUVENATOR BRINGS RELIEF

Sir.—Herewith enclosed final payment on machine, many thanks.

It is accomplishing much for me, had reached that point where there was not much hope and was always in dread of a return of the dropsy which goes with kidney trouble I had. Since using the Rejuvenator faithfully according to instructions, there has been no return and my whole system seems to be re-awakened. I am able to put in a pretty good day in my garden and I am truly grateful.

A very good friend has had trouble with his nose and I gave him a few treatments. First he said he was able to breathe through his nostrils and secondly he said he could smell after being unable for years.

It is possible you will receive further orders from this district, as I have shown the instrument to several friends.

Many thanks.
H. T. B.,
Mission City, B.C.

SUFFERED WITH NEURITIS IN SHOULDER

Sir—I had suffered for years from neuritis in my right shoulder and for the last two years I could not raise my arm to my head and suffered great pain at all times. After using the Rejuvenator for two months I could note a great improvement, and after six months could use my arm without the slightest pain or inconvenience.

My husband has derived great benefit from it, as he used to suffer very much with headaches.

We are still using the machine and would not be without it.

79-YEAR-OLD WOMAN NOW FEELING FINE

Recommends Rejuvenator To Other Sufferers

Dear Sir:

I hardly know how to thank you enough for your kindness towards me. It is my whole heart's desire and ambition to do all I can for that wonderful appliance, the Overbeck Rejuvenator. I am trying my hardest to secure customers. I wish to say how very grateful I am for all the wonderful things the Rejuvenator has done for me. Before using your appliance I was unable to rise in the mornings until I rubbed myself thoroughly all round my back and hips with liniment or alcohol, I dared not take porridge at breakfast, as I was never able to eat anything unless it turned to water brash or indigestion. I almost dreaded to walk up to town, which is only seven or eight minutes' walk, because my back and legs felt ready to break in half and I had to fall into a chair properly exhausted. I was unable to move my toes on one foot for years through an accident. My hair was almost white and very thin.

After the third treatment with the Rejuvenator I was able to eat porridge, cereals or toast and eggs; in fact, anything. Also, I do not have to rub my back when rising in the mornings, and after the fourth treatment I went up town and back, did a morning's work and did not feel any trace of pain in my back and legs. I can move my toes, my hair has got darker and thicker—and, by the way, I never dared take cocoa before, but now I can relish a cup of cocoa. I feel more than grateful for all the Rejuvenator has done for me. I only wish in my heart I had known of your wonderful Rejuvenator years ago, and if only some of the poor sufferers would try and secure one of your appliances, they would never want to try anything else.

I was 79 years old the 24th of October last and I feel fine. You may publish this letter in any paper you choose, and I shall be only too glad and willing to answer anyone who cares to write me in regard to what the Rejuvenator has done for me.

Very gratefully yours,
(Signed) MRS. MARY J. BOWYER,

Choir Party

The regular mid week choir rehearsal of St. Andrew's choir took the form of a social evening on Thursday, the home being kindly opened by Mrs. Boulter Johnson. Mr. and Mrs. Boulter Johnson, when a number of cars assembled at Bath and after a membership of the choir, over the icy roads to the Johnson home in the sixth concession of Rawdon.

The fine spirit of hospitality, the warmth of the congenial family, whose home was thrown open for the evening, to banish all thought of the difficulties encountered enroute by the motorists. Fortunately none less than four cars slowed up by rough and icy roads. One by one they ascended the last hill, which under ordinary conditions is just an elevation in the road. Thursday's rain made it like a toboggan slide, and none succeeded at several attempts before getting over it.

After a period of rehearsal, a lovely lunch was served by the hostess. Every one joined in the spirit of merriment which prevailed. The hour was quite late, and Mr. Charles Allen arose to speak words of appreciation on the part of the choir for the splendid evening that was made possible by the generous hospitality of the Johnson family. Every one joined in singing: "They are Jolly Good Fellows".

With knowledge gained from experience, the party found no difficulties at all on the return journey.

Mr. and Mrs. Henry Bearhill of Trenton were the guests of Mr. and Mrs. Arthur V. Hulin on Thursday, Feb. 6th.

Be Sparing With Lipstick And Rouge, Advises Expert

(The Beauty Box)

Jean Harlow

Blonde screen star who keeps in step with the changing technique of make-up.

By HELEN FOLLETT

Pace painters, those busy ladies who spend time before the mirror, are changing technique. Also they are selecting new colors for facial batik.

They are getting away from the heavy powder that imparted the porcelain look. Also they're going in for more delicate shades of powder, powder with more of a sun cast.

Cheek rouge is no out of date that a girl with natural blushes feels old-fashioned. We're not going in for pallor, exactly, but we are getting down to a more subtle method of enhancing the celestial countenance.

Lipstick, however, isn't blooming so riotously, is being applied with more skill, is somewhat subdued in color. Eye shadows aren't anything but ghosts of their former selves. And everybody knows that fine engine nail polish is seen only now and then. Batik has chased it from the beauty arena.

Sounds brave to say that one bounces out of bed at the first opening of the eye shutters, but that is not what one should do. No, Gentlefolks, one should rest for ten or fifteen minutes, then do a series of stretching exercises.

Stretch the toes and the fingers. Then the neck, throwing the head far back.

Extend arms, legs and torso, relaxing fully after each effort. Take a dozen deep breaths. Just the thing for the lazy girl whose teeth we set on edge and whose hair rises at the word exercise.

When shampooing the hair don't use that old soap that happens to be in the house. Harsh soaps eat into the fabric of the hair shaft, cause it to break at the touch of comb and brush.

Better than nothing is to place a half bar of soap in a quart mason jar, cover with boiling water, let stand for three days before using. As you exhaust the supply add more water. The half bar will serve for nine or ten shampoos. A money saver.

Should it happen that the cold cream jar goes suddenly dry, and your skin feels as if it had been sandpapered, and the world is decidedly wrong, skim off the top layer brought by the milk and soothing oil. It is wonderfully soothing to a cuticuous surface that needs comforting.

Time now for new Spring shoes. Be sensible. Get away from the idea that fashionable ladies stride around on heels like stilts. Maybe they do at the gay evening party, but not on the boulevards. The proper foot casing for perambulating along the byways is a walking shoe which is low of heel, comfortably wide, not narrow, at the tip.

Be stingy with the dress and beauty budget, if you must, but don't try to save money on your teeth. Trot twice a year to your dentist, let him chisel away tartar. Everybody grows it, and it is a nuisance. No matter how much brushing goes on, there horrid little barnacles will form.

To develop the bust; massage every night with lanoline. Be gentle; delicate glands are easily inflamed. Every other night apply cold water with a big sponge, don't chill the finger tips. Do arm exercises with dumb bells strong, then the chest muscles, makes firm the tissues of the breasts.

Regular Baptists Celebrate Anniversary of Congregation

Regular Baptists of Belleville concluded their observance of the twenty-ninth anniversary of the organization of their congregation at services on Friday evening in Bridge Street Baptist Church. Rev. Dr. T. T. Shields of Jarvis Street Baptist Church, Toronto, was the speaker at the meeting which was held in the Alliance Tabernacle which had been loaned for the service of the Regular Baptists, was crowded.

Mr. J. Scott, pastor of the Regular Baptist congregation was in charge of the service. The hymns sung were "There is a Fountain Filled with Blood," "How Firm a Foundation" and "Look, Ye Saints, the Sight is Glorious." The minister read the lesson from the fifth third chapter of Isaiah and Mr. Norris sang "Old Rugged Cross."

Dr. Shields preached from the text Hebrews 10:11-12.

"And every priest standeth daily ministering and offering oftentimes the same sacrifices, which can never take away sins: But this man, after he had offered one sacrifice for sins forever sat down on the right hand of God."

"The Bible is written in prepriest speech," said Dr. Shields. "The words of God, like the works of God, are manifold. They have meanings within meanings, truth within truth. I heard my father say over and over again, 'God is a great packer, he can pack an oak in an acorn and can be can. He can pack a library in a volume, a volume in a sentence, the world of truth, all truth, into a single name. You have in these few words an epitome of all history, an infallible record of the history of the world.

"There are really only two religions, there are many forms, but in principle they are two. Between the two verses represent the two religions. The first verse "every priest" includes all false religions in which a man is always standing offering sacrifices, the same sacrifices day after day, over and over again with the same object in view and failing to do so. Every religion but the one which he had offered the sacrifice of Calvary.

Levitical Priesthood

Dr. Shields went on to say that the priest's work is never done. Reference in the text is of course to the Levitical priesthood. The tabernacle was built by Moses, according to the pattern shown to him on the Mount. Moses was repeatedly admonished that he make all things as he had been shown in the Mount. The ceremonial law even as the moral law was designed to be our schoolmaster. It was designed by all the details of the ritual to show us that the law can make nothing perfect. The Temple had much furnishing after the same pattern. But I call your attention to one single omission—neither in the Tabernacle nor the temple was there any place where the people could sit down. Everything stood and the priest stood. It was a labor less service. The sacrifices were innumerable, no man could sit down.

All Religions

"In fact all religions have several things in common, they recognize one supreme being or some supreme beings and the efforts men are directed toward the appeasing of deity. I do not mean to say that the devotees all have any adequate conception of God, but it is a human attempt to appease Deity, to bring man into pacific or peaceful relation to Him. Mohammedan offering his weary pilgrimage to Allah, somehow hopes to find an offering for sin, but they all have the one conclusion that his efforts has not taken away sin. So is the Hindu trying to pile up a wealth of merit that he can take account of. But he never succeeds and he has to begin it all over again.

So it is with many Christian religions, Dr. Shields said. He did not wish to mean offence to his Roman Catholic friends.

If religion prepares us for another and larger and more enduring world than this, surely it transcends, in value all this life has to offer and it is a part of prudence to be sure we are on the right track.

"I have great respect for Roman Catholicism," said Dr. Shields. "There is very much to be said in favor of Roman Catholicism.

"One thing is this—Roman Catholicism has God. There is nothing atheistic about that. This religion than can be said about some forms of Modernism. Modernism has no real God, it offers for a benevolent God a philosophy which would not make an average schoolmaster.

"Roman Catholicism has never questioned the Virgin Birth and the essential Deity of Jesus Christ, a doctrine which is almost universally denied in Protestant seminaries today.

"Roman Catholicism never questioned the miraculous birth of Jesus Christ, never questioned that He with the Father and the Holy Ghost is God.

"Roman Catholicism recognizes sin as a fact and offence against God and as something which must be dealt with.

"Roman Catholicism never made light of the Atonement. It always makes the death of Jesus Christ a vicarious death. You never find in the Roman Catholic priest denying the Resurrection of Jesus Christ. Thus far Roman Catholicism is essentially Christian, and catholic.

"Personally I could find it far more easy to be a Roman Catholic than a Modernist.

"The trouble with Roman Catholicism stops in with all its sacrifices as a middle man. The church says that you cannot believe, you can have salvation through the church and the priest.

"So by imposing sacramentalism it usurps the Holy Ghost.

"But there are forms of Protestantism that also belong to this category. What are you today? Very little of the preaching of grace. Are you sure of your eternal life or if you were in Heaven? Have you that salvation at all? A man may say 'Yes I go to church, I am a moralist and deal liberally with my neighbor, and I do the best I can. I would not say I am perfect. But I have not rejected the end of life and I cannot say I am saved. There is always possible a slip somewhere. But I do see you are a very depending upon something you think you can do for yourself as a ground of your salvation.

"I do not care what the form of religion may be, it is based on the finitesimal element of human merit in it. It is centered on anything man can do, you have a principal at work. And if your salvation stand upon anything you have there is none who can be sure of salvation.

"And if I should meet you at tounscore, you would still be standing upon that. It is your sacrifice which never takes away sin."

One Sacrifice

Dr. Shields then turned to the other side—the Man who when He had offered up one sacrifice for sin, sat down."

"This is the heart of the whole matter, my friends. He it was who spoke out of the unknown in the Garden and said out of the fulness of time, he would come. It was none other than He who came to Abraham and He was He who came to Bethlehem of Judaea.

"O my friend there is no salvation if Jesus be only a man, Unitarianism has no comfort for troubled soul humanity. If Jesus was only a perfect man. He might conceivably free you from your sins and set you from mine but not both, but His Deity gets Him unconditional power.

"He only was the narrow if you like, it is a matter of indifference to me, but I know, who denies the essential Deity, the essential Sonship of Jesus Christ, the essential of the Eternal Father, with the Eternal Son, let him call himself Baptist, United Churchman, or Presbyterian, that man is not a Christian. He has no gospel. He is a blind leader of the blind.

"There is no salvation unless this Man be God.

Helplessness of Man

"Was there ever a time when men were quite so helpless as they are today?' asked Dr. Shields, "Twenty years ago you heard professors strutting about evolution, formulating their philosophy and telling us how clever we all were. Where are they now? You don't find them boasting so much. Read your daily papers, your monthly magazines and you will find the note of discontent.

Modernism which denied the deity of Christ has been stamped by the majesty of events as the devil's lie.

"Half of the churches ought to be shut up. What's the use of a church without money? What is the use of driving a dairy cart about without milk. What's the use of the church without salvation!

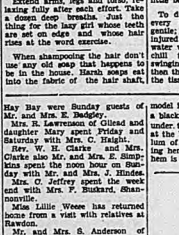
"Love Is Not Enough His Steps. I never heard that man had not had to retrace his steps. But Jesus Christ never made a false step he never turned aside. He went to his death and so ascended up one another."

Foreseeing

Jesus said when He was cut devils and that He had chosen the time and the place when He should die. He said, "I lay down my life for you the day and the hour when I shall be ready." Then with the cry—"It is finished".

It wonder sometimes what even the leading men think of Jesus. When God in the presence of His Son, Jesus Christ has provided pulls out his match box to show you how.

"If the blood that flowed from the heart of Deity cannot help and save you I will see what I can do." Universe can?



"Now we all great sinners and we might be in great despair were it not for this great Saviour. He has finished the work sovereignly and laid on it the arms of omnipotence as a sure sign of our eternal life and life which none could take from Him. In due time He took it up again.

"All God asks is that you recognize that He has done on basis and accept the one sacrifice for sins forever.

"Some have said what a mechanical idea that is. But the Bible talks of mechanical things. It speaks of price spreads, and of false weights as well as commission to God. Can you tell me what is the matter with the world? Debts! Debts! How are we going to get out of it? If a man had wealth enough to cancel all debts, all of mankind can you imagine anyone saying that is too mechanical. If that were done, it would be the greatest thing in the history of the world. "The world is God's and the fulness thereof" and the Holy Ghost was sent to convict the world of sin.

Then he went back to God, to the heavenly Father and pleaded for ever finished His work sat down, it means that God the Father was satisfied. Jesus Christ's name is exalted and that the Holy Ghost was sent to convict the world of sin.

Don't you think it is about time you ought to be satisfied with it?"

Don't forget that there is nothing so smart as knitted things for Spring next year, when one gets out of swim suits and beach clothes. A model in point is a two-piece frock of mossy wool in pale blue. It has a deep, frilled jabot and frilled cuffs, all knitted in a loose design.

It doesn't matter if you are North, South, East or home in the West, you can wear a white evening frock with equal success. A new model is in white faille taffeta with wide strips of white satin. The bodice has two revers in front, and the skirt is wide and flying.

Just the thing to wear with that old brown sport frock, or that new beige coat for early Spring. It is a set that consists of a belt and bag in leopard skin. The bag is large and flat and closes with a dark amber ornament. The belt has a buckle under which is knitted a dark brown calfskin thongs are slipped.

A fresh outlook will be that of your Winter wardrobe, if you add a few print frocks to it. Nice under your fur coat is a frock that grieve a hint of Spring. It is in black surah silk with a pattern of tiny circles in intricately entwined bright colors. It has white grosgrain loops at the throat line.

Puffs and wrist are of the new black nighties. A charming model is in black triple sheer with a black lace yoke that is cut away under the arms and ties in a bow at the back. There is a pointed lum of the lace, the slightly flaring form has a short train. The hem is edged with lace.

CLAUDETTE COLBERT in the role of Mrs. Pulitzer, the mother of Fannie Hurst's "Imitation of Life", displays a succession of beautiful evening gowns during the course of the film, which was produced by John M. Stahl and which is now on view at the Belle theatre. Among these is an afternoon frock of gray crepe, medium length with a skirt cut in straight lines, but with plenty of fulness beneath the kick pleats. The front has narrow revers which meet and turn back from the centre of the loops over closely-set buttons of crepe. The narrow turquoise collar is caught in front with a jewelled clasp, while the belt is outlined with pearls. A silver ribbon, below which are two rows of the buttons extending but a short distance below the waistline. With this Miss Colbert wears a soft shaped beret of the same silk crepe, and a platinum fox scarf.

An extremely effective evening gown of gun-metal taffeta lame with low cut sugar neck will bring gights of admiration to the wearer, as it is so very up-to-the-minute in its style and so utterly attractive for Miss Colbert's exquisite figure. It features a high accented waistline and straight panels below the tunic, the skirt is very full with a shirred panel in the back which ends in a train. The shoulder straps of the bodice cross in an interesting manner in front, while the back is low and draped.

A white chiffon evening gown, a great contrast to the ultra-sophisticated lame gown, is also worn by Miss Colbert. It has a very full overskirt which separates in front and flows toward the back in a train gracefully. It has a high neck, and its only adornment is a ruby and rhinestone clasp at the neckline. A low-cut satin slip is worn, and the girdle is wide, and pleated, of the white chiffon.

Another of Miss Colbert's charming costumes is a formal dinner dress of Nile green pebble satin crepe, cut in one piece, with cap sleeves and a low cut line buttons on the left side running from the round neckline to the waist.

Advice to the Lovelorn

By Beatrice Fairfax

HOW CAN SHE MAKE HIM REALIZE.

Dear Miss Fairfax:

I am desperately in love with a young man, and I believe he loves me, but does not realize it. How shall I proceed to make him aware of his affection for me?

Y. N. W.

I hope you're not going to try to rush this man into a declaration of affection for you. This has been tried by impatient young ladies with disastrous consequences. Better let the situation develop itself, and the young man will tell you in due time.

Some men are naturally slow and hate to be hurried.

A MARRIED MAN'S STORY

Dear Miss Fairfax:

My wife is a very sick woman and is under hospital care. We have two children, but I am deeply in love with a married woman who lives in another city. I am a respectable man and shamers her, and she does not enjoy his company. This lady has five children.

I do not earn much, and when I go out with my sweetheart it is not her husband's money. He is supposed to be my best friend. My sweetheart is not a poor friend, not like my wife or her company. She talks too much.

I have been going out with this other lady for ten months. Am I right or wrong? Can my sweetheart be trusted? I'm 30 years old.

A. B. C.

As you see, my dear man, I haven't published half of your letter, but with neighbors spying, an ill wife and your disloyalty to a man who should be your friend, the stage seems set in this affair for a thorough-going tragedy.

How can you ask if you're doing right? You're deceiving your best friend and your wife, and you're likely to wreck this married woman's home and your own.

Seven children uprooted, thrown into the discard! Do take yourself in hand before it's too late.

AT THE CAPITOL

"Wednesday's Child"
A Stirring Drama Vibrating With Human Interest

"Wednesday's Child," which comes to the Capitol Theatre Monday, is a modern domestic drama that leaves one thrilled and a bit awed.... It brings a lump in your throat, but no bitterness or feeling of depression. It's that kind of picture.

Adapted to the screen from the stage play in which twelve-year-old Frankie Thomas created such a furor on Broadway last season, the picture should prove equally successful ,to say the very least.

It is the story of little Bobby Phillips and sorrow that comes to him when his parents separate and each turns to a new love and new environment in which Bobby is relegated to a secondary place. Highly sensitive and accustomed to an abundance of parental affection and care, his little world tumbles in chaos about him.

When the court awards him to his mother for eight months of each year and to his father for only four, Bobby is heartbroken. For his mother has told him that she will immediately remarry, and the boy knows that he can never be happy with a stepfather who has gravely wronged his beloved dad.

Bobby endures the first eight-months period with his mother and her new husband, buoyed up by looking forward to the time when he can go with his father on a promised fishing trip. When that time arrives, however, the boy's joy is short-lived, for his father has now become engaged and he, too, is absorbed in his new love. Bobby becomes dangerously ill and his mother is summoned to his bedside. The physician in attendance tells the parents that Bobby must have a permanent home or become a chronic sufferer. The parents attempt to solve this problem, in what appears to them to be the easiest way by sending Bobby to a military boarding school.

From this point on the story moves swiftly toward an ending that comes as a surprise and which is slightly different from that of the stage play.

As Bobby Phillips, young Frankie Thomas gives a sterling performance. It is as fine and sensitive a piece of acting as this reviewer has ever seen. Indeed, while watching the picture one does not think of it as acting, but as reality,.so sincere and poignant is Frankie's masterful characterization. The other featured players are Edward Arnold as the father and Karen Morley as the mother, both of whom acquit themselves with credit.

AT THE BELLE

"Imitation of Life"
Colbert's Greatest Picture, Fannie Hurst Story

Seldom if ever has there been such a combination of elements which mean good entertainment as there are in "Imitation of Life" which Manager Forhan of the Belle considers "The Perfect Picture", enjoying a four-star rating from the widely read Liberty Magazine, it is announced as the feature attraction at the Belle Theatre today and Monday, matinee and evening.

Fannie Hurst's great novel, will interest millions of women. 'Black Street", proved that Fannie Hurst understands thoroughly what women like to see in a moving picture. John Stahl in that picture proved that he knew how to transpose to the screen every last ounce of interest which lay in a Fannie Hurst story. There is no director in the world who has this faculty in the same degree that John Stahl possesses it. And he directed "Imitation of Life" also.

Then there is the popularity of Claudette Colbert, who is an ideal heroine for Fannie Hurst's story. John Stahl searched for three months before he was satisfied even with Claudette Colbert. The minute her tests were seen, however, he knew that she was the "Bea" Pullman. A dozen leading men were discarded before John Stahl decided upon Warren William. These two are just now being acclaimed for their work in "Cleopatra". The cast supporting them is of real star proportions. A new baby star, this time a three year old one, named Baby Jane plays the tiny daughter and for her work was given a starring contract by the producers. Rochelle Hudson plays the baby grown up, with Alan Hale, Ned Sparks, Henry Armetta, Louise Beavers, Henry Kolker, Alma Tell, G. P. Huntley, Jr.; Wyndham Standing and Paul Porcasi.

"Imitation of Life" perfectly directed and played, is the sort of picture that one expects once in a season, and deals with domestic problems in a manner which is absorbingly interesting revealing a tremendous drama of a mother and daughter who are unknowing rivals in love. It is richly and beautifully mounted, and is in every sense one of the outstanding screen events of the month.

"Elephants Never Forget" an unusual and clever comedy cartune in full beautiful color, and the Belle Latest News Flashes of important events garnered the world over. The feature presentation with commence daily at 2:50; 7:20; and 9:30 p.m. Performances daily commence at 2:30; 7:00 and 9:10.

SCHOOL SKETCH UNDER DEBATE

Denial And Explanation By Principal is Satisfactory

"I am quite satisfied that the complaints against the premises at marked Trustee Robert D. Adams this afternoon in statement made the question he brought up before the Bellesville Board of Education tonight that a letter had been sent to a number of persons complaint about a scene put on by members of the society on Friday afternoon two weeks ago in open "lit" at which it is alleged a number of persons besides students were present.

The complaint was mainly that in a cabaret scene liquid supposed to be wine was used in drinking. That it was not unfermented," said Mr. Adams, noting that the complaint had been made that there seemed to be a tendency in there drinking scenes in the entertainment.

Last night at "inquiries" Mr. Adams brought up the matter of the trend of the times was changing the entertainment provided for the literary society of the collegiate institute. He said he had been consulted by "real citizens" had been used in this cabaret scene.

Mr. W. Logie, president of the society, explained to the press that these entertainments were put on to bring out talent in the students. He said the first time the entertainment was called a broadcast from Studio B.C.I. (Bellesville Collegiate Institute) he give about half a dozen who had no experience a chance to show what they can do. The last half was given over to dances and skits.

The skit I think referred to is. "Here come the British," which was the first scene of a number of students who put the plot together. In this scene five girls dressed as flappage in short dancing and at the table there was a scene in which drinking was done. The liquid in liquor was used.

Of course I do not think there was anything corrupting in the style of the costumes worn," Mr. Logie said. "We have seen the same thing in movies."

Principal P. C. MacLaurin declared today, "There was nothing in the nature of 'real stuff' used in the entertainment and I am not willing to complain of in the dance mentioned. There was absolutely no thought of that." Members of the Board of Education including Mr. R. D. Adams attended the dance and left satisfied with the explanation and denial given by Mr. MacLaurin. The principal stated in his denial that the sketches were supervised by two members of the staff. He was sure they would not allow anything of a nature which could be complained of to take place. The board allowed the matter to pass without discussion.

Students today took the matter good-naturedly.

CLERK DESCRIBES PARCEL TO COURT

Bell Boy and Taxicab Driver Danzinger Testify at Trial

R. Morin, night clerk at the Walker House, Toronto, who testified at the Vermilyea trial on Friday afternoon that he had seen the accused man at the hotel on the morning of October 5th., at one o'clock, was the first witness at the trial resumed by Col. Greer, K.C., counsel for Harold Vermilyea, to describe the parcel" carried by the man.

"It was a small parcel, wrapped in brown paper," stated witness.

"A parcel you could put under your arm and put in your pocket or in your coat pocket". He illustrated with pockets.

A small guest-size cake of soap, introduced by Crown Prosecutor Hubert Graham, was not permitted to be listed as an exhibit, but was identified by witness as the kind of soap used at the Walker House.

Harold Danzinger, employed in the business office of the Mail and Empire, called to place the time of the conversation he had with Morin, met with an objection by defence counsel, Mr. J. J. Robinette, which in that respect. A press report of October 8, was given the Crown Prosecutor's statement was then called to allow ten minute recess.

Bell Boy Identifies

Jack Ward, bell boy at the Walker House, Toronto, testified that on the night of October 4, last and the morning of October 5th. First he spoke to accused sitting in the prisoner's box.—"The man in the chocolate brown suit," he said, was registered in the hotel.

"He's the man I got the morning paper for," added witness. "Then I took him upstairs in the elevator", he said, adding that he could be sure from the elevator. Around ten to eleven o'clock witness was summoned the elevator ascended and saw the man with the baggage ready to depart. He carried one brown suit case and a bag, according to witness. Paper, magazines were intentatively identified by the nervous, young witness.

Told Him He Was Early

"I told him he was rather early. He told me he was ready to go".

Witness said the man wore a small parcel from the desk clerk but did not see him carry some luggage to the taxi.

Q.—Did the accused have anything on? A.—Not when he went out the last time, though I noticed when he came in that he carried the did.

Col. Greer took over the witness from Crown Prosecutor Urquhart.

Q.—Was anything said about low water when you took him up? A.—Not that I remember. Q.—Did he said he was going to sleep.

Witness said that was the date made by witness at the preliminary hearing. "You definitely then fixed the date from memory?" Col. Greer A.—Yes.

Q.—You told you since you were wrong? A.— Some friends of mine saw it in the paper.

"Then your whole story given then was wrong, according to the date?" A.—Yes.

Preliminary Evidence

Witness took refuge in a series of nods and nervous shifting in the witness chair when Col. Greer questions and answers previously given by him at the preliminary hearing. "Isn't that correct?" Col. Greer repeatedly, isn't so good?" pursued Col. Greer.

The witness nervously affirmed with a nod of the head.

"You were keen on the out," reminded Col. Greer.

"Not a keener memory," admitted Ward.

A small note book of guest records which he kept himself, was given witness and perused by him.

Witness admitted he put on duty. There was no entry dealing with any taxi on October 3rd, 4th or the morning of the 5th.

Mr. Urquhart—Why did you make a entry of 303 in the book? A.—Because I didn't go to the room.

Tells of Port Credit Trip

Dave Danzinger, taxi cab driver, also testified at the trial of Harold Toronto, pointed slowly to accused as the man he had driven to Port Credit and had been driven to Port Credit on Friday morning, October 5. Ward was identified as the youth who had carried a brown suit case and a small bag from the hotel to the car. The fare had worn black rimmed glasses and a grey fedora hat and a fawn coat. At Port Credit no accommodation could be obtained and witness was asked to drive to Hamilton.

Ward a previous witness, when recalled by Mr. Urquhart, identified Danzinger as a Walker House taxi driver.

Hamilton Hotel Clerk

Geo. Preeth, night clerk of the Commercial Hotel, Hamilton ,testified that accused was registered at the man who registered at the hotel on the morning of October 5th. Witness identified the man who brought him there. A leaf from the hotel register bearing the name "B. Carsons" was produced. The man, carrying a brown suit case and a smaller grip case had been given room 28.

Col. Greer, for the defence, in taking over the witness again referred to records of the preliminary hearing. A question: "You indicate the accused sitting over there as one who had been in the car this morning?

Q. Was he on you mean by that? Do you appreciate the difference between the two answers?

A. Yes.

Q. Which one is true?

A. The first one, I guess.

Q. Have you seen the man since then?

A. No.

"Have you any doubts now regarding the identity of the accused?" asked Justice Jeffrey.

"No your honor," replied.

Court adjourned until ten o'clock Saturday morning.

enger would be entitled to pass freely, if he did not pay an additional fare.

"He could have gone into all the coaches," Purtier questioning revealed, but the passenger could not be entered air.

Question by Col. Greer—"There was no effort in charge of any of those six cars? A.—No.

Q.—And he went into your car—the only one on? A.—Yes.

"How many of these passengers ever ask you their destination? A.—Very seldom they do.

Q.—Where is the Airport

Q.—And when this man left the car, you saw Constable Marshall, also as "Collins" and that he was headed for the Municipal Airport? A.—Yes, he was in charge of him in a hurry? A.—Yes.

The man accused were that night a greenish-brown suit of worsted material, and a brown felt hat. He was made a fine appearance in that respect. He also wore "glasses" Gold rim. Never.

The constable casually about the train during late—which were asked over and over by his passenger said he was going to Toronto.

The second mention of a plane was made at London when the passenger sent a telegram through the Western Union office to Mr. Thompson, Royal Home in Chicago. The message was dictated by the man. The boy at the office, Purtier said, saw the airport rather than hotel because "Air" was in the word. "Croix Illus" was given by the man. This was changed to stops at Croix five minutes.

A telegram for the passenger was received at the witness at South Bend. It was handed first to witness, but the boy on the north platform saw was addressed to a "Mr. Collins." "I knew him by that name when I heard him give it at the ticket office."

Glad to Get Rid of Him

After leaving South Bend the passenger went up front to the conductor. "When he came back and said he wanted to get off at Elkhart. He—How did you find out his name was Collins? What was the name on the ticket examined in this respect?

A.—I had no means of knowing which passenger was which.

Witness started to tell of what a fine fellow Marshall was, but was cut short by defence counsel.

Col. Greer—At no time during the trip did you know who "Collins" was? A.—No.

Q.—And when he disembarked you didn't ask the passenger what his name was? A.—No.

"Suspect," Col. Greer continued, "that you didn't know his name when Constable Marshall you saw him, under arrest?

A.—No.

Chief Locke Testifies

Jas. Locke, chief of police of the Bellesville police force, was well witness knew the accused as having resided in Ontario, California, Mr. Urquhart with him was in the night of October 6, 1934.

Q.—Accused in his residence?

A.—He was sitting at the telephone.

Q.—What was he doing?

A.—Talking over the phone.

Q.—Was anything to said?

A.—Just as I walked in I heard the words "Collins" mentioned.

Q.—Then what?

A.—I told him I wanted him to come down to my office, that I wanted to question him.

Defence counsel at this point requested His Lordship to excuse the Jury until a question of admissibility of the objection of defence centered upon the conversation in question. The Jury was then dismissed with the man identified as accused. The Jury filed out. Col. Greer continued his under advisement by Justice Jeffrey with counsel room the conference continued in chambers.

With the return of Justice Jeffrey, court was then adjourned until 2.30 p.m.

THURLOW CONSERVATIVES

Introduced by Mr. Tummon as one who had come to the Dominion House in 1900 as a member from the west and had since been "recognized as one of the clearest thinkers and savers in the House of Commons", Mr. Bennett made his first time in oratory. In thanking Mr. Tummon for the introduction he remarked, "I have always judged the people of an electorate by the kind of man they put in the House of Commons. My opinion of this riding had been very small until before I had first visited it. In Mr. Tummon you have the ideal representative."

Greatest Man in West.

Rather than deal with political topics, pointed out Mr. Bennett, he would rather speak of "one of the greatest men who had come out of the west—the late W. R. Bennett". "How has he fared during the past year or so?" he asked.

Before the Hawke prorogued, it was felt that in some sections the Conservative party was better off. In the west it was even felt that a Conservative could not be elected. The good sanity of them, could hardly conceal the assurance they felt that they would emerge victorious. We knew the government was being blamed for this and that done and also for what it had done. And it was found, last that the west, more than any, had begun to see things which were small consolation for having the assurance of parliament we fell the old policies and that only it would be safe to introduce the Natural Products Marketing Act and the Radio Broadcasting Act. These were introduced without fanfare or bestowing of thanks; people were about their business unaware of the fact that a new era had arrived. But that is the manner in which your prime minister has always carried on."

"The sole, when they were introduced, were hailed with delight by the people because of the lack of rates and fuss, and when we as representatives, went back to the people of the riding they were loathe to believe that anything at all had been done. Then we explained the acts to them. They got in a more receptive mood."

Liberals On Run.

The speaker turned to the radio broadcasts carried out by Prime Minister Bennett, and spoke in words to all quarters of the nation. "Overnight the political and economic of the country changed. It was realized that Mr. Bennett would not stop there, but would go on further. Now they (Liberals) realize the stock of the Conservative party has gone up day after day. Every hour of the day "they" are on the defensive in the House. I have been told even by good Liberals that they were on the run."

The Natural Products Act and the Bank of Canada Act are but a step ahead of other important policies which will result, said the speaker, in direct measureable benefit to the country. Yet to be introduced is the Unemployment Insurance Act and an act respecting companies. The speaker drew an illustration of the manner in which the latter act would throttle speculative schemes harmful to legitimate business and trade.

"Let us say we have a big packing plant in this country, one that had always stood for plain, good, square dealing with the people, and regular dividends on the stock. A bunch of promoters conceive the idea of capitalizing on this good name and business. They approach the owner and offer to buy; they dangle a tempting money bait before his eyes. The owner finally accepts the sum of $6,000,000 for the plant. Immediately they acquire it; they take those $6,000,000 assets and capitalize them at $12,000,000 and sell stock to the tune of $12,000,000 at a very low figure. The promoters get two other fine millions. That is one kind of "racket" the prime minister is determined to end."

Mr. Beynon shifted to some of the questions now being asked by the opposition regarding Mr. Bennett and his reform program.

Not Sudden Decision.

"Was he sincere about these radio broadcasts?" Yes, he just brought in as a gesture, a last-before-the-election-effort? No, not a sudden death-bed conversion," denied the speaker. "I have the evidence to prove that."

Refer to a copy of Hansard, unrevised, page 4065, where you will find that on June 7, 1934, Mr. Bennett spoke as follows: "There are those who believe that the only way in which progress can be made is to watch the procession pass by, but there are also those who believe that changed times and changed conditions must be met with new policies. Particularly, the Conservative party belongs to the latter class".

Again Mr. Beynon referred to page 4066 of the same copy: "Certainly business must be interfered with and regulated, there must be interference by the state on behalf of those who, unless they can speak collectively, cannot care for themselves," Mr. Bennett is quoted.

In 1911-12 Hansard, relates I. Mr. Bennett is again quoted: "It would of course be more commonplace to say that in a country like this, with a population of something like seven millions, and where over one-half of our people are engaged in agricultural pursuits, it is absolutely essential to give consideration to every measure that can be devised to advance those interests."

"I just give you these small paragraphs so that you may deal with any such made that Mr. Bennett's radio talks were anything else except carefully thought out and well arranged policies," pointed out Mr. Beynon.

No Mystery to Act

There is no mystery attached to the Natural Products Act. It was explained. The Act is simply designed to enable the farmer to market his produce with the greatest possible ease between consumer and farmer, and to take off the market the unfortunate surplus so as not to demoralize the domestic market."

The farmers themselves set up the Boards and plans and except, whom they hire to do the routine work they carry on alone. Yet the Liberals, all but one, voted against it.

"If a group in a certain section does not join, they can be compelled to—the Liberals purportedly objected to this feature. Some say it will ruin it we ought to be able to sell it, but if one man wants to spoil conditions for one hundred it is not feasible. That the majority should rule is the whole root of democracy. The same system as is contained in this Act is carried out in commercial life every day." To carry on this Act properly, however, the farmer must have assistance from the government. The farmer is by very nature of his work is highly individualistic and is scattered over a very wide territory; this is also the only producer of importance, who has no selling agency," the speaker reminded.

The Bank of Canada Act is equally simple, it was declared. It was designed solely for the purpose of preventing in some measure, upheavals of business suffered by a boom in business and lean years afterwards. No panacea, mind is to remedy this condition, it was granted, but the Act could prevent the unwarranted expansion of currency and credit in setting up a central bank, where regulation could be effected by raising or lowering interest rate as conditions depended. In slack periods interest could be reduced and credit would be easier. "A public bank would not fill this position," firmly emphasized the speaker. He drew a contrast.

"Suppose a public government owned the banks were set up, and suppose a boom in business happened with an election just in the offing. Would any conscientious a Minister of Finance could be, and no matter what party was in power, too much pressure could be brought to bear at anytime that boom until after the election had been carried out. Neither party would want to do it and, when times were not prosperous. It would become easy to make a short period of prosperity in this manner. The Liberals can say we must or should have a little more faith in the integrity of our public men, that we should trust them, but no matter how honest they were there is the force of mass psychology, that no officer could withstand."

Political Appointments Out

Appointments to positions on this publicly owned bank, again with either party in power, would probably be made with the following thoughts in mind; politics; race; religion; occupation; geography of the country, claimed the speaker. "And then for the last question, some one might say foolishly as if the man had enough ability and qualifications to fill the job. But you can be sure, if the bank were publicly owned, that would be the last question that would be thought of", he added.

Facing his audience, a large part of which were younger people, Mr. Beynon paid a stirring tribute to the glorious opportunities of youth. "I wonder if it wouldn't be a splendid thing sometimes to stand at the other end of the road and look back?" he commended. "Youth faces the sun, with no thought of the dusk; the future holds nothing but hope and joy—the present is merely keeping us from the feast. But when the evening starts to close and shadows fall across the path, then you hoard the shreds of life and with a miser's care you save the last few days. That's the picture from the other end of the road. You have a priceless gift when you have all youth before you, for once day is gone you'll give your last dollar to get back one of those priceless hours you might have squandered when too young to realize," concluded Mr. Beynon.

The Occasion

The occasion last evening was the regular meeting of the Thurlow Conservative Club in Canniffon and was opened by Mr. Fred Mitchell, newly elected president. Following the regular business of the evening and the reading of minutes and communications by Miss Reynolds, secretary-treasurer, Mr. Tummon M.P.; Mr. Beynon, M.P., Mr. S. Hollis, ex-Warden; ex-Mayor Doc. A. Reid, Belleville; Dr. J. A. Thompson, Tweed, and vice-president of the Association of the South Hastings Riding; Jack Sargent, president of the Sidney Young Mens' Canada Club, E. W. Jones, president of the Tweed Conservative and Mr. C. E. Way, past president of the Tweed Conservative Association, were called to the platform.

G. A. Reid Heard

Ex-Mayor Doc. A. Reid who was called upon after the guest speaker was a few remarks was brief. He expressed his appreciation on behalf of the audience for the splendid address by Mr. Beynon, and voiced his thanks to Mr. Tummon for making the visit possible. He declared himself unalterably opposite to the recent disclosures of men in this district from government positions and cited instances, wherein he claimed, actual hardship had followed. "At the present time, there are about four jobs left to look over. Since the election some twenty-two Conservatives have been fired," he added.

The action of Premier Hepburn in cancelling the customary reception in the speaker's chambers following the opening of Ontario legislature was characterized as disrespect to the Lieutenant-Governor and should be met with censure by all right-thinking Liberals as well as Conservatives. Not only the Conservatives, but the Liberals also of this province are ashamed of Hepburn and his actions, and the ones, who should be most ashamed are the Tories, who turned from their party at the last election and made it possible to elect him. But, thank goodness, we don't have to call him our leader—the Liberals are forced to accept him as such."

Succinctly Mr. Reid went over the actions of the Hepburn Cabinet and charged a right-about-face attitude on the part of some Ministers since their appointments to office. "There is only one way to meet this situation, that is to get unity and whole-hearted co-operation on the part of everyone and go out and lick them at this coming election."

Ex-Warden Sam Hollins was of the opinion that a convention should be immediately called and a choice made of candidate. "We want to get the man this year, who will pull the most votes, and one who will go on to win. This will be one of the most important elections in the history of this country," he warned. R. B. Bennett was referred to by the speaker as a man, who had never been needed so badly as at the present time. A wish was expressed by Mr. Hollins, that more meetings of the nature of the Canniffon one could be held in the northern sections of the county.

Dr. J. A. Thompson declared that "When I hear this man Hepburn's name mentioned it stirs up the fight in me.

"I feel like the old convert did who if she had another feather in her wings, she was so full of hope and faith, that she would be able to fly away to glory. Then someone hollered from the aisles to "Hallelujah" one in and let her go. And the electors of this country at the next election will stick a feather in the wing of Hepburn, but it won't be for him to fly away to glory, but to defeat," promised the vigorous doctor, amid applause.

Organization On

Jack Sargent, President of the Sidney Young Canada Club, gave a brief resume of the work of the Club in his district and declared that organization was still very apparent.

Mr. E. W. Jones, Tweed, explained that the only part of the evening he didn't like was when he was called upon to get up and speak.

Mr. C. E. Way, Tweed, declared his sentiments to be entirely in accord with those of ex-Mayor Reid. "If every province of Canada had a thorn in its side like we have in Ontario, then there would be no doubt of the outcome of the approaching election," he said.

Mr. Bruce Martin, Past President of the Thurlow Club, introduced several letters purported to have been received from Queen's Park by Mr. G. E. Ketcheson, former ear Konnac larger, explaining why the position had been declared vacant. One had been dated August 26th.

Throughout the evening the Point Anne quartette gave a continuous programme of excellent music and assisted several vocalists in their well received presentations.

NAPANEE JRS. AND SENIORS ARE DEFEATED

Deacons Win 21-20 And "Y" Team by 32-19

GAMES ROUGH

Many Personal Fouls Called in Junior Game

Moving one more step towards their objective, the championship of their respective groups in the E. O. B. A., both Belleville basketball teams returned home victorious from Napanee last night. The Deacon A. C. kids staged a hectic last minute rally to defeat the Napanee Juniors 21 to 20 while the local "Y" intermediates led the Napanee "Grads" from the barrier to the wire to win by the score of 32 to 19.

Minus the services of three regular players the group-leading Deacon A. C. juniors battled through the second game of the night but eventually rise to heights in the last minute of play to sneak the fast baskets and win by the score of 21 to 20. The game was full of roughness and many personal fouls were called by Referee Faulkner. Had the Deacon shooting been more accurate the local lads could have easily won the game by tossing final shots into the cage, but poor shooting mitigated their efforts of taking an early-game lead. The victory was their sixth consecutive of the season in as many games played.

Moving one more notch towards the group championship, the Belleville Y.M.C.A. juniors downed the Napanee "Grads" by the score of 32 to 19 to maintain their possession of second place in the intermediate group of the E.O.B.A. The Morden-coached aggregation took an early-game lead, never to relinquish their advantage. They repulsed the homesters at the critical moments and added to their own score with repeated rapidity. The score stood 17 to 9 in favor of Belleville at the half time whistle.

Faulkner and Wickerson led the Belleville scorers with six points each as every member of the "Y" team entered into the ultimate scoring. Smith, Burley and MacLean each counted four points, as White counted three and Bowen, Wickerson and Calder one. Oliver led the home team scorers with seven points, Callaghan bagged six as Webster and Howell, who played good basketball for Napanee, Donald and Hume gave good accounts of their endeavors also.

HAMILTON AGAIN

The team that has dominated the newspaper standings and led the Senior "A" Ontario Hockey Association race all this season—Hamilton Tigers—go on winning games with monotonous regularity. No other team in the group, it seems, is capable of checking their stampede.

Before 7,200 Oakville-minded fans in Toronto last night, a big, burly yellow and black Tiger machine smashed through the Villagers' armor for a 6-1 runaway. The game was a repetition of the tilt in Hamilton last Tuesday when the Bengals ran rampant and whitewashed Villans 11-0.

BABE BEATS POREDA.

San Francisco, Feb. 16 (AP) — Growing weak at the time but nearly serious in other moments as he went through the complete repertoire of fighting moods, Max Baer gave Stanley Poreda a four-round walloping here last night in a bout featuring a benefit programme for Mrs. Elsie Camilli, widow of Frankie Campbell, who died here in 1930 following a fight with Baer. She attended the fight and will get about $10,000.

Baer weighed 213 pounds and Poreda was four pounds heavier.

OTTAWANS DOMINATE EASTERN SKI MEET

Though provided with keen competition by a field of 38 contestants, Ottawa skiers dominated the winter's list events of the eastern Canada ski championship meet, held in the Capital City on Saturday, Feb. 9. Billy Burke (top inset) of the St. Patrick's College Outing Club, Ottawa, took first place with jumps of 131 and 135 feet, displacing Jack Landry, Ottawa Ski Club, defending champion (lower inset) was runner-up. CURRENT SPORT

(Day By Day)

Just when an artificial ice plant would prove a boon to local hockey circles, all games locally have to be postponed on account of soft ice following continuously mild weather. It was shortly before noon yesterday that the Bay-Belleville-Peterboro intermediate game was postponed indefinitely. If the present mild weather continues an artificial ice plant would surely come in handy in the Belleville arena, as all junior and intermediate O.H.A. play-off games would come to town. As the situation now stands, however, all pucksters in the "big six" and also the loop embracing Tweed and Napanee juniors will have to mark time for a while in hopes that colder weather is the offing. Incidentally it is understood that an old Indian weather prophet states that the next eleven winters will all be mild (woe be to the coal man) 'Tis too bad that last night's intermediate game was postponed simply because the locals were in a stride and had every advantage. As the situation now stands, the postponement was merely "a break" for the Petes.

Local city hockey league managers are beginning to worry and fret over the possibilities of their finals being eliminated on account of the lack of ice facilities at the arena. Three weeks now Grills, Alemite, Trenton and the S.S.A.C. kids have marked time, waiting for the "big blow-off" when the semi-finals in the city league commence. Incidentally President Bolton announced recently that all games played in the city league play-downs would be played under O.H.A. rules, instead of the accepted off-side rule adopted by the Can-American loop. This system of play seemed to be enjoyed thoroughly by the players and fans of the city league, but owing to the fact that many of the players in the loop are members of O.H.A. squads it was deemed advisable to revert back to the old rules. Incidentally the N.H.L. moguls are still watching, with eager eyes, the results of the experiment by the Can-American loop relating to this new off-side rule. There's no doubt but what the game is speeded up and the absence of bell ringing is paramountly demonstrated.

Officials of the United States Amateur Athletic Union yesterday suspended Stella Walsh, internationally famous girl sprint star, from amateur competition for 30 days. The action was taken as a penalty for her violation of an A.A.U. rule forbidding an amateur to participate on the same program with pro athletes.

Chief Constable Alex Kidd received a newspaper from St. Petersburg, Fla., incorporated in which was the account of the fatal activities of three local citizens in the sun on the sand beaches of sunny California. The three men referred to are Messrs. J. S. McKeown, W. H. Patterson and S. R. Burrows. The article informs the reader that the three Belleville, Ont. sportsmen landed a nice catch of deep sea fish recently including a large flounder. The catch was reported to be in the neighborhood of some 9 beauties. Accompanying the letter is a snap shot of Walter Patterson snapped in the action of feeding three large pelicans. Yes, their beaks look sufficiently large enough to fulfill the old pelican adage).

With hockey activities at a standstill local sport fans can console themselves to a marked degree by dropping up to the collegiate gymnasium this evening to witness the Camp Borden-Belleville "Y" basketball game. The "Flyers" are reputed to be one of the fastest squads of intermediate hoopsters in the province, while the local quintette have a fairly good reputation and are ably in a pretty position in their own group standing. Incidentally it is understood that the local intermediate E.O.B.A. intermediate loop is about one of the fastest in that series in the entire province.

Early this week J. E. Shortt, the president of the Belleville Anglers' Association, called a special meeting of the Ontario Federation of Anglers that was held in Hamilton. "Joe" officially represented the local body and was further honored by being placed on the executive of the provincial body. The Ontario Federation of Anglers, assisted by the smaller district organizations for the same purpose, is doing much towards the preservation and restocking of game fish in Ontario waters. The local organization is only in its infancy, but is growing rapidly, not only in numbers, but in prestige.

The track and field stadium for the 1936 Olympic games at Berlin will seat 100,000. Ten thousand can be accommodated inside the swimming stadium.

Belleville cagers moved closer to the first division group of the league last night by trimming the Napanee hoopsters in a dual tilt right in Ernie Gibbard's town hall, evening the consoling local fans somewhat for the defeat handed the local junior pucksters earlier in the week. The Deacon A. C. kids were forced to come from behind to beat the Napanee "Grads" 21 to 20 in a last minute finish, but the Deacons were minus the services of three regular players. Twas the roughest game of the current season, the players stated today. Continuing in their winning stride Ralph Morden's intermediate "Y" hoopsters romped home to a 32 to 19 victory over the Napanee crew. This elevates the local "Y" intermediates into sole possession of second position in the E.O.B.A. The "Y" aggregation take on the fast Camp Borden "Flyers" in an exhibition game at the collegiate tonight, by the way.

'Y' CAGERS IN BUSY WEEKEND

Play Three Games Inside of Four Days in This City

The "Y" intermediates are scheduled for a busy week-end program when they will play three games inside of four days. Commencing last night they journeyed to Napanee for a league game against the intermediates of that town. This evening they will be at home to the Camp Borden Air Force Intermediates while on Monday they meet the R.M.C. Cadets in what will probably be one of the hardest games of their schedule.

When they meet the Air Force from Camp Borden the "Y" players will need to be right up to form as the Flyers are reputed to have a strong team. For the past three years they have won their group honors and proceeded on into the provincial play-downs. The team has on its line-up a former local player in the person of Tommy Byrne, who by the way was responsible for the arranging of Saturday's game. Monday evening is bound to result in plenty of action when both the Deacons and the "Y" intermediates go into play against the junior and intermediate cadets from R.M.C. The "Y" intermediates were very fortunate to win their opening game from the Military College boys and with Stevens back in the line-up the last of the series will be made much harder. If the "Y" quint can win a second game from the cadets this week it will help to even the score as last year the cadets administered a double trouncing to the Campbell street aggregation.

Thrill Riding With Campbell In Stock Sedan

Daytona Beach, Fla., Feb. 16 (AP) — There isn't room in old lady Bluebird, the mechanical mastodon, for passengers, which probably is just as well for all concerned, but you can ride the sands of Daytona with Sir Malcolm Campbell fast enough to get a faint pink picture of the crimson glow of a real record run.

He's driving his own passenger car, a big sedan, and he wheels you down onto the 11½ mile beach, a golden track in the sunlight stretching straight along the sea as far as the eye can reach. The tide is out and the ocean is calm and blue on one side. The sand dunes white, rolling and treacherous on the other.

He drives to a point where, within the next few days, he hopes to launch the huge blue charger against the record of 272.108 miles an hour he set here two years ago.

Straight ahead, three quarters of a mile away, an amusement pier arches across the course. He starts the car, aims for an opening just 42 feet wide. It doesn't look big enough from here to slide an arrow through.

"That's the first target," said Sir Malcolm. "By the time I reach it I'm in second gear and hope to be doing about 80."

You whistle through the opening, wide enough, but no place for a nervous man with a wheel in his hand and a flying car under her.

Sir Malcolm tells officials here not to bother widening it.

"One gets used to racing to putting a car where it belongs," he smiles.

As the car shoots out from under the pier, nearing the end of the first mile of the course, it begins its curves. Sir Malcolm must take almost a half mile to straighten to settle straight away on the long run. It's the first major problem of the test—but he doesn't consider it of great importance. He's never had trouble there.

Accelerate Slowly.

"Here we must be careful not to accelerate too fast," he says, "or the tires will spin and tear the car badly off. We should be up to about 175 by the end of the second mile."

When did he touch the floor board of the 2,500 horsepower monster?

"By the end of the second mile," he replies, "and then the throttle stays wide open all the way if one wants to travel fast."

The passenger car is beginning to feel as though some of Bluebird's blood run in its veins. One can feel smoothly over the cement-like floor but taking a few little bumps at 175 Sir Malcolm makes his face count.

"Those are magnified intensely," he says, "in a record car."

You're in the fourth mile. The Bluebird begins to sing a bit.

"About here," says Sir Malcolm, "Bluebird aligned out of gear in a 1931 test run. I had trouble under control nicely."

Through the fifth mile, the one before the "measured mile" where the records are made, he noses his head toward the left and right.

You sit up in the soft sand there in 1928," he said. "It was touch and go getting out of the machine thrown out of the car. Bill Strum was standing there and he said I looked like a ghost out of the beyond." He chuckled.

The car sailed through the measured mile. The needle of the sedan speedometer quivered at 281. Then it slowed down, turned, and came back.

"You see?" he said, "it's not so very exciting, is it?"

RANGERS PLAY IN TORONTO

Move Over to Detroit For Game There on Sunday

Most National Hockey League teams would be far from delighted at meeting Conn Smythe's Leafs and Detroit Red Wings on successive nights but the New York Rangers a hard week-end of work includes the opportunity of calling over leadership of the American race and licking it.

The team Lester Patrick has piloted from the cellar to the top in the last three weeks meet Conny Smythe's Leafs in Toronto tonight and then move to Detroit for a clash with the Wings on the 'morrow as they. The Detroiters clash with Chicago Black Hawks tonight and travel back to Chicago for a tussle with Black Hawks Sunday. Montreal Canadiens have a chance to lengthen their three-point lead over Americans when they meet Joe Simpson's team in New York tonight.

Two wins for Rangers would entrench their sizzling over first place Chicago, with whom they are tied, can pack up only two points by beating Boston.

MONARCH Of Speed

Sir Malcolm Campbell was knighted by the King of England for his contribution to the cause of mechanical locomotion. His present day governmental doesn't take the attitude of people who say, "What's the good of all this speed, anyway?" The government in the final Campbell has given much to science, and ranks as England's No. 1 salesman, demonstrating to the world that British workmanship and British workmanship can match the best. Anyone who thinks Sir Malcolm is a madcap should meet him as I have done on several occasions. He is a deep-thinking serious-minded individual for all his nonchalance when racing at a diner with death perched upon his shoulders.

Sir Malcolm is the world's land speed king. He holds up a mark of 272.108 miles per hour at Daytona Beach, Fla. Now he comes along with the statement that he will make five miles per minute or better. But will he do it?

His "Bluebird" is 10 years old; it's a Rolls-Royce, British made, developing 2,500 horsepower, and rev's up to 3,600 per minute. The speed limit is 3,600 R.P.M. Naturally they say it can't be done, and remember, only five drivers men have driven a car 200 miles per hour, and all five are dead. Campbell isn't given to bragging, and personally I expect to see him garner further laurels for England this month.

Winnipeg Ranks Bowlers Who Can Roll With Best

Gavin Urquhart

Joe Gault

By CLEM SHIELDS
Central Press Canadian Correspondent

Winnipeg, Feb. 16.—The applicability of the old philosopher's learning to the effect that "Mighty Oaks From Acorns Grow" was never better exemplified in the sports world than in the astounding growth of the five-pin bowling game in Canada.

It is a long cry to the day in 1905 when T. F. "Tommy" Ryan of Toronto was instrumental in securing from the government a charter to operate a bowling club—from which the five-pin game came into being in Canada. That day, thirty years ago, was the acorn and the game as it is played in Canada today is the mighty oak.

From a few scattered clubs and unattached teams which sprang up all over the Dominion the game caught the public imagination, and like a prairie fire it swept into every city and larger-sized town throughout the Dominion until today it is undoubtedly the greatest of winter indoor pastimes which caters to both sexes in actual competition.

Winnipeg, Regina, Saskatoon, Edmonton, Moose Jaw and Vancouver alleys are today beehives of activity.

Winnipeg particularly invites Toronto to glance over a few records which have been compiled in the past year. Perhaps Winnipeg single out Toronto because of the feeling of dissatisfaction which greets publications issued from Toronto which mention so frequently "The Canadian Bowling Association." Winnipeg feels, rightly or wrongly, that Toronto is taking in more territory than it should in setting up a Canadian association which is not representative of the Dominion as a whole.

Winnipeg is confident that it possesses trundlers who can hold their own with the best.

Molly McLennan

Has Fine Bowlers

The Manitoba capital puts forward such pin-spillers as Gavin Urquhart, who boasts an average of 236 in the City Senior League of 36s, and Ray Gibson, of the same league, who has a mark of 265. Furthermore, Winnipeg has trundlers among the fair sex who can hold their own with nine men out of ten. Molly McLennan has been rolling at a 236 clip for more than three years while Mrs. Sam Wasson has chalked up the fine average of 232.

Much of the credit for the success which has attended five-pin bowling in Winnipeg and points west belongs to Joe Gault, president of the Senior League and executive officer of the city association. For several years Mr. Gault has given of his time and executive ability as his share in fostering the game, and he is one of the leaders in a movement to secure recognition from the eastern officials of the so-called Canadian body.

LOVE SCHOOL

By MARYSE RUTLEDGE

"This is horrible!" Faith found her voice at last. She looked around at the others, appealing to them. They were staring from her to Agnes. They believed, what Agnes was saying.

Slowly Grace Van White, "Come on, Faith, let's go," he said briefly. "She'll never get over it back."

"No—No—I didn't mean it—" Agnes clutched him as he started to move, dragging her a few paces. "No—no—no—" Her voice rose to a shriek. "If you leave me I'll kill myself."

"Go ahead," Roger said.

Agnes let go of him suddenly. "That's what you'd like, isn't it? she screamed at Faith. "You'd like to get rid of me so that you can steal all I've got."

"You don't know what you're saying," Faith's nerves had snapped. "You're a wicked girl. I'm sick of all this and of you. I feel as if I'd never be clean again after for night—"

"Do you hear her. I'm a wicked girl," Agnes cried in a frenzy. "Oh my God, what a mess I've made of my life!" she plunged past them to the window.

She was savvy enough to do her part here. Faith thought, and after her hysterical outburst stretched out, catching at the flying chiffon scarves.

Agnes poised on the window sill as for a dive, throwing one last scream. She whirled distorted face within an inch of Faith's.

The pink chiffon sleeve tore as frantically, Faith struggled with her. Then suddenly Agnes' body went limp and crumpled behind her.

Faith reached the lower ball as Faith rushed for the street. "Wait," he gasped. He was waxen yellow and shaking.

Above and around them in the deserted flat floated a dreadful silence as if the house were empty.

"She's probably dying," Faith said tonelessly, and hurried past him, hardly conscious that he followed.

Agnes Ann was dead. A still brunette lying in pink chiffon that seemed to be trying to smear away on the pavement of Greenwich Avenue. And as Faith gazed about spilled seconds, so did a crowd collect, blurred black and white under the street lamps.

Coppey cards the only flying spot on the gray scene. Faith knelt, actually calling the girl who would never answer more. Never.

Someone bending over Faith, raised her almost forcibly to her feet. "Get out," he said, through a jostling, elbowing throng. "Hold on to your-self," it was Roger's voice.

It didn't seem so matter whose voice it was. Faith moved as in a trance, doubt under the shock. The sense of nightmare slowed her down so that she seemed incapable of thinking for herself.

"Taxi—a taxi, please—the lady feels faint—but a moment please—" Roger's shoulders pushed a way for them. He drew her clear of the thickening circle, urging her along into shadows beyond the brownstone house, with its tragic window.

"We can't do any good, there," he whispered to Faith. His hand was on her arm, steering her around the corner of 9th street. "It's all right now—it's all right—" he kept on talking, as to a frightened child.

Faith hung back, shivering at the harsh clang of an ambulance rips-ping through all other sounds. Suppose she isn't——Suppose she's alive——

"Not a chance," Roger's tone was definite.

If that queer haze would only clear from her brain. That feeling of numbness pass! The street where they were now seemed like another city far away, parading its life with normal indifference. Hard to realize that on the next block——

"Better now?" Roger sounded very kind.

Decent of him to give her a moment to steady herself. People were not really as rotten as you thought them sometimes. Even poor Agnes. A sob strangled in Faith's throat. What was it that girl Shirlyn had said—"You didn't push her, did you?" Faith began to tremble again.

Roger led her, unresisting up to the curb. A cruising open cab slid to a stop. He opened the door, put Faith in the taxi beside Roger. The traffic light had turned to green. The taxi moved forward in whisper to the taxi-driver.

"Where are you going?" Faith sat up straighter, brushing her fore-head with her hand.

"Just for a little drive in the air," Roger reassured her, closing the door. He spoke through the window and the driver. "Wherever you want to, we'll turn back. Tell 'em—" added slowly—"you decide you want to go on."

The taxi swung into Fifth Avenue.

"Of course we've got to go back," Faith said dazedly. The air was reviving her. If only she could drive on and on, away from —what lay back there.

"Suit yourself," Roger answered, in such a tone that she turned to look at him. It was a small thing to notice, but it struck her with suddenly aroused suspicion that he was wearing his hat. He must have snatched it from the hall rack when the apartments before he ran after her. He had never intended to go back, then!

As if he followed the direction of her thought, he slid a hand in his pocket and pulled out her black felt, unwrinkled it, and handed it to her.

"Just in case——" he said.

Mechanically, Faith smoothed it into shape. "Case—what?" Dis-trust of him edged her voice. If he hadn't baited Agnes, she would be alive now! And for a man who should be crushed with remorse, he seemed incredibly composed.

He leaned forward and tapped her on the knee. "I'm your friend," he said abruptly. "Just you're going to need one."

The light of passing cars swam before her troubled eyes. "What do you mean?"

Roger bent nearer. "Do you want to get mixed up with the police?"

"I don't understand—" but Faith seemed to hear again that shrill police whistle as she knelt beside Agnes. Of course, they would be there now—questioning.

Roger's narrow, dark eyes slid away from hers. "Ever had anything to do with the police?"

"Of course not. But it was if something cold and hard had suddenly clamped itself about her heart.

"Hey there," Roger called to the speeding taxi-driver, "think you've got an appointment? Slow down.

Again Faith shivered. What could the police do to her? Why, she had tried to stop Agnes. They were at the window together.

Roger moistened his red lips, sliding lower in the seat. Look at it this way," he said. "We'd all been drinking pretty hard——"

"I didn't touch a thing," Faith interrupted indignantly.

"The others did, plenty, anyway," Roger went on. "They're not going to be very clear in their statements. Remember that. And it looks bad. A regular Greenwich Village drinking party—that's what it looks like. Now take it from the beginning. Agnes finds me kissing you, and even if she didn't blow up then, she will know she was dynamite. That'll come out——"

"Oh!" Faith shrank back in a corner of the seat.

"All right. We quarrel. She tells you a few things. And I tell her a few things. Then you get mad. Not that I blame you. But Agnes flies clean off her nut and makes for the window—with you after her. Begin to get it?"

"Oh," Faith moaned. "They couldn't think——?" Her mind was reeling.

"You heard Shirlyn," Roger returned, sliping up the pleat of his trousers. "They were all too cock-eyed to know exactly what happened. I don't know myself," he went on slowly, "whether it was suicide—or an accident. I can swear you were trying to save her. But they'll hold you all the same for questioning. And before they let you go, every scandal sheet in town will be shoving you up as the Riley girl who drove her best friend to a death plunge. And I'm the pigeon," he said savagely. "Oh, I'll get mine, don't worry. But I'm fading out of the picture."

It all sounded horribly convincing. "What shall I do—what shall I do?" Faith wailed. "They'll get my name anyway. Everything I own is in those two rooms." Disgrace. Her job—that meant so much to her—lost by the hideous publicity. And Hunter would read about her.

"Don't you understand yet, kid?" Roger slid closer. "You're fading out with me until the thing blows over."

"With you?" Faith stared at him with widened eyes. She didn't try to hide her loathing. How could she ever have gotten into this tawdry mix-up with him? Have trusted him even for a second?

Roger moved uneasily. "You need not look at me like that," he objected. "You ought to be grateful."

"Grateful!" Faith whipped back. "Where are you taking me?" she demanded.

Roger looked at her sullenly. "To the apartment of a friend, where nosey policemen won't find us."

"And to Hades with you," said in a low, tight voice, "that Agnes died for a creature like you! I shouldn't even wonder—you went on blowing," if the police wouldn't find other reasons to detain you. And now you've got me into it. People must have seen us leave together. What a fool I've been—"

It was late— after the theatre hour. They passed the Cathedral at 51st Street. Faith peered anxiously up the almost deserted avenue. Suddenly the taxi swerved west-ward.

If he waited until they were out of the central thoroughfare, it might be too late. "I'm getting out here," he said firmly.

"Are you crazy?" Roger snapped. "You're safe with me, I tell you."

Faith's contempt for him was now too low, chilling her face and voice, stinging and burning. "I'll you don't let me out, I'll tell the next police man I see," she warned police station. That's how safe I am with you."

Roger's grasp seemed to slink away under his heavy ide. "That's better," he said. "I understand." his hands twitched as he fumbled for a cigarette and lighter.

In answer, Faith half rose, crawled around one side of the closed front window.

"Sit down, you little fool," Roger mumbled, "and don't be so worked-up."

"Stop at the next corner," she ordered. "I'll get out." She felt sick. She sank back in her seat. "If I weren't such a coward myself, I'd make you go to the police," she said. "As it is, I don't know what I'm going to do, but whatever it is, it won't be with you."

He laughed, frightened him so by her there, that he was relieved to be rid of her. "Have it your own way," he added. But they'd said a few things I'm not forgetting. A sneering contempt crept into his voice as he slid to a stop and the driver turned to peer at them.

"I was through with Agnes, anyway," Roger went on callously. "If you want to know, there's someone else I met, and—well, I'm going up in the world. But I'll keep off your scent.

He didn't offer to help Faith as she struggled to open the stiff door and hurried out of the taxi. As she started walking the sound of her predicament suddenly overwhelmed her. Panic hollowed her out. She had no money with her and there wasn't a single human being to whom she could turn. She realized now that, living with Agnes, she had made no other friends. Any appeal to Miss Prince would be useless. If she went back to face the police, she would be discredited by the mere fact that she had run away. She would never believe her story of Roger.

She hadn't even looked at the corner where the block of flats was. It must be somewhere in the Village. Miss Miller. Why was she hurrying? Where to? She forced her mind down the horror and contusion-ion of the past few hours. She must not think of Agnes.

The night was strange and silky around her, the sky calm and fair away. Out of breath, she stopped for a moment in front of an antique shop. Dimmed lights showed a cavern of chest, chests, candlesticks, a tapestried armchair—ghostly things from which all life had receded. If only she could break through the glass and curl up in that chair! Perhaps she had better sleep in the Park.

Brownstone houses closed against her. Discreet basement doors that shrewned light when they opened on groups of men and women in evening dress. Night clubs. Restaurants. A parade of rebellion surged through Faith. Why should these people be wearing themselves out, living their life, careless ways, when she had nowhere at all to go? It might have been better—for all, to go with Roger!

But the very thought of him drove Faith on, her head lowered as if she were battling a wind. A fleet was blind as she ran full into a man coming out of one of the dark doorways on the street she was fined. Her eyes lifted to a stiff white shirt front, a black coat and bet-tween an unbuttoned overcoat,

"Sorry," she murmured, and would have hurried on.

"Well—if it isn't the little florist girl. And what are you doing alone in this wicked town, my dear?" Philip Stevens, topped by a silk hat stared down at her.

Picking up his spear, the ape-man looked about for signs of Olga's trail. This he soon found leading toward the east. As he set out upon it, something prompted him to feel for the locket he had hung about his neck. It was gone!

No anger showed on his face, but his jaws tightened grimly as he felt the bump on his head where the girl spy had struck him. Then a half-smile crossed his lips as he had to admit that Olga had neatly tricked him.

He knew it must have taken nerve to do the thing she did and then set out, armed only with a pistol, through the trackless waste lying between them and Wilhemstal. Tarzan admired courage—even in a Red spy, but he saw that in this case——it only added to the girl's resourcefulness and made her all the more dangerous, increasing the necessity for putting her out of the way. Hoping to overtake her before she could reach Red Headquarters, he set out at a swinging trot.

R. C. M. P. UNDER FIRE IN HOUSE

Liberals Charge Third Degree Methods Used by Mounties

Ottawa, Feb. 16.—(CP)—Battles in Western Canada over adoption of the proposed poultry and egg marketing scheme reached the House of Commons last night, when Hon. Robert Weir, Minister of Agriculture, was questioned about the use of Government money in "promoting" the scheme. Mr. Weir at first denied money was being spent for "promotion" but later said his statement turned on the interpretation to be placed on the word.

Widespread misrepresentation of the scheme, he claimed, was making it impossible for producers to understand it. The Dominion Marketing Board was faced with the problem of taking steps to obtain an intelligent vote and was authorized by the natural products Marketing Act to use public funds in presenting a scheme as in organizing. It had advanced $20,000 to the Saskatchewan Poultry Pool, the sponsors of the scheme, $10,000 to the Manitoba pool and $20,000 to the organization in Alberta.

Mounted Police Criticized

E. J. Young (Lib. Weyburn), raised the question of proponents of the scheme being provided with funds while opponents had nothing. Mr. Weir said one organization opposing had asked for money but had been refused because there might be a host of such requests. The conditions under which funds were to be used stipulated that opponents were to have full opportunity to speak at meetings.

Earlier in the day the Royal Canadian Mounted Police came in for criticism when a bill respecting Pensions received second reading. Allegations of third degree practices were made by C. G. Power (Lib. Quebec South), and Hon. Peter Veniot (Lib. Gloucester) while Hon. Ernest Lapointe (Lib. Quebec East) and Hon. J. L. Ralston (Lib. Shelburne-Yarmouth) feared traces of incipient militarism were becoming evident.

Hon. Hugh Guthrie, Minister of Justice, said there would be no militarism in the force while he had control. He believed it had always been a civilian police force and should always remain so. Strict instructions against the third degree were issued to police. He had investigated a number of cases of alleged improper methods in obtaining evidence and found them groundless.

Although Mr. Guthrie denied all knowledge of the charges and defended the good name of the force. He promised to investigate third degree allegations made by Mr. Veniot.

Claims Reputation Falling

An investigator from Ottawa, the Minister promised, will probe charges the Mounties used the third degree in extracting a confession from an 18-year-old boy in Gloucester, N.B. He also asked Thomas Reid (Lib. New Westminster) to supply names and dates of his charge that spotters were used to plant liquor evidence in Richmond, B.C.

It was a day of charges against the Red Coats. Mr. Lapointe making the claim the force was being over-militarized. One or two members claimed the reputation of the Mounties fell because of the type of recruit enlisted in recent years and that the old days when a Red Coat was respected as well as feared were gone.

The Justice Minister said he was satisfied no third degree methods were adopted by the Mounties but promised to investigate the charges. He denied the claim of over-militarizing the force, terming it entirely a police organization.

Instructions forbidding third degree measures were issued to the Mounties, Mr. Guthrie continued. If the instructions were disobeyed, "I wish they would be reported to me."

In answer to a question from Mr. Ralston, Mr. Guthrie said he had consistently refused to interfere in prosecutions launched by the R.C.M.P. He did not regard it as his duty to do so. Although he had frequently been requested to hear representations from lawyers.

Mr. Ralston said he wondered whether the Minister had control of the police in their prosecutions. He thought the police should be required to refer prosecutions to the minister or someone having a grasp of the legal questions involved. The Minister said this was what happened in more serious cases. They came to the department and frequently to him, but there were hundreds of cases he never heard of.

"We do maintain general control over the administration of the force," said Mr. Guthrie.

'Germany of Today' Discussed At Stirling Club by Dr. Brown

Stirling, —On Tuesday evening, February 12, Dr. Richard Brown, medical missionary, who recently returned from China, addressed one of the largest gatherings in the history of the Stirling Welfare Club. The subject of his address "Germany of Today" proved to be intensely interesting and instructive. Because of personal contact with friends and relatives, some of them officials in the cause of Hitler, the speaker was able to bring before his listeners a very vivid picture of conditions as he saw them on his recent visit there.

Among the visitors on this occasion were representatives of other organizations. Madoc Community Club members present were—J. Rutherford, President, P. Bristol, Vice-President, D. J. Barry, Sec.-Treasurer, G. West, Past President. The Belleville Kiwanis Club was represented by President Clifford Barrager, and Arthur Sills. These and many other notable guests were introduced by Dr. Edmond A. Carlton.

In introducing the speaker, Dr. Pedley spoke of his academic standing. A graduate of Trinity College Toronto, Dr. Brown was sent to his present field of activity by St. Paul's Anglican Church of that city Dr. Brown is superintendent of a missionary hospital.

As the speaker arose to address his audience, he was greeted by the old Trinity College yell from several Trinity graduates who were present.

The Address

Europe, said the speaker in his opening remarks, had become a group of states under dictatorship. Russia, Italy and Germany were outstanding examples of this trend and radical followers of these dictators can justify their existence to their own satisfaction at least. Speaking of the man, Hitler, around whom his subject centered. He stated that Hitler, like all or most radical leaders was of obscure origin. German by birth, born in Bavaria of parents in the peasantry class. His father died when he was thirteen, and from then until he was seventeen, he received no education He then went to Vienna, which may account for his being classed in some circles as Austrian. In 1912 he went to Munich, and in 1914 he offered his services in the German army, later gaining the iron cross of second degree for distinguished service. Before the end of the war he gained the iron cross of the first degree, which emphasizes the fact that he was a man of unusual qualities and power.

In 1919 he began his political career with the meagre following of seven individuals. From there he rose steadily by sheer force of character, to the greatest position his country could offer. The propaganda set forth by the rest of the world, some building him up, others tearing him down, cannot change the fact that he has achieved many great things. With no less than thirty eight different parties striving in various ways for the salvation of the state, Hitler came into power, abolished them all, and took on the role of dictator. With no opposition he at once set his political machine to work. In spite of his radical ideas, he has succeeded in settling and solving many of Germanys problems.

He put six million unemployed to work in training camps, building roads and bridges, and all surplus energy is directed into channels of building up the state. The racial superiority is not so pronounced as we are led to believe. The accomplishments of the German nation testifies to their intellectual genius. The persecution of the Jews cannot be laid entirely at the feet of Hitler, although it is a plank in his platform. Hitler believes that the Jews are enemies of the state, and therefore, they must die. Jews caused the Great War. The House of Rothchild made millions out of war. But the actual beginning of the persecution goes back to 1818, and it lasted until 1870, and then they were tolerated again, beginning to get control of the money once more. In 1914, Jews were accepted in the German court by Kaiser Wilhelm. So the persecution of the Jews is not entirely Hitler's idea.

Hitler is radical to the point of justifying the execution of seventy politicians, by merely saying they plotted against the state. Hitler advocates the abolition of all treaties, equality of arms, abolition of all unearned income, confiscation of all war profits, reduced rate of interest, better conditions for the aged, union of all German states, including Austria, Poland and of course the Saar, which is rightfully German, but which was occupied by France as recompense for the vast coal areas destroyed by Germany in the war. France, by the treaty, was to occupy and operate this area for a period of fifteen years, when a plebiscite was ordered, and a ninety per cent. vote gave it back to Germany. He also advocates compulsory physical culture. Every student must serve his time at physical labor. This is all done in an effort to bring about the perfect man, superior in intellect and physique.

With this drastict program, Hitler has succeeded already in bringing the nation back to nearly a normal state. Individuality and personal liberty are curtailed. Service is the key note.

The German army is limited to one hundred thousand by treaty, but the Black Shirts, Brown Shirts, and other military organizations that come under the heading of private armies, bring that number up to eight hundred thousand fully trained soldiers, ready to answer the call to war at a moment's notice. Their air force is limited by treaty to two hundred planes, but at any demonstration the air is filled with supposedly privately owned planes.

"At the present time," stated the speaker, "an invasion by any two nations of the world would result in victory for Germany, because of the armament she has secretly prepared. She didn't lose the last war, she merely stopped to keep the invaders off German soil.

Asked if Germany was attempting to destroy the church as did Russia. The speaker didn't think so but stated that Germany sought control of religion. They have no use for what they term, soft heart religion, and the doctrine of love thy neighbour is not permitted. Heroism must survive above all. At heart they are a religious people, though they are taught that strength is everything. Might is right.

And so these people, humiliated to the last degree and hard pressed, have turned to Hitler for salvation. Even though all do not favor him, no word is said against him. All are for the state, being schooled in a selfish desire to make themselves the superior race of the world.

No spectacular change was made in the standing of the various teams in the Centre Hockey League by the twin-bill fixture played in the Stirling Arena on Tuesday night, Feb. 12, when Evergreen finally scored their first win, by defeating Mount Pleasant by the score of 4-1. Glenn Ross also scored a win, when they took the flashy West Huntingdon crew. Defeating them 3-1. They were both thrilling encounters. Though little was to be gained from the outcome either one way or the other, these boys have earned the support of the fans and have no desire to lose it by turning in a poor game. The fans want hockey and they are giving it to them.

First Game

The boys from Evergreen received a great hand as they appeared on the ice. In spite of their losses they are popular with the fans. After three minutes of play, Benedict shot from well out to make the first tally, and once again it looked like curtains for Evergreen. Rodgers, however, soon inspired his team into playing faster hockey when he picked the top corner to tie it up. From then on it was top speed. Rodgers and Hagerman, king pins of the opposing teams, gave a great exhibition of speed skating and poke checking, that had the crowd cheering for the remainder of the period which ended 1-1.

Second Period

The Mounties put forth their best effort in this frame, making the pace and carrying the play to Evergreen all the time. Rodgers and Heath cut loose once with no one to beat but Warren, and Heath missed the pass. Mount Pleasant had the edge of the play throughout the period, but couldn't score. Both teams retired at the end of the period with the score still 1-1.

The fast pace set by the Mounties in the second period took its toll in the third, when Evergreen turned it on full. Rodgers took a pass from Magee, but Warren was on the job. On the return play Gibson checked and shot from centre to fool Warren completely, making the score 2-1 for Evergreen. Rodgers and Holmes got the gate for mixing it. Evergreen, feeling that their first win of the season was within their grasp, decided to make it sure by Gibson getting his second counter, making it 3-1 for Evergreen and Rodgers making a lovely rush from behind his own net, through the entire team to make the score 4-1, as the bell went to end the game. Evergreen received a great ovation as they turned in their first win.

Line-up—Mount Pleasant, Goal, Warren; defence, Hay and Benedict; wings, Sutherland and Holmes; centre, Hagerman, Subs — Coggin, Jeffs, David. Evergreen— Goal, Broadworth; defence, Stapley and Gibson; Wings, Heath and Magee; centre, Rodgers. Subs, Rodgers.

Second Game

The second game was more important to the two teams taking part and started fast. Mott won the draw circled his own net, and skating fast, was taken out of the play by Brown at the blue line. Both teams being evenly matched they played carefully. Mott intercepted a pass, and with no one to beat but Hagerman, skated in fast for the first counter. West Huntingdon then began to loaf, trying only to hold that one goal lead. Glen Ross became a bit over anxious and many good plays were spoiled by players making off side passes. The period ended 1-0 for West Huntingdon.

Second Period

Shortly after the face-off Brown received a penalty for tripping Wright who was in a scoring position. He no doubt saved a goal. Play began to get a bit hot at this stage and McGowan took the gate, also for tripping. Glen Ross taking advantage of the extra man, sent every man up, in an effort to tie the score. Just before the bell rang, Fraser scored on a shot from centre to end the period with a tie, 1-1.

Third Period

West Huntingdon started defensive tactics as if they were content with a tie, rather than take chances, but Glen Ross was just warmed up and going strong. Brooks, after playing a great game, finally notched a counter. It was perhaps a bit flukey but nevertheless a goal. Shooting hard from the corner, the puck glanced off Judd McGowan's skate into the net, making the score 2-1 for Glen Ross with eleven minutes to play. The game was getting a little rough, and heavy body checks showed up. The speed artists, Wright and Scott mixed it up, and Wright got a rest. With every man up for West Huntingdon, Harry Brooks got away, and with no one to beat but a lone defence man, skated in close and beat Sarles for another counter to end the game 3-1 for Glen Ross.

Line-up—Glen Ross, Goal, Hagerman; defence, Armstrong, Brown; Brooks, centre; A. Fraser, Subs, Scott, Pyear, Macdonald.

West Huntingdon, Goal, Sarles, defence, McGowan, McGowan; wings, Wright, Kerby; centre, Mott Subs, Henderson, Thompson,

On Monday evening in the vestry of St. John's Church the A.Y.P.A. put on a very delightful entertainment in the form of an amateur night. Rev. A. S. McConnell opened the meeting with prayer. Following this a talented group of young folk presented a play, "The Choir Rehearsal", which was very interesting and bubbling over with good humour. The characters were enacted by Miss Margaret Bateman, Miss Nellie Kent, Howard Morrow, Kenneth Morrow, Morley Tanner and Walter Savage. After the laughter subsided, Glen Morrow gave selections on the guitar.

Tells of Talk in Los Angeles Cell, Says Accused Man Asked Questions, Jurors' Illness Halts Trial Today

Witness Swears Accused Stated He'd Gladly Exchange Sentence

QUESTION OF ALIBI

Vermilyea Alleged by Sullivan to Have Discussed Emotions

A former University of Montana student, a chartered motor operator of California and a clerical worker at times, John Sullivan, youthful resident of 5226 Edna St., Los Angeles, who glibly admitted that he had manufactured a considerable amount of liquor in an illicit still and peddled it wholesale to bootleg ranken over a lengthy period of time, was a surprise witness during the late afternoon session of the trial of Harold W. Vermilyea on Saturday, with a veritable story that brought a hush to the tenseness of the packed court room, told how he had carried on a conversation with Vermilyea in a jail cell in Los Angeles after pointing to th accused in the dock as the man.

Sullivan who freely admitted that "the more liquor a certain man sold the more he, himself, had made" had been lodged in the detention cell of the jail at the same time that Harold W. Vermilyea was being held for questioning. He described with an educated accent his talk with him in the cell on the day of October last. Witness had been held in the cell previous to a transfer to a second one to begin a thirty day sentence on a charge of the International Revenue Act as a result of his operations in making liquor.

Witness stated that when he had been lodged in the cell just after his sentence he felt elated that a longer one had not been given him. He had faced five counts on the indictment against him, and had got off light. "After I had entered the cell this man whom I afterward found out was Vermilyea, told me that he would give ten thousand dollars if he could trade sentences with me," he stated.

Smoothly, yet so rapidly that counsel could not interrupt, he proceed to slow down, Sullivan continued.

Verbatim report of testimony of Sullivan in regard to a conversation he swore he had with the accused in the Los Angeles jail cell is given in columns 3 and 4 on page one).

The Hours' Conversation

Other things were talked of, during the two hour conversation he had with his cell-mate, said Sullivan. Much of it concerned psychosophies of life" as expounded by each accused.

Col. Greer, defence counsel, took the witness.

Q.—You were up on a charge which required dealing with a Federal court?

A.—Yes.

Q.—But you didn't go to a Federal prison as though on that charge?

GENERAL TIEUP STARTS IN N.Y.

Elevators in Heart of Garment Centre Stop

New York, Feb. 18 (AP)—Elevators of a 20-square-mile area in the heart of the city's garment centre were stopped as a show of union strength today five minutes before representatives of workers went into conference in an effort to prevent a general tieup of 1,000 buildings at 12 noon.

The conference in the mayor's office began at 11 a.m.

The first building to cease service was the Rivoli Theatre, which has 2,000 floors of 6,000 workers. An hour after the picket line about 1,000 had made their way upstairs to offices on the lower floors. The management said no effort to run the elevators would be made at present.

All police of Manhattan were ordered to report with their nightsticks.

The sixteen strikers of the Brookyn Building walked to the street at 8.30 into a crowd of 1,000 sympathizers mling about outside.

Verbatim Report of Part Of Evidence by Sullivan

Evidence given by John Sullivan is no true indication of what lies underneath. He said we are passing through primitive days and still have primitive emotions. He says under the policy civilization has given us we still have some qualities of greed and cruelty and lust that have gripped the human race since it was a race. He still is not a criminal. I have never been in any trouble before. He said it is not what you have been it is what is inside of you. Sometimes you ever take a fellow and look at him and think you son of a would like to take a club and beat your brains out.

Q. Go on from there? A. Well, I said whatever prompted you, you certainly wounding in a pretty bad position. It seems to me your only possible way out is to try to prove you are insane.

I said sometimes they get by with that in these courts and you might get by with it. But I said I have been a success all my life, and I am right this thing for all time. He said they have not got me beat yet. We talked about conditions in the county gaol until the Deputy came to transfer me to the Alhambra State gaol.

Q. How long were you together on this interview?

A. I would say approximately two hours.

Pay as You Fight Policy Advocated By Committee

Washington, Feb. 18 (AP)—"Pay as you fight" policy for any future war urged upon United States Congress today by the House Committee on military affairs. After studying means of taking profit out of war the committee urged establishment of a level beyond which wartime prices might not go, a 100 percent levy on excess profits, and higher taxes for everybody.

It proposed also draft all wealth in war-time the McSwain report said.

"Some loose thinking, based on noble motives, however, has proceeded upon the theory all or the wealth of the nation would be drafted and mobilized for the use of the nation in time of war.

"A little more careful and analytic thinking would convince such persons such a plan and program would be socialistic and communize all of the property and industrial system of America. To repudiate such a result is truly abhorrent."

SHARP INCREASES IN SHOE PRICES

Retailers Told by President of Shoe Manufacturers' Association

Toronto, Feb. 18—(CP)—Sharp increases in prices of raw material purchased by Canadian shoe and leather manufactured goods will come likely in the next few months, President Leo Dolan of the Shoe Manufacturers' Association of Canada said today addressing the National Shoe Retailers Annual Convention.

"Prices must be advanced to the consumer," said Mr. Gagnon told the retailers, "and I am convinced you can anticipate considerable delayed. Costs of production have increased and will increase still further and it follows prices of shoes also must advance.

"I am not entirely sure that the style of the opinion we have entered on a period of advancing prices. Currency has been inflated", he added, "and prices have not yet risen proportionately".

Mr. Gagnon stated Canadian people are buying only about 1.4 pair of shoes a year compared to nearly three pairs bought by the people of the United States. Consumptive salesmanship, he said, would increase this to at least 2 1-2 pairs—an increase of more than 50 percent without proportionate increase in overhead expenses.

New York, Feb. 18 (AP)—Securities markets surged upward upon news the Supreme Court had upheld abrogation of gold clauses in private obligations today. Wall Street traders, quailing for the moment to their indebtedness, would benefit by millions since their securities had been weighed down by that possibility. By the end of the first 15 minutes after trading after new tickers flashed the decision in Wall Street trading facilities were overwhelmed. Some stocks jumped as much as $1 or more before that. Santa Fe quickly rose 19 to about $32. Gains of $2 to $3 appeared throughout the list.

The stock ticker quickly fell as Wall Street traders behind transactions on the floor.

Immediate announcement of the decision regarding the Trade would be closed until further notice.

Supreme Court Sustains New Deal Invalidation in Private 'Gold Clauses'

U.S. Gov't. Must Pay Off Bonds in Gold or Equivalent

IMPORTANT DECISION

Federal Bond Holders Unable To Collect on Old Basis

By JOHN T. SUTER
(Copyright, 1935 by the Associated Press)

Washington, Feb. 18 (AP)—The Supreme Court today solemnly sustained the new deal invalidation of "gold clauses" in private contracts, but not so on Federal bonds.

While it was held the government must pay off its own bonds in gold or the equivalent in devalued currency, another ruling that the Court of Claims had no jurisdiction over such cases interpreted it to mean it would be impossible for holders of Federal bonds to collect on their gold basis.

This, in effect, would mean while technically the holder of a $1,000 Federal bond was entitled to $1,690 practically he could make no such collection.

Court Claims

The Court of Claims is the only tribunal before which suits against the government may be taken.

Other court may not entertain such suits without a special act of Congress, lawyers said.

In declaring Congress could not abrogate the gold clause in its own bonds, the court added that when it had brought the suit had shown no right of action.

In the opinion, read by Chief Justice Hughes to the crowded court room, the power of Congress to deal with currency was fully upheld.

The court declared that the devalued gold certificates also had no cause of action and could not sue the government.

Satisfaction within the administration was evident at once.

"I'm satisfied," said the New Deal Senate Leader, Senator Robinson of Arkansas.

"In other words," said Chairman Doughton of the House Ways and Means Committee, "what the government did might not have been absolutely legal, but it was right."

Attorney General Cummings expressed his pleasure.

While the crowd waited in suspense the Chief Justice at noon briefly summarized the conclusions before going to the reading of the formal opinion.

Gold Clause Contracts

Private parties, states, municipalities, corporations, he declared, he said, have no power to enter into gold clause contracts, provided they interfere with the power of Congress to regulate the currency and its medium of exchange.

As the minutes passed with his reading the audience lost some of its interest.

Outstanding federal gold clause securities exceed the $4,565,000,000. Some $7,000,000,000 having been realized since the enactment of the Thomas Act. The Treasury's total estimated redemption of these in new gold dollars at the present rate of the bonds' gold content would increase their redemption cost by over $15,000,000,000.

Then $40,000,000,000 of state, county and municipal indebtedness was affected, payment of which in terms of the old gold dollar content would have added $28,000,000,000 to the debt.

Gold Clause Indebtedness

Officials here could not state exactly the amount of private gold clause indebtedness. Estimates ranging up to $200,000,000,000. Redemption of such a staggering amount in old dollars would have increased the debt by $140,000,000,000.

As to these private gold contracts, the Chief Justice held that Congress was not violating the $1.69 in present currency for every dollar of the obligation while also contending they could be permitted to pay their taxes with devalued dollars.

The issue arose from the shah of gold in the choice of 23.22 grains, or 59.06 percent of, its former weight. Congress held that all that bonds requiring redemption in gold or the equivalent cash contract "tended unduly."

NEW FISCAL YEAR STARTS ON APRIL 1

Estimates For Months of April to October Will be Revoted

Toronto, Feb. 18—(CP)—Ontario legislature for the months from April to October of this year will have to be revoted because the fiscal year has been changed, Premier Mitchell F. Hepburn said today.

The Cabinet over the week-end fixed the starting date of the new fiscal year as April 1 instead of November 1 as at present and a new session will be opened for a new fiscal year—April 1, 1935, to April 1, 1936.

Under the present system supplies are voted at the session in the spring but the vote is not effective until the new fiscal year starts in November. The change in dates of the fiscal year and supply votes are immediately effective.

Mr. Hepburn added in this supply bill a vote for maintenance of Government House, home of Lieutenant-Governor Matthews, will not be passed.

In the last session of the Legislature a vote of $41,000 was passed providing for the maintenance of the Lieutenant-Governor's official residence. Of that total $29,000 was for furnishings and $11,500 for salaries.

The Lieutenant-Governor's personal salary of $10,000 is paid by the Federal Government, which appoints him to office.

Chief Locke Discusses Short-Wave Radio and Teletype for Police Work

"The advantages of short-wave radio over teletype" was the subject discussed by Chief Constable J. L. Locke, of Ontario, California, this morning during a luncheon held together of local Provincial and United States officials during the recess called in the local sittings of the Supreme Court.

Chief Locke pointed out to local authorities, that the State of California had tried both methods of police communication and found that short-wave radio was far superior to that of teletype. "Under present conditions," he said, "short-wave radio communication were used in your province of Ontario, a local receiving set would be placed in the police station. If a message was sent out from Toronto to apprehend a criminal the local police would receive the information quite as right, but without a local radio station, another station the patrol officers on their beat would not be informed of the incident and perhaps might allow the robber-car to pass unnoticed. On the other hand if your patrol cars and motorcycles were equipped with radio receiving sets, then the message could be relayed to them while in dispatch of their duties and the robber-car apprehended if it happened to pass through the district. We find radio equipped cars a paramount help in making quick investigations and I thoroughly recommend the installation of radio into all police work, through experience of my own. I definitely stated John Locke, who is fast being known by his Christian name in Belleville.

Chief Locke has a police force of 14 men in Ontario, California, two of them are traffic officers, two clerks-dictaphonists, two dog sergeants day and night, whose duties are to receive and broadcast calls either by telephone or radio. His police department has three radio-equipped automobiles, all of which are always on call even when patrolling the streets.

While discussing the Canadian weather today Chief Locke was heard to remark, "Say, wasn't that snow storm yesterday a picture? The only think I don't like about it is the ice that followed the snow. Why, this morning when I stepped out of my hotel on to the sidewalk before I knew it my feet were where by head should have been and vice versa," chuckled Chief Locke in relation to a fall he had on the ice.

AGRICULTURISTS MAY ORGANIZE FARM CHAMBER

Projected Body May Function Like The C. N. A.

EXPORT OF APPLES

Dominion Body Will Provide Central Organization

Ottawa, Feb. 18 (CP)—Groups of agriculturists converged on this capital today for a series of meetings this week which may produce a Canadian Chamber of Agriculture to function for farmers in much the same way as the Canadian Manufacturers Association works for manufacturers.

Many of the week's conventions will be the annual meeting of the Canadian Horticultural Council which starts tomorrow and lasts till Thursday. Tomorrow also the Canadian Apple Export Board will meet and during the week the Dominion Marketing Board will consider plans for amending the marketing scheme under which the British Columbia apple crop is being sold. The amendments were approved at a recent meeting of the British Columbia Fruit Growers' Association.

The meeting to consider organization of a Canadian Chamber of Agriculture was called at the instance of the British Columbia Chamber of Agriculture in connection with fruit, dairy and western farm interests. It will start Wednesday.

It was said the Dominion body, would provide Canadian agriculture with a central organization, to which existing farm organizations would be affiliated.

Bishop Lyons Confirms 52 From Christ Church, St. George's

FOR they are taking the baptismal vow

Upon their conscious selves; their own lips speak

The solemn promise. Strongest witness fail;

And many a blooming, many a lovely cheek

Upon the holy fear of God turns pale

While on each head his hawn-roled servant lays

An apostolic hand, and with prayer seals

The Covenant. The Omnipotent will raise

Their feeble souls.

FROM the clergy's vestry of Christ Church proceeding along the south aisle to the rear of the church and the front and up the main aisle, the choir of fifty voices the confirmation of twenty-seven girls and women and twenty-five boys and men from Christ Church and St. George's, followed by the Rev. A. L. Geen, Rev. G. G. Wright, rector, and the Right Rev. Dr. Lyons, Bishop of the diocese of Ontario, came at seven o'clock on Sunday evening, during

"Thy Hand, O God has guided Thy flock from age to age;"

while the vast congregation which filled every pew in the church and even the robing vestry at the church entrance joined in the hymn. The choir entered the choir aisle, while the class to be confirmed took front seats along the choir aisle, the clergy halting at the steps to the chancel. His Lordship the Bishop stood before the chair which had been placed at the top of the chancel steps. Forward again the wall were seen the rich oak reredos, and the altar with its candles flanked by silver vases containing lilies.

THE processional was that impressive form which creates at the genuine preparation for the service when the young people, having themselves the vows which their godfathers and godmothers had taken for them in baptism. First came the boys' choir, with their bright and sincere faces, clad in red and white surplice, then the adult choir singing in that richness of tone which makes processional singing so prominent a ritual in the Anglican church. Then the class to be confirmed—the little girls wearing their flowing veils and clad in their white light dresses, the women also wearing veils and white dresses, and the boys and men in scoutsomed somber clothing.

TO the end that confirmation may be ministered . . ." began the Rev. G. G. Wright., who had been preparing for many weeks the class from Christ Church and St. George's, as he recited the prayer to the order of laying on of hands.

"Do you here, in the presence of God, and of this congregation renew the solemn promise and vow that was made in your name at your baptism" . . . . solemnly asked the bishop and then the candidate came the light-toned "I do."

The congregation sang "Just As I am, Thine Own to be."

"YE Shall Receive Power . . . ." said the bishop who had now taken his place at the chancel rail, the well known verse from Acts 11: 8, and began to preach.

"THE church has always been influenced by these words," the bishop said. Spoken to the Apostles they are a message to every age and to every man.

"Without the possession of the Holy Spirit we do not possess the power to take our place and fulfil our duty to church and to society. What the church needs is power, not political power, financial power, not economic power but what it needs above all is spiritual power.

"What we need is the spirit of the living God, in ourselves and that we manifest it in our lives.

"IT would do us good to place ourselves as Jesus in the world. The church must stand as Jesus did in olden days as He looked down on the City and cried out words of Jesus did! The trouble is that we have our own pet theories. They come between us and the world. If we see as Jesus saw we are not going to be satisfied with the solutions handed out in these days by the world. We must recognize the invisible force.

"We have boasted so much of being a very practical people, that we have contributed to making the world essentially materialistic and secular. Today the situation has been forced upon us of recognizing that the practical man is the man who recognizes the spiritual forces and that it is he who is going to make solutions in economic problems to political problems and in public life."

THE bishop showed how the Christian is to be a witness for Christ both as a witness in a court of law, telling the whole truth and nothing but the truth and knowing wherof he spoke. "No secondhand knowledge can be accepted. We must know Him, knowledge of whom comes through fellowship with Him through the means provided by the church.

The bishop referred to the deepening of the spiritual life programmes of the Anglican Church in many centres by all communions, "that we in the church may go out as missionaries and witnesses. There is hungering in the world. A great change has come over mankind. Man feels the need and the time opportune. We are going to ask men and women to go out into the highways and byways and bring men and women in.

"LET us get right and all problems will be solved. We have to impress upon them that there is something worth while to them because it is worth while to us."

The candidates were addressed by the bishop following that the importance of confirmation rested in the belief that it was of great value to help find your way. "It is all very well but of what value is confirmation unless we see that it is well done so and so very much good and bad on the part of this is that in many cases it is too true. I am sorry to say there are hundreds and thousands of professing Christians who are nothing short of a disgrace to the church and the profession of their faith. They have fallen back upon the idea of spiritual privilege, that so many stand aloof and do not offer themselves for confirmation. But it has helped countless souls though it has been abused by so many.

"SO I say to you, think well and do not let your actions belie your profession of faith. The world men and women realize the power of the Living God, the more they will have a real desire to be of real service to Him.

"To God is Jesus, is the Holy Spirit real to me.

"Day by day we are more and more driven back on these great realities.

The bishop spoke of the great heritage in the church, at the strongest in its history. "The church is divine," he said. The Church of England is an integral part of the Holy Catholic Church.

"CIVILIZATION it is true, they say is 'tottering, nevertheless we will not be possessing this heritage, we have a wonderful heritage in the Church of England today.

"The Christian life is a movement onward.

"May you look back on this day as one of the happiest in your life," he said in conclusion. "Forth Thy Light."

At the organ was the organist, Mr. Hayes, under whom the choir has reached the total of fifty-four voices, fifty-one of the members being present last night. The anthem was sung with a fine sense of musical values, the pains being taken with precision. The singing of the hymns was an integral part of the service, the choir's share in this portion of the service being marked.

"COME Holy Ghost, our souls inspire," the English translation of the old Latin hymn was sung just before the rite was begun.

The rector stepped to the aisle and directed the candidates as they came forward, the rite of laying on of hands to the words of the bishop: "Defend, O Lord, this thy child (servant) with thy heavenly grace that he (she) may continue thine forever, and daily increase in thy holy spirit more and more, until he (she) come to thy everlasting kingdom. Amen." Fifty-two stepped forward and fifty-two times this prayer was said, one candidate knelt.

The service then proceeded to the close with prayers and the recessional, "Hark, Hark, I have promised to serve Thee to the end."

Chief's Mother Will be Juror

While Chief W. Locke of the Ontario, California police force is at present in Belleville city, having come for the witnesses in the trial of Harold W. Vermilyea, Ontario, California, murderer of San Bernardino, California, has been named as one of the jurors in an important trial in California. The 29-year-old Chief Constable of the municipality of this city today from his home state was advised of the fact.

POLICE COURT

William Storms and Albert Jenkins, both of this city, were given a six months' suspended sentence each, after pleading guilty to a charge of theft before Magistrate H. J. Potter, K.C., in today's police court proceedings.

Storms and Jenkins had pleaded guilty to the theft of gasoline in the magistrate's court and had remanded for sentence. Both young men assured the court, that they had never been in trouble before and promised that if clemency was shown, they would govern their future actions accordingly. The prestige of petty thieving must stop, there are altogether too many cases of this sort going unpunished in this city and I give you fair warning, that a more drastic action will follow in subsequent cases," stated Magistrate Butler in rendering an order to caution to future offenders. "I'll give you boys a six months' suspended sentence and one member, don't come back," added His Worship.

The motorist paid the minimum fine for not being able to produce his individual operator's license when requested to do so. It was the first case of its kind to come under the H.T.A. in 1935. Another local citizen was given seven days "on the hill" after pleading guilty to assaulting his wife during a family altercation in their home on Saturday night last.

Police News

Local authorities were quite busy over the week end investigating the usual petty infractions of the law. Following a report local police found that a number of windows had been broken in a vacant Albert Street residence. The cause of the trouble was found to be the result of mischievous boys carelessly handling an air-rifle. The windows had been broken by the pellets fired from the gun.

Mrs. Theresa, Belleville, complainer to the police, that some unknown person had broken and entered his cottage on the Bay Bridge Road. Upon investigation by the local authorities it was found that entrance had been gained by forcing a door. The intruders are believed to have been transients as the cottage was not disturbed. A blanket on one of the bunks showed signs of having been burned as though a lighted cigarette had been dropped. Transients were blamed for the trouble.

Although local streets and adjacent highways were in rather hazardous motoring facilities over the week end, only a single minor motor accident was reported in Belleville during the past 48 hours.

EIGHTEEN MAKE GETAWAY USING VISITORS AS SHIELD

13 Captured in One of The Most Sensational Breaks in Years

GUARD IS KILLED

Marksmanship Impeded by Hapless Convicts

Granite, Okla., Feb. 18—(AP)—Eighteen desperate convicts were at large in the southwest today after a wholesale break from the state reformatory in which women and children were used as shields and one guard was shot to death.

Back in the cells were 13 other convicts who had joined in the Sunday dash for liberty, while Mrs. George A. Waiser—the United States only feminine warden of a male prison—shunned praise for her heroism and sought the source of pistols smuggled to the leaders.

All major highways were blockaded and farmers were guarded their homes against possible depredations of the freed inmates and bandits.

The break followed an investigation into reports of cruel treatment of the inmates.

From two smuggled pistols, the plot expanded abruptly to its deadly completion.

The ringleaders appeared suddenly at the side of a trusty prisoner, serving as inside turnkey, poked a pistol muzzle against his ribs.

"Give up the keys," they hissed. With cold precision the malcontents rounded up all inside trusties and day sergeant Walter Ford, locking them in a cell.

"Come on," they yelled.

A mob of youthful prisoners rallied to the pistol and headlong upstairs into the visitors' room.

Mrs. Waiser first was fooled.

"There were about 20 visitors there, mostly women and children," said Leslie Long, a convict, who was there talking with his wife and sister-in-law.

"We all went out toward the front tower. They herded us out there to keep the guards from shooting at them.

As the cabe-maddened mob rampaged down the corridors toward the double-barred front door and freedom one of them snatched a loaded .45 shotgun from a doorkeeper's rack.

An hegiara later, the same gun blazed its fatal charge at 60 year old "Uncle" Peter Jones, veteran tower guard.

The escaping convicts bunched forward warily behind their helpless hostages.

A dissimilar figure raced into the yard from Mrs. Warden's residence, just outside the walls. It was Warden Waiser. Her hand fluttered up in a signal to reluctant gun sentry-bones on wall and tower.

They fired, without effect, their marksmanship impeded by the hapless captives.

Just a moment later, from a flank came the sullen boom of Deputy Warden M. R. Calloway's automatic shotgun.

Eight boys lurched and stumbled as his shave ripped into their flesh. None was seriously hurt. Another, terrified, halted. A tenth was felled by a civilian, Vernon Taliaferro of Carter.

Twenty one of the more determined prisoners swarmed into parked automobiles, or stopped drivers of cars on the big highway upon which the reformatory fronts.

Three of them were recaptured later by possemen at Sayre.

New York, Feb. 16—And we always thought that dogs were man's best friends!

There was a day of he-men and he-dogs, when a man with a dog and a pipe was the acme of masculinity. Those days are dead but hale and growl; they were tough; they were strong; silent companions.

But all this is changed. To-day the species canine is the pampered pet of plutocrats. They are spoken of in terms of value, of pedigree, of nobility, of aristocracy.

They are blue-bloods and as such are treated.

In New York a big dog show is in progress; perfect specimens of canine development from all parts of Canada and the United States are assembled to be judged in the best beauty how manner.

But get a load of this! These dogs are dressed! They eat from silver dishes; they are brushed with gold-backed brushes; they sleep in expensively powdered houses with all conveniences.

It's a panic; it's the laugh of the week.

For instance, imagine a Peke dressed in an imported blanket; that's bad enough. But this blanket has a pocket somewhere which protrudes - silk handkerchief!

And listen to this: One dog wears a coat of long-haired white and with a red button at the neck and a red strap under the stomach; another has a wardrobe that includes an oilskin raincoat with little collars that stand up.

And... for the luvamike! Boots! Dainty little things so that champion something or other won't get his precious little feet dirty walking on the same ground as those of lesser breed.

For the modern manly male or miss who wants a dog companion—from a distance — there are a thousand and one gadgets that make the care and feeding of these into a Quebec bank to open a defiant vault so that business might go on the next morning. Again it would be in some other direction. The play-time hobby became the life-time interest. While it is true that I also carry on endeavors at a financial advisor, the fact still remains that I must open these stubborn safes and vaults," said Gravelle.

Called to Belgium

Continuing, Gravelle explained that he had enlisted with the flying corps in Canada, though he had never flown. He was later called by the Belgian government to look into the matter of disabled, fire-dimed and war-torn safes and vaults in that country. He went to Belgium and opened hundreds of safes and vaults there and throughout Europe. He found the greater part of his labors to be in the devastated areas. Many had been killed who held the secret of combinations. These vaults had to be opened, Gravelle spent no less than eight years in Europe. Hundreds of safes and vaults yielded to his sensitive fingers.

"Are there not others who can do this as you do it " Gravelle was asked.

"I have never met or heard of anyone except my own father who works it out on a mathematical basis. I do not believe there is anyone. There are locksmiths who use tools or other types of force, but this is different. I am not a locksmith. I am not a safe-maker. I have never done any of that kind of work. My father did none of that work. It was a hobby of mathematics applied to subtle mechanism, and nothing more. My father has been called all over the country on this work. I recall that he was called years ago to Napanee, where the branch of the Dominion Bank had been robbed after the safe was opened. It was natural to suspect that a clerk in the bank had supplied the secret of the combination, or actually opened the safe. My father was called in to testify that a safe or vault could be opened without any knowledge of the combination, and without the aid of tools in any way. He opened the safe himself to demonstrate his point. The bank clerk was absolved. That, however, was in the days of a different kind of safe. The safes of 50 years have provided a great change in the safe of to-day. The field of work has been no one, within that time, that we ever heard of who could be called upon by modern vaults and safes as we do," said he.

Gravelle guards his secret carefully. So does his father. They realize that it is fraught with dangers and burdened with grave responsibility. It was but recently that Gravelle began teaching his son his secret to a select few students.

Why the Board is Worn

Gravelle junior is but 44 years of age. The accompanying illustrations show him at work on his father's latest undertaking in western Ontario. They show also those sensitive fingers plying their cunning craft to the stubborn dial. They show also, the long hair and the beard of this genteel Raffles of a modern day. This is not a dress-up to add an atmosphere of mystery or showmanship to this strange calling.

While in Germany, Gravelle visited Obersammergau, and stayed for a time with famous Lange of Passion Play fame. Four years ago, he joined the Passion Players, who toured the United States and Canada, under the direction of Mr. and Mrs. Lange of Passnacht and son, George, junior. Gravelle was an under-study of Pontius Pilate, also played other parts. His hair and beard are of necessity permitted to grow for this work.

Gravelle is modest in the extreme. His story must be pulled from him. He realizes the responsibility of his unusual work. He states that he has never yet inquired as to the fortunes that have been left in safes he has opened, yet realizes that the total currency possessions of many banks were involved. He is not interested in that point. His responsibility ends when the tumblers finally click—and the big doors open.

An Honest 'Raffles' is Ontario Man His Sensitive Fingers Crack Safes

By J. T. FITZGERALD

Central Press Canadian Correspondent

Renfrew, Ont., Feb. 18—Sensitive fingers! Fingers that creep and feel and respond to the slightest touch or sound! Fingers that turned a "keen-age robber into the first consideration of their owner! Fingers that changed the course of a man's life.

These are the fingers of T. Roy Gravelle of Renfrew, Ont. This is the story of the man who calmly sits down to probe the mysteries of locked vaults and safes when others have given up, a workman whose only tools are his sensitive fingers and a mathematical mind. It is a story that has been written in the banks, offices and public buildings of Canada, of the British Isles and of Europe.

Gravelle's business, plainly stated, is opening safes and vaults which, for one reason or another, have defied the ordinary and prescribed manipulation of their mechanisms or combinations. Safes or vaults that have become worn with regard to their combination—that have been through fire—that have been through war itself, provide the special delight of this quiet man, who thanks his father for it all.

I interviewed Gravelle a few days ago in western Ontario, where he had been called to open a safe containing the valuables of a wealthy client, and a considerable amount of cash. The safe had been locked by the proprietor on Monday evening, Tuesday morning, it could not be opened. It was not opened until the following Saturday night—and it was Gravelle who opened it. Meanwhile, the makers of the safe had been called in. They stated that there was but one way in which it could be opened—by drilling. That entailed having it sent to the factory, opening by drilling, and consequent repairs. Its owner was not satisfied. He knew of Gravelle. He would use no force—and given time, would open it with those sensitive fingers, that mathematical mind, and a pencil and bit of paper upon which to work out his secret formula. There were long hours of trying—long hours of patient listening and figuring. Gravelle's sensitive fingers became worn and painful with the constant friction, but were not permitted to give up. Finally, on Saturday came the reward. The tumblers clicked in a business-like way, and the big door opened.

T. Roy Gravelle, with pencil and pad, is working out his problem. This safe had all the valuables of an Ingersoll jeweller, James Craig, locked up for a week. Gravelle opened it. As he explained, his fingers almost have to "listen" in their delicate manipulation of the locking mechanism.

Started As a Hobby

His father, Arthur Gravelle, who for some 30 years published the Renfrew Journal, had mentally-toyed in his youngers days with the mathematics of vaults and safes as a hobby. He had eventually worked out the secret mathematical formula which proved the undoing of stubborn locks on safes and vaults, no matter how complicated their mechanism.

"At the age of 13 years," said the younger Gravelle, "I became interested merely as an inquiring boy. My father disclosed to me the mathematical problems involved, and showed me how to apply them. I have been at it ever since. For many years it remained with me just as an interesting hobby. It intrigued me and I persevered.

"My father, who, by the way, is still living, had developed his hobby to an advanced degree. He developed mental and mathematical short-cuts which permitted him to open vaults or safes in a matter of a few minutes' time. I never aspired to time records in the matter. I will be quite frank to say that where my father took minutes, I take days. I make my presence whatever at speed in the general run of the work.

"And so, as the years went on, and calls here and there became more insistent, I finally found that the opening of safes and vaults was taking first place over other efforts in daily life. I was subject to call here—there and everywhere. Through the dead of night I have been driven with all speed down

BENNETT, HULL SEEK BENEFITS OF RECIPROCITY

Speak at New York on Interest of Trade Relations

WORK FOR PEACE

New York, Feb. 18 (CP)—Negotiations looking to a reciprocal trade agreement between Canada and the United States continued today in Ottawa and Washington, buoyed by the words of co-operation Prime Minister R. B. Bennett and Secretary of State Cordell Hull spoke here Saturday night.

A gathering of 400, at the annual luncheon of the Canadian Society of New York, heard the Canadian Premier and United States Secretary speak of the benefits that would accrue to both nations from such economic co-operation.

Mr. Bennett called for a bold p'ay by Canada and the United States at this time of greater international economic freedom.

Such a move, he said, "may be the means of checking a tide of industrial unrest, the by-product of the world war, we must be rid of before there can be any prospect of world peace."

He told Mr. Hull and through him the administration of President Roosevelt "that in the fullest practical measure the spirit of the principle of economic co-operation, you will not find us lagging."

Neighbors or Neighbors

Nothing, said Secretary Hull, could be finer than the United States "again to withdraw into splendid isolation." His expressions on the hope present negotiations between Ottawa and Washington would result in a broadening of the commerce of the two countries and added:

"We are inevitably the most neighborly of neighbors and a foreign policy, in the long run, for any country, which attempted to fly in the face of that fact would be suicidal, not to say impossible.

Outlining briefly for the society members, the aims of nations in their homeland Premier Bennett said the depression had been largely conquered. He added:

"Recovery measures have been well begun and are based on the assumption that our capitalist system is relatively flexible. . . . The majority view is that the system is defective and requires reform."

The Prime Minister went on to say under the reforms he plans for Canada there would be suffering and unemployment . . . will cease and there will come again that security and happiness upon which is based the whole concept of Christian civilization."

PREPARE APPEAL FOR HAUPTMANN

Will Petition State to Bear Cost of Action

Trenton, N.J., Feb. 18.—(AP)—Bruno Hauptmann stood and smoked in his cell in the Jersey Prison death house today but his attorneys were busy on the outside clearing the way for an appeal from his conviction for the Lindbergh kidnapping.

Frederick A. Pope, defence counsel, said he could appear—probably before—before Supreme Court Justice Thomas W. Trenchard to petition that the state bear the expense of printing the trial record. The cost is about $10,000.

Hauptmann has sworn a pauper's oath and under New Jersey statute the trial judge may grant the petition at his discretion.

The second step in an appeal, Pope said, will be taken shortly if Justic Trenchard accedes to the request. It will be an application to Chancellor Luther A. Campbell for a writ of error to the State Supreme Court.

Pope said he, C. Lloyd Fisher and Egbert Rosenbaum, members of the defence staff, may appear Tuesday before the Chancellor.

Denial of such writs in custody in which an appeal is to be taken immediately to the Court of Errors and Appeals, the State's highest tribunal, has been customary until in May.

No word of Hauptmann's reactions after 48 hours, in the death house, filtered outside the walls of the big fortress-like prison.

"Hauptmann's all right," said Colonel Edward Q. Wilentz, acting Principal Keeper. "There's no change in his status. He's a man who doesn't show his expression outright."

There were reports Hauptmann wept soon after being led to his cell but Wilentz said: "But the only time the guards make a report on any man is when they have a suspicion he's going crazy."

Selby disclaimed any intention of trying to "break" the prisoner by confining him to a cell six paces from the death sitdown. "Something said I put Hauptmann in that cell so the others will have to pass him when they go to the chair and in that way I hope to break him." The Tuleporker, and stern keeper said. "That's a lie."

CAR BANDITS ON WAY TO TORONTO

Captured After Hectic Chase Through Streets of Kingston

Kingston, Ont., Feb. 18 (CP) — Three young men are on their way back to Toronto today, escorted by detectives from that city who hold warrants charging them with auto thefts.

The prisoners also were suspected of being the trio who, in a stolen auto upon the highway running east of Toronto constable had escaped, drove recklessly along west city streets last Tuesday night and finally disposed of the officer by driving at close to a hydro pole in his car knocked off and seriously injured. The constable, Joseph Proctor, is still in hospital.

The three are: Henry Saxon, 20 years old; his brother, Harold Saxon, 24; and Orval Hardy, 19, all of Toronto.

They were captured early yesterday after a hectic automobile and foot chase through Kingston, during which Constables Andrew Ready and James Kidner fired a number of pistol shots. One of which hit a toe of the left foot of Henry Saxon.

Locks, Safes Fall Before Skill of This Locksmith

By Central Press Canadian

New York, Feb. 16—As famed as his Canadian confrere in the matter of opening safes, is Charles M. Courtney, keymaster of this city.

Whereas the Canadian safe-opener relies on mathematics and sensitive fingers, Courtney depends on his uncanny knowledge of keys and of steel. He can tell you at a glance what key will fit what lock; there is not a lock made that he cannot open without the aid of dynamite.

Courtney's secret it probing, like a doctor, until he finds some weakness, some softness in the metal, and then drilling.

His most thrilling work has been under-sea and he is often called by salvage corporations to descend into the strong rooms of sunken ships and open the vaults.

His most exciting experience was the salvage attempt on the British cruiser Hampshire, sunk 15 years ago near the Orkney Islands, with Lord Kitchener aboard. Courtney with his assistants, descended to the decks of the hoat and in searching for the strong room, found an air-tight compartment which when opened disclosed the bodies of two officers sitting in their chairs, just as they had been for 15 years. They floated out as the water rushed in.

Courtney is skeptical about opening safes using only fingers and mathematical formuias.

Sensation Hunters

Sensation-mongers not satisfied with chasing Hauptmann to the death-house, tracked Miss Betty Gow, the nursemaid in the Lindbergh house at Hopewell, to the liner which is taking her back to Scotland. And they were not reporters either. One seized her by the arm to turn her around and Miss Gow smacked the rude intruder in the face. This offender was a woman.

Those who are not sensation-mongers will claim that Miss Gow did the right thing. It is a pity that there is not something in the law which will take care of persons who chase individuals for sensation.

Fortunately the whole nation of people do not go so far from decency as the seekers for thrills.

Miss Gow was entitled to expect that other persons would mind their own business when she was on her trip home. She had done her duty at the trial, having crossed the Atlantic to give evidence to help clear up the Lindbergh kidnap case.

Miss Gow lost her patience with the insistent woman and it is no wonder.

The smack on the cheek while a virtual assault, will not be pressed in court. The smack ought to be remembered by the offending woman to the end of her life, by which time she will have doubtless conquered her desire for excitement, thrill and sensation.

One Hundred Years

"England is recalling this year by exhibitions, pageants, fancy dinners, endowment of hospital beds, special lessons to be given in the schools, the distribution of local histories and by pageants, the passage of the Municipal Corporations Act," says The New York Times. The Royal Assent to the act was not given by Queen Victoria in person, the beginning and will extend through the coming months to the culminating day. Special attention is now being called to conditions prior to its enactment. There was, as Sidney Webb states in his "English Local Government," a confused network of local customs and the common law, of statutes and royal decrees and charters, interspersed with occasional and unsystematized parliamentary statutes, but no "system" of local government. Those in office authority were not considered as representatives of the local communities but as deputies of the King, having a general commission to govern the county as they thought right—"small piques", as another authority states, "who misgoverned the towns" and were composed of property owners who objected to any public expenditure.

"It was under the act of 1835 that street cleansing, housing of the poor, the abolition of open sewers, water supplies, the treatment of the destitute and other local problems began to be undertaken. According to an article in The (London) Observer, in the majority of the towns prior to that time water had to be fetched from a communal tap or pump, or brought in carriers in the early days. As to the streets and homes in one of the larger towns, Manchester, as late as 1930, where a survey was made as the result of an outbreak of cholera, it disclosed unspeakable conditions: out of 687 streets inspected there were 248 wholly unpaved. In the city of Leeds only 40 miles out of 536 were ever cleansed. Out of 6,951 houses inspected in Manchester nearly a third had no sanitary accommodation whatever. Cellars consisted of two rooms on a floor, each nine or ten feet square, some of which were inhabited by ten persons, others by more.

"There were no social amenities at all in these towns, no parks save in one, no playing fields, no libraries or reading rooms, no art galleries or museums. But with the passage of the local Government Act a civic sense that had never existed became deeply rooted' throughout the country, expressing its chief concern through the Ministry of Health, which gave attention to sound drainage, pure water supply, the care of the sick, the clearance of slums and the building of roads.

"It is of interest to note that in that same year the Common Council of the City of New York passed a law instructing the Water Commission who had been appointed to investigate the possible means of providing the city with a sufficient supply of pure and wholesome water for the use of its inhabitants, to proceed with the work by building Croton Aqueduct. Also in that year it was ascertained by actual survey that Manhattan Island comprised 13,000 acres (to which 4,000 acres would be added by extending it into the rivers and filling up the marshes), with the prospect that the island would be filled in less than half a century. So may this city mark the distinct beginnings of a hundred years ago of its civic consciousness and its local authority, as many cities in England are now doing."

Get Proper Exercise

Commenting recently on the wide use of the automobile, a physical director in one of the Montreal universities declared that the motor car was responsible for many of the minor physical ills of the day; that the people of this age were gadding about too much in their autos and failed to get the exercise that is a big factor in keeping one in good physical condition and in shape to give battle to disease, should it happen to come this way.

Possibly the physical director exaggerated a little, but there is no question that many people nowadays who do possess a car, are inclined to overdo motoring and not pay sufficient attention to exercising their muscles and organs of the body through the medium of a good brisk walk once in a while. As a result their health suffers; they are not as fit physically or mentally as they otherwise would be.—Chatham News.

Horse Races at Fairs

Hon. Duncan M. Marshall, Ontario Minister of Agriculture, doesn't look with favor on horse races at agricultural fall fairs. He told a conference of officials that prizes for horse races at the fall fairs are "thefts from the sheep, swine and cattle breeder." He believes that big prizes given for horse racing divert awards that should go toward the breeding of better stock and the production of high-grade grain and vegetables.

Mr. Marshall may be right in his contention, but it must be admitted that rural fairs would lose a strong attraction if the "trotters" were removed from the pictures. Horse racing has a strong appeal for a goodly number of fair patrons as evidenced by the number of attendants who line up along the rails to see these speed events every year. Many people attending fair sans horse racing is like eating victuals without even a pinch of salt. It would be insipid, as it were.

On the other hand it is only proper that exhibitors should be given prizes that offer considerable inducement to show their products. However, since most of the financing of fairs is with the gate money taken in at the gates, it follows that there must be interesting attractions to draw the crowds.—Kitchener Record,

Fire Insurance

Not only does the fire insurance system protect persons and property, wealth and savings, but it provides a great store of funds for the development of the country. In these days when governments have assumed so many activities which formerly were private or institutional responsibilities, it is worthy of note that insurance, which had its origin in private enterprise, has attained its commanding position through individual initiative and courage, and has itself brought about the necessary changes and reforms which altered conditions have dictated.

It will be noted from the published report of the Woodstock fire chief for 1934 that there was ample insurance to cover all losses suffered in this municipality for the year. It is to say, a year when damage is relatively small, the protection carried on all properties involved appears quite large. Statistics for the province as a whole are quite different. With property loss last year estimated at $10,-140,144, there was $1,553,529 not covered by insurance, and this is an increase of $100,855. No doubt the pressure of hard times made it difficult to keep up the premiums in some cases, and the protection lapsed. It would seem false economy however, to attempt any form of abandoning a safeguard against fire loss, and in this connection Owen Sound Sun-Times comments:

"There is nothing but sympathy for those who because of the depression have had to drop their fire insurance, and some of whom lost all they owned through fire. Others who, though able to pay, take a chance and gamble that their property will be safe from the flames, are in quite a different category. They have only themselves to blame if they suffer heavy losses."—Woodstock Sentinel Review.

Evolution for India

"It is true that we cannot predict what will be the cost of evolution of democratic institutions in India. They may take strange forms unknown to us in Western countries. It may be that further experience will show that these forms of government are not so attractive as they appear. But there is no doubt that they have for the present captured the imagination of political India. We cannot leave the government as it is. It has been useful as a training in the arts of rule; it is marked 'provisional' in the constitutional lists. We must choose between a resumption of authority or an extension of self-government. The history of our Empire and its traditions point one way; in spite of risks and forbodings we are bound to follow it."—Lord Peel in Empire Review.

The Sweetest Smile

The sweetest smile I ever saw
Was on a weary face,
No look of doubt was there to flaw
The shining spirit's grace.

The eyes were dim, the lips were pale,
But yet a light glowed through
That showed a soul which would not quail
Whatever life might do.

That smile had not so much of mirth
Or gladness as of peace,
As though from all the cares of Earth
One heart had found release.

And tenderness and truth were there
No touch of worldly guile
Upon a face not young or fair
Dawned beauty with that smile.

The sweetest smile I ever knew
Was on a tear-stained face;
It came like sunlight breaking through
A lonely, shadowed place.

CANADA'S MINING HISTORY has many romances but none more interesting than that of one of the newest working mines which is now producing gold to the extent of $100,000 a month. In the early stages of this mine's history financial trouble threatened to stop all work and cause an abandonment of the property. A Canadian born business man of the United States became interested in the proposition and rather than see the property abandoned invested $800,000 in the property which carried the work along to a point of production and proved quantity of paying ore. What an example of courage and confidence in Canadian resources—risking a fortune to demonstrate faith in associates and confidence in his own judgment. Romance, smiles and tears, feature the history of mining from the earliest days. One instance which rises to recollection involved a promising prospect in Northern Ontario which held back its riches from the original promoters, wrecked a bank, sent a man to prison for a long term and caused the suicide of another. Those who seek the pot of gold at the foot of the rainbow must be prepared to wade through mud and blood, if need be, and assimilate tears as well as smiles. Life is a great game and those who follow the gleam seldom quit, but continue to follow it through good or ill fortune for the excitement of it if for nothing else.

REASONS FOR BEHAVING IN ABNORMALWAY

Introspection Points Out "Why and "Hows" of Abnormal Behavior

By Louis E. Bisch, M.D., Ph.D.
Famous Authority on Health and Psychology

(Copyright 1934 King Features Syndicate, Inc.)

If there is anything wrong with you body, it is easy to ask your mind to watch over the affected part and take care of it. But when there is something wrong with your thought processes, it requires a little practice and patience to be able to get outside of yourself in perspective.

Perhaps this explains why psychology was rather slow in developing and why only within the last ten or twenty years have the real big strides in this subject been made.

The distinct forward advance has been centered upon the causes of our thought processes—including conditioned mechanisms in contrast to the older studies which concerned themselves more largely with what people did and with the way they reacted, in other words, with the results of mental processes.

The mind specialist is always asking "why" and "how." He wants to know why an individual thinks and behaves in one way rather than another; how it happened that he developed along one path rather than another.

Although it takes time and experience, and a highly specialized training, to analyze any individual's thought processes thoroughly, we can, with practice, learn to observe our own reactions, thereby learning as well how to correct our faulty thought mechanisms.

For example, while it takes a long time—sometimes years—before some people realize that they are not thinking as effectively as they used to, or that their thoughts and feelings are in any scientific manner.

First of all, those who allow themselves to become over-solicitous about their own reactions often do not know what the normal reactions to say given stimulus are; in other words, they have never studied the fundamentals of psychology. If they realized just the way they are thinking and feeling is no different from the way others think and feel under similar circumstances, they would soon cease to worry.

People given to over-worry have not yet learned to consider themselves in an impersonal manner. It is something of an accomplishment to be able to step outside and view ourselves in a detached way, but it can and should be done.

Scientific introspection never upsets the equilibrium. All it does is to point out the "whys" and the "hows."

When once these are appreciated the rest is comparatively simple. For the mind tries to heal itself automatically. Give it half a chance adjustments it makes, all tending towards increased efficiency and greater happiness, are marvelous.

Wm. Kamp, Mayor of Belleville, Kansas. From the mayor of Belleville, Ps., the message reads as follows: "I am in receipt of your telegram of even date bearing the good wishes and congratulations of yourself and citizens towards us upon this century of peace between you and us and the mother country. You will convey to your people our warm appreciation of the sentiments of your message with the further assurance that our best efforts for a higher type of citizenship and the establishment of universal peace among the nations will be best subserved by the continuation through the centuries of the very pleasant and friendly relations that have heretofore existed between our people." Trenton Merchants Vote for Half Holidays for Four Months

All Stores Will Close Each Wednesday Regardless

Trenton, Feb. 15 (Special)—Trenton merchants will close Wednesday afternoon during the months of June, July, August and September, regardless of the legal holiday that may fall in the week. The merchants were unanimous in the opinion that the shoppers did not purchase if the stores remained open on the Wednesday if they had been closed on a holiday. This decision was reached at a well attended meeting of the Trenton Chamber of Commerce, which was held in the town hall on Friday night. President Cecil M. Newton was in the chair.

Much discussion, both pro and con, developed during the question of the formation of a credit bureau. The matter was left over until the next regular meeting. The various industries will be asked for their opinions on daylight saving and if they wish the clock turned back the Chamber of Commerce will likely ask the council for the necessary by-law. The question of the clock not be locked over to see if it is convenient for merchants to leave the blinds so that a clear vision may be seen into the stores in case of fire after hours. This decision was reached after a recent fire did considerable damage before it was discovered the flames. If the store blind on the door had been raised, the fire would no doubt have been noticed before much damage had occurred.

A committee of Messrs. W. R. McClung, O. Alyea and W. J. McNeil were delegated to interview the managers of the three banks in regard to staying open Saturday afternoon, but the managers do not seem to look into the matter, the Chamber of Commerce will take steps through the various head offices.

Messrs. O. Alyea, T. Jarrett and N. J. McNeil will report on the possibility of the opening of a street from the government dock on Annes street. The council will be asked to paint the signs at the easterly and westerly approaches of the town.

W. R. McClung, Worshipful Master of the Trenton L.O.L., asked the members of the Chamber of Commerce to co-operate with the lodge in the decoration of the stores during the visit of some seven hundred delegates who will convene in Trenton during the annual meeting of the Grand Lodge of Eastern Ontario. The members pledged their support and also will furnish cars for the visitors to inspect the various industries of Trenton during the convention. The Grand Lodge will meet in Trenton starting on March 18 and continue until the business is finished.

McClung proposed a toast to the Grand Lodge and officers which was responded to by Rt. Wor. Bro. W. C. Mikel. A toast to "our visitors" was proposed by Wor. Bro. R. D. Graham. Visiting Wor. BEFORE ILL-FATED DISASTER OVERTOOK U.S.S. MACON

The world's largest airship and the aerial pride of the U.S. Navy crashed at sea tonight and sank within ten waves. One hundred and ten miles south of San Francisco, and ten miles at sea, battered by storms, the mighty dirigible lost its day-long struggle with the winds. An SOS that electrified the Pacific Coast was flashed from the Macon. "Pulling," was all the SOS said. And then, a moment later, the single ominous word, "Wait." A few minutes later came the message: "We will abandon ship soon as we strike water. Crew calm aboard." Fortunately for the eighty-three men aboard the Macon, the U.S.S. Tennessee, the U.S.S. Concord, the U.S.S. Richmond and the main body of the U.S. fleet for San Francisco were at hand. They rescued all but two men from the fog drenched and night shrouded Pacific. Photo shows the majestic lighter than air craft as it neared recently over its home base, the hangar at Sunnyvale, Cal., toward which it was headed when the disaster overtook it.

A memorial service for the late Dr. J. As Seymour, former pastor of St. Andrew's Presbyterian Church was held on Sunday morning, the service being conducted by Rev. Mr. Walker spoke from the text "In My Father's House are Many Mansions" and stated, that although he did not know the late Dr. Seymour intimately, yet from conversation with members of the congregation he had learned of the high character of the man, he was prompted, his love for the congregation and his unswerving loyalty to the cause of Christ. He had also learned he was a citizen with a deep sense of duty and humaneness and was always ready to serve in any capacity. A Vigorous Shampoo is Also Good For Thinning Tresses

By HELEN FOLLETT

Hair comes and goes, like a gadding woman. Does a hail and farewell act all the time. When an old hair is done for it passes on, an understudy takes its place. When the new shaft doesn't sprout that means baldness. Oh—oh!

Don't worry if there is some shedding which is a natural condition. But if tangles look queer, get busy. Look after your diet. A diet deficiency" may be at fault. Hold your nose and take cod liver oil.

Do everything possible to stimulate circulation in the scalp. Shampoo frequently, because a clean scalp is likely to be in better health than one that isn't renovated frequently. If the shampoo is vigorous, it will serve as a stimulating treatment, for the hot oil before the shampoo, and apply a cold wheel over the finger wave is willing and you don't care what happens to it. Change the parting now and then. Brush that.

Rowing, bag-punching and Indian clubs will help reduce an oversized bust. If you haven't patience and time to take the idea of exercise, you can purchase a rubber reducing brassiere. If you do, you must remember that the flesh will be saggy, so use cold water freely. Add a little salt to the water and lightly with a rough towel afterward, apply alcohol.

Do you know that a twice weekly workout in a gym class will brighten your cheeks, your eyes and your view of this funny old world? It is quite so.

Lack of muscle flexing and stretching is often responsible for the gone-gray complexion, sick-looking hair and the don't care feeling. Good looks depend upon rushing blood streams, good digestion and a lot of other matters pertaining to the physical mechanism.

The girl who is too lazy to exercise needn't expect a blood to drain on the beauty budget. She'll need synthetic blushes and all the rest of the warts offered at the beauty works. Fresh air is cheap. Why doesn't she go get it.

A kind thought is that of the makers of a fine kilkie brogue type of shoe in white buckskin with black perforated designs. And the shoe comes a set of detachable buckskin spats, one in black and white and one in blue, so that the different fringed tongues can be pulled on to match different frocks.

For every type of smart evening occasion is the exquisite bag of sixteenth century Persian point lace-type frame in hand-worked leather threaded with silver. The clasp is set with synthetic rubies, emeralds and sapphires.

A real treat that you owe to yourself is one of the newest evening frocks with its own matching jacket. This is a lovely model in its grape-purple crepe with a fresh jacket all bejuffled. The jacket is in tulle of the exact shade as the frock. Amethyst clips and belt buckle trim the frock.

Just right for now and resort wear lacy, or resort wear now and home later on, is a fresh ivory satin with candy stick stripes in a giddy light blue, medium blue and white. These stripes are in heavy upholstery satin. The bodice is fine with puffs of folds of ivory satin held by a sapphire clasp, the flared skirt is billowy and full at the hem.

First in the trunk goes a splendid suit in a very light-weight wool mixture. The skirt is pastel blue, the top white and the jacket dark blue. The dress is cut to look like a skirt, and blouse. Tye scarf is of silk combining all three colors. Ideal for any type's holiday.

YOUNG OFFICE THRIVES
AMONG OFFICE WORKERS

Black-haired, tailor-made, highly intelligent, no visible makeup—that's a portrait of the girl to whom Washington is trying to fit Cinderella slipper.

She is Helen McCollam, the 25-year-old secretary to David C. Elliott, Chief of the Statistical Division of the U. S. C. Perhaps she would never have met "Bill" Dern, son of the Secretary of War, if Elliott hadn't been employed in that particular alphabetical branch of the Government service.

Bill is distinctly good-looking and the type to find favor with mothers who "dance the night away", and are to be found at cocktail parties with country clubs every afternoon. But as far back as two years ago, it was noised that Bill Dern did not belong to the "Debutantes' Delight" group, who wonder the dowagers cruel that the really eligible young men are not often to be found at parties, because they are too busy, and that the proper place for to find a worthy husband is in offices and not in the ballrooms.

This latest romance—the theme of every cocktail party in the National Capital—comes up one more match for propinquity. And Washington, with its new alphabetical bureaus teeming with young people all over its streets, and having a greater population than it had during the World War, seems to be the great matrimonial agency par excellence of the country.

Not that Helen McCollam wouldn't attract attention anywhere. She's that stunning brunette type—black-haired, blue-eyed—that suggests Irish witchery, and she has also the good luck to possess that is so refreshing in this strident age.

She lives at home with her father, whose name is not to be found in follows the trade of a bricklayer. She has a younger brother who is a student at Georgetown University, that Jesuit institution of learning which has furnished the country with some of its most brilliant lawyers, one chief justice of the Supreme Court and scores of outstanding athletes.

Bill Dern, as is expected, the Derns are pleased with the match, and what family wouldn't be.

"It's all right with us," the Secretary of War has said, "and the young lady will have to tell you the date of the wedding." Miss McCollam has only the usual two weeks' vacation a year to which all will be in early Spring.

And when someone asked her about her trousseau, she laughed and said she was too busy to give that a thought. And probably she won't be much of a trousseau. Modern girls are going in less and less for that tremendous array of clothes which are likely to be out of fashion by the season.

Piling cabinets, typewriters, reams of statistics, office hours these seem to be Cupid's most up-to-date properties. Does he know of the ball-room—which is the better proving ground for romance?

(By Rudolf Josten)

Berlin, Feb. 18 (AP)—Baroness Renate Von Natzmer and Frau Benita Von Falkenhayn were decapitated today as spies.

The double execution was announced officially at 2.50 p.m. (8.50 a.m. EST.) today.

Strict secrecy was maintained until the official announcement was made.

The official announcement said Reichschancellor Hitler declined to exercise his prerogative of mercy.

The two women were executed in the courtyard of the prison in which they had been held here.

Previous to the announcement of execution a high official in the ministry of propaganda said juridical circles "were expecting a reply from Munich at any minute." Hitler was in Munich.

"The juridical experts had met with Dr. Hans Frank, commissioner for justice, to consider the disposition of the cases of three other prisoners held with the two women. One of them was Baron George Romanowski, former Polish army colonel.

Romanowski was sentenced to life imprisonment. The same sentence was imposed on Fraulein Von Jena, daughter of a former general of the army.

Frau Von Falkenhayn went to her death under the name of her first husband; she had been known in Berlin society by her second husband's name, Von Berg.

Official Communique

The official communique told of the executions under the heading "The National Socialist State Crushes Treason." The communique said:

"The German Reich's people's court by verdict of Feb. 18 sentenced to death for betraying military secrets Frau Von Falkenhayn, nee Frau Von Natzmer, both of Berlin.

"Furthermore, the Polish officers, George Von Somowski, and Irena Von Jena, were sentenced to life terms in the penitentiary in the same charge.

"The verdict of Frau Von Falkenhayn and Frau Von Natzmer was carried out after Der Fuehrer and Reich's Chancellor (Hitler) refused a pardon."

CHILD HAS ONLY SMALL CHANCE TO SURVIVE

Born Without Esophagus and Being Fed Through Stomach

Newburgh, N.Y., Feb. 18 (AP)—Given only the smallest chance of survival, the tiny son of Mr. and Mrs. Ryland Lloyd of Middleboro, born without an esophagus, began his third day of life today as physicians worked to save him.

Apparently normal in all respects when he arrived at the Newburgh hospital, it was discovered the child was unable to feed. An x-ray showed the tube through which food is passed from the mouth to the stomach was missing. An emergency operation to permit feeding directly into the stomach was performed by Dr. James C. Donovan and Dr. Frederick C. Small. A small portion of the stomach was forced out through the wall of the abdomen and a tube inserted. All food thus far has been inserted through this tube.

Kilkenny, County Cork, Irish Free State, Feb. 18 (AP)—Two shorthorn cow owned by D. Horgan, of South Crinnaloo House, Kilkenny, has given better cows. All are normal size and apparently healthy.

ENGAGED TO THE BRIDE

Dear Mrs. Beeckman:

My niece is about to be married and has requested an invitation to the wedding also to the reception. Our son died just about two months ago. We still feel very much grieved as he was about to be married before he passed away. Will you please let me know whether it would be all right just to send a check and to send congratulations, and not to attend? We would not like to offend. How should such a letter be worded?

T.

I can deeply understand, and I am sure that your niece will deeply understand, that you would find it very difficult to attend this wedding. Please don't force yourself to go through this ordeal...no one would wish you to be so cruel to yourself.

First you would have to acknowledge the invitation. Judges feel it is a formal invitation, and so your answer should read:

Mr. and Mrs. Arthur Hill regret that they are unable to accept Mr. and Mrs. (Bride's Parents') kind invitation for Tuesday, the first of March.

You do not need to acknowledge the invitation to the church, but the acknowledgment must be acknowledged, in the same form in which it is worded.

Then, having made this necessary acknowledgment, you might write your note to your niece, enclosing the check. Your note might be worded something like this:

Dearest Dorothy,

I know that you and Tom and your family will understand why your uncle and I cannot come to the wedding. Our hearts are still too heavy with sorrow. Please know, dear girl, that we would come if we could, and that we want for you and Tom every happiness in the world.

We are also going to ask you for something very special. Instead of sending you a wedding present, we are taking the privilege of sending you a check, to buy for your new home something that you wish. Will you let us do this? We only remember that whatever you decide to buy will be surrounded with our love and devotion to you both.

We hope to see you very soon—perhaps you will be coming to have a minute, will you?

Dearest love, and every blessing.

Affectionately,

MARKING THE SILVER

Dear Mrs. Beeckman:

Is it considered good taste to have full length monogrammed?

If so, how many and which letters should be engraved?

S.

It is excellent taste to have fist silverware monogrammed. And the type of lettering and the design of the monogram should be appropriate for those should, of course, be artistically pleasing to the eye. The design of the silver. Some patterns seem definitely to call for Script letters; some others work block letters; some modern patterns, for modern lettering.

Usually three letters of the hostess' informal name are used in the monogram: Green Brown Smith uses GBS. A bride-to-be uses either the initial of her maiden name (the traditional custom), or the initials of her informal marriage.

Very often only the initial surname is used. This depends on the woman's choice, and on the pattern.

ANNOUNCING THE MARRIAGE

Dear Mrs. Beeckman:

1. I have been going about with a young lady and we have finally decided to announce our engagement and be married in about two months. Neither of us has our parents living in this country nor have we met each other's parents. Should I wait until the young lady has written to her mother and told her of our engagement, and then write at the same time?

2. As neither of us has any relatives in this country, and knowing that my fiancee would like to have a very quiet church wedding, what suggestions have you to offer, or do not such things appeal to be present nor to pay any of our friends to any trouble.

3. How soon after the wedding should announcements be sent out? Is it the custom for the couple to announcement "At Home after"?

4. All my relatives are in a foreign country. How should they be advised of my intentions? Should the young lady write to them even though she does not know them?

5. Friends of mine, who had planned my future for me, were disappointed when I begin to "keep company" with my bride-to-be. Why, I don't know. They never invited her to their home. Could you advise them, other than by having the young lady write them? Could I tell them when I speak to them on the telephone.

6. What initial should I have engraved on a silver set I intend to give her for a wedding present?

1. I like best the idea of your writing the girl's mother just at the time when she writes to them. You will, of course, send an important letter, tell them all the things that they will want to know about the man who is to be their daughter; your family background, your business and financial "prospects", your friendship with their daughter, now your plans for the future, and your love for them for the new home. Try to put yourself in their place, and include all the things that they will want to hear from you. And your fiancee should write the same general kind of letter to your parents, her letter also should be written before your parents. Her letter too should be newsy and full of friendly personal telling them all about herself and the plans for the future.

2. It is not necessary to be married in church, even if you do not have guests? You might have a best man, and your bride might have an attendant. You would go to the church for the arrangements as to time, the opening of the church, and so forth. For such a wedding you would both probably wear the traveling clothes in which you would go on your honeymoon trip.

3. It's the perfect idea to send marriage announcements to the list of you and your fiancee's relatives and friends. Have them all ready to mail—engraved, addressed, stamped—directly after the ceremony has been performed. Engraved marriage announcements should also be sent to your and your fiancee's relatives in Europe. If you are at the time the announcements are ordered, definite about the new home address, At Home cards may be enclosed, with the announcement. It is not necessary to send At Home cards, but it is thoroughly proper, of course, to do so, if you wish. And in your case, when so many relatives abroad will want to know your future address, this would be an exceptionally convenient thing to do. The best form is to have the At Home information on a separate card, to include with the marriage announcements. And when the At Home cards are sent with the announcement, the Mr. and Mrs. name is used. Like this:

Mr. and Mrs. Robert Parents Pall At Home after the first of March

Two Home Place

4. It is you who would write to tell your relatives of your approaching marriage, as the young lady would write to her relatives.

5. It is you too who would tell your friends the word of mouth, or by telephoning them, or by writing them.

6. I suggest that you consult with her as to the engraving and what initials she would prefer to have engraved on this set. The traditional thing is to have the initials of the maiden name engraved on the bride's silver after marriage, but it is proper for her to have her married initials if she prefers.

HOSTESS PROBLEMS

Dear Mrs. Beeckman:

A young Miss of sixteen years of age is giving a luncheon and bridge at a hotel. What sort of invitation should be issued to sixteen couples (all girls)? Should they be printed or written and what should their contents be?

2. Is it proper for an adult, parents or relatives, to chaperon this party

3. Does the girl act as chaperon, or does she assume all responsibilities, if capable?

4. Should gloves, when worn with evening frocks, be removed completely, or just taken off from the fingers and rolled back?

Constant Reader

1. Such an important party should be planned and done with great taste and care, and such a young lady should give the party with her mother as hostess. The date would be for the mother to write the invitations in the conventional note-paper, of as fine quality as she can get. This gives the party the correct beginning. The note of invitation would read something like this:

Dear Mary,

It would make Helena and me very happy if you would come to a luncheon and bridge on Friday, the first of March, at the Black Hotel. I am asking a group of Helena's friends, and we are most hoping that you will come. Luncheon is at half after one o'clock, in the hotel. Do say that you will come, and make us both delighted.

Dearest love from us both, and the happy anticipation of seeing you on the first.

Cordially yours,

Jane Robbins Graham.

2. Yes, as I said in the first answer, the girl's mother, or, surely if for some reason it is not convenient for the mother to be there, should be hostess of the party. She should be at the luncheon, to receive the guests and see that all wishes, she will play bridge. The girl is not supposed to be there to stay at the party to give it the background of having an older representative of the family present. The girl's guests will then know that everything is done with the charming taste that is so important to this kind of party.

3. The girl is co-hostess, not the principal hostess.

4. Gloves should be taken off completely, not turned in at the wrist.

How a Pale, Run-down Girl Became Positively PRETTY

In a Canadian city a certain girl consulted an authority who examined her, weighed her and tested a sample of her blood. She was found to be hemoglobin in her blood to be only 55% instead of the normal 90% to 95% for a woman. Her weight was 95½ pounds. With blood that was only 68% hemoglobin, it was only natural for this young woman to be pale and colorless, and to lack pep and energy, because hemoglobin is not only the coloring matter of the blood, it is also the precious element that carries the life-giving properties of oxygen from the lungs to every organ and tissue of the body.

What Her Advisor Told Her To Do

The authority instructed the girl to take Dr. Williams' Pink Pills daily, a pink because they have a pink sugar coating. She took them a day a month and return for another blood test. He knew the formula of Dr. Williams' Pink Pills and recognized their value and safety.

The next time this patient's blood had been so greatly enriched that the hemoglobin had increased 20%. Her weight had increased to 100½ pounds —a nine-pound gain. In the words of her advisor, She had a far more color, her face had rounded out and she was positively pretty. Her complexion had the glow caused by rich, red, healthy blood; her body underwent a proper development, your nerves had, your blood thin, your energy below par, like the tired girl and proven blood builder, Dr. Williams' Pink Pills. It's a genuine compulsion food-tonic and a builder of health and vigor. Your druggist has it—50c a package. Just

Current Attractions at Local Theatres

What Local Theatre Managers Have to Say About Current Offerings

AT THE BELLE
"We Live Again"
Anna Sten and Fredric March
in Outstanding Film

"We Live Again" with Anna Sten and Fredric March in its leading roles, will bring to the Belle Theatre screen, tomorrow and Wednesday, matinee and evening the first directorial effort of Rouben Mamoulian since he completed "Queen Christiana" with Greta Garbor last year. Mamoulian directed the plitturization of the Tolstoy novel under the new title for Samuel Goldwyn.

In its writing and in its technical production, "We Live Again" offers as much that is new and provocative as the great novel on which it is based did to the world forty years ago. Mamoulian believes that the real story of "Resurrection" has never been told in films. The trial, protest and rebellion of Tolstoy had never found its way on the screen. Picturegoers had never seen the bright color, the vivid pageantry of its religion, the superb grandeur of the russian countryside, the grayness and the horror of Tolstoy's prison camps, nor had they ever seen the paradise of mind and spirit and body to which he directed all his weary wanderers. And that, for the first time is what Mamoulian tried to bring to the screen.

"We Live Again" is Miss Sten's second picture in America; it followed the "Nana" in which she made her debut last year. Her co-starrer with Fredric March marked the third of a trio of pictures with the latter star to be shown throughout the country almost simultaneously. March's name part in "The Affairs of Cellini" is first, then with Norma Shearer and Charles Laughton in "The Barretts of Wimpole Street" and third "We Live Again" as his final work of the season.

Preston Foster, Marcelle Anderson and Leonard Praskin wrote the screen play "We Live Again" and Sergei Soudeiken created the scenic backgrounds and settings.

"Page Miss Plays On"

Life . Romance . Gaiety—the symphonies of modern life—are caught up in one of the most delightful college romances to come from Hollywood. Picture is "The Band Plays On", the second feature attraction at the Capitol theatre. You will find no famous stars, no big names in this entertainment but a group of fine and up-and-coming young players including Robert Young, Betty Furness, Russell Hardie and Stuart Erwin.

Besides there are those dependable artists, Leo Carillo and Ted Healey, Bill Robinson, Arthur Lake and Dorothy Livingstone completing the cast.

"The Band Plays On"

The picture is swift-moving, zippy and invigorating. It thrives with the college spirit, for it is a film of the college rather than of football, with a well-told love story directed scenes and with a well-balanced cast.

Scandale Colbert Leaving

The screen has shown nothing finer than "Imitation of Life". John M. Stahl's production drama featuring Claudette Colbert, Warren William, Rochelle Hudson and Ned Sparks, Fannie Hurst's "Imitation of Life" joins the Belle Latest News Flashes and a clever kartune in color, will be presented at the Belle tonight for the last times.

AT THE CAPITOL
"Wednesday's Child"
An Attraction Vibrant With Human Appeal

If you have courage and are willing to see yourself as your children see you don't miss "Wednesday's Child" a drama which opens today at the Capitol Theatre. If you have courage go anyway for this fine play will develop it.

In "Wednesday's Child" you will see the finest boy actor this side of that of the world's central stripling line twelve-year-old Frankie Thomas who last season stirred up blase old Broadway with his interpretation of the same role in the stage success.

This remarkable boy plays a lesser and more difficult part than is assigned to many adult actors of the stage or screen.

Little Bobby Phillips the central character of the picture sees his mother kiss a stranger, and when his father is away. His playmates tease him cruelly about his absent home in which the father and mother quarrel and sometimes fight.

There is a divorce with the boy awarded to his mother for eight months of each year his father to have him for the remaining four. The eight months pass and the boy, quivering with happiness, returns to his father, who had always been his pal. His happiness is short lived, however, for he learns that his father is about to marry again. His last illusion about parental love is thus shattered.

From his point the play goes on through mounting suspense to a happy ending.

Leopold Atlas wrote the original story Willis Goldbeck adapted it for the screen, and John Robertson directed the film. Kenneth Macgowan, who made "Little Women", was the Associate Producer. Karen Morley created the role, one perhaps the warmest, most vibrant performance of her entire career, and Edward Arnold portrays the father in an impressive and sympathetic manner. Other outstanding acter portrayals are contributed by Robert Sharpe, Shirley Grey, Howard Leeds, Westley Giraud, Julius Molnar, Dick Quine and John Roberts.

In conjunction with this splendid feature a number of short subjects specially selected will be shown at each performance, including Pathe's a fast moving comedy with the popular Dapper Dan Pollard; Screen Snapshots, showing the movie world at work and play; "Sandwich, a British Miniature Film, and Pathe Old Country lovers; "Little Boy Blue-ie", Terrytoon Cartoon.

"Du Barry" Dinnerware Tonight

Soup Plates will be given away. Complete Shows start at 2.30; 7.15 and 9.15.

A PROGRAM OF UNUSUAL

INTEREST FOR TONIGHT

Wrigley's for Monday night, Feb. 18, have prepared a program that will delight even more than usual.

Sidney Smith, the Wrigley tenor, sings "Oh Play to Me, Gypsy" and by special request will also sing "The Slumber Song" from Jocelyn. Smith's selection is the one that made Smith sang in the Atwater-Kent Hour, when he was accepted with the finest talent in New York State. In this competition, Sidney Smith won second honors, being presented with the Atwater-Kent silver medal and earning for himself a radio contract. The winner in this particular contest was the well-known Donald Novis.

Wrigley's all-string orchestra have an unusually good list of numbers. Among these will be "Thou Swell", "Am I to Blame?" "The Night is Young" and a number featuring Jimmy Hamaro, the expert on the xylophone, in "River Jordan Movement".

In to-night's program will be introduced Wrigley's new banjoist, Stan Laurel, who should make a name for himself on the Wrigley hour. He will be featured in "Flapjestic".

Marion Hockwell will delight her listeners with two beautiful songs, "Lover Come Back to Me" and "When I Got to Bed to Dream",

Fairbanks Rages Around London Station When Tour With Lady Ashley Discovered

London, Feb. 18.—Douglas Fairbanks, Sr., was cooling his ire in the salty breezes of the English Channel as he and Sylvia, Lady Ashley, headed for the Virgin Islands, first port of call on their world yacht cruise.

Apparently angry because his carefully laid plans to remain undetected were upset, Mr. Fairbanks was the leading player in tempestuous scenes—the station platform where they boarded the boat train as his stage—trailing any of his screen performances.

The actor seemingly was in a fighting mood. Three times he threatened violence, twice offering to punch the noses of any one approaching and once proposing to swing for the jaw.

With typical Fairbanks agility, he pranced around the station, dodging behind pillars and stands in an effort to keep far enough from his titled friend to prevent their being photographed together.

The golden-haired former London chorus girl, whose husband's divorce suit recently named Mr. Fairbanks as co-respondent, was much less perturbed. When she left her house just across the street from the private residence where he has been staying, however, she led her pursuers a merry chase around London's West End, driving some ten blocks before she stopped to pick up Mr. Fairbanks.

A policeman whom the indignant actor summoned to his aid at the railroad station showed only mild interest. He had to inquire of Fairbanks' press agent before he found out who the famous film player was. After that he sauntered slowly down the platform some distance back of the actor.

Lady Ashley smiled faintly as she patiently and calmly declined to talk about their trip, expected to last six months.

The movie player, whose divorce from Mary Pickford does not become final until 1936, has picked an itinerary that will take them to some romantic spots. Arriving at St. Thomas, Virgin Islands, the two will board Jesse Livermore's motor yacht Caroline for Hawaii, the South Seas and the Orient.

In their party will be Donald Ogden Stewart, author; Fred Astaire, dancer; Bennie Rubin, British film actress, and her automobile racing husband, Jack Dunfee, a mammoth gathering in Montreal, Feb. 25, of all religious bodies. It was told also of a move for a similar gathering now being arranged in Toronto.

The following local clergymen were present. The President, Rev. Dr. Semple, Rev. A. Beauchamp Payne, (vice-president); Adjt. A. W. Martin, (Sec.-Treas.); Rev. B. Howard, Rev. W. J. Walker, Rev. A. G. Sinclair, Rev. W. R. Merrick, Rev. T. H. H. Hall, Rev. McMullen, Rt. Rev. Bishop Marshall, Rev. W. D. Harrison, Rev. W. McArthur, Rev. C. G. Wright, Rev. Dr. Baker and Rev. Mr. Keough. The Benediction was pronounced by Bishop Dr. Lyons.

Tells of Trend In Modern Day

A meeting of the Belleville Ministerial Association was held in the Y.M.C.A. Parlours this morning with the President Rev. Dr. J. Semple in the chair.

Opening devotions were conducted by Rt. Rev. Bishop G. Marshall. Rev. A. B. Payne introduced The Bishop of Ontario, Dr. Lyons, as a special visitor to the Association, and also Rev. B. Howard, Principal of Albert College, who was welcomed as a member of the Association.

Rev. A. Beauchamp Payne, then presented a summary report of the week of Prayer Services held in January, and the financial report read by Adjutant A. W. Martin.

Reference was made by Adjutant Martin to a coming Evangelistic Campaign to be conducted by a group of Cadets from the William Booth Memorial College, Toronto, during the week of March 12-18, and a proposal was warmly endorsed that a night be announced for the united fellowship of all Christian people of the various churches.

The speaker of the morning, Rev. Dr. Ernest Thomas of Toronto, was introduced by Rev. Dr. Semple, who presented the Association with a very earnest address on the relationship of Evangelism to the work of the Christian Churches.

Dr. Thomas vividly portrayed the mental and spiritual attitude of the masses toward God in the present decade, and dug deep into the problem presented by the present philosophy of life as manifested by youth of this age.

During the course of a very versatile reasoning for his convictions, the speaker related the success of the recent "Joint Witness"

You can trust advertisements ..... and the companies that advertise. Because written selling is a pledge of faith. No established business can afford to put a wrong in writing. To advertise an inferior product is simply to hasten its failure.

Make the hard part of your shopping easy—as you sit in a comfortable chair at home. This newspaper reviews the shopping news of the day. Advertisements point the way to genuine bargains. They recommend variety for menus ..... they present the honest merits of products you need.

A few quiet moments, spent with the advertisements, will save you many hectic hours of shopping around. And when your buying is done, you'll find that you have reliable things, bought at fair prices and giving genuine service as promised.

NARROWLY ESCAPED DEATH

London, Feb. 18—(CP Havas)—Sir Edward Hilton Young, Minister of Health, narrowly escaped death today when a brick chimney toppled within a few yards of him. WATCH YOUR STEP

We are anxious to co-operate with the Ontario Government in the matter of Accident Prevention. The year 1934 witnessed approximately 500 people killed and 10,000 injured by Autos—many crippled for life—in this Province. Most accidents occur between 5 and 11 p.m. and drivers around 20 to 25 years of age are most frequently involved. Please drive carefully, especially on ice. Allow the other fellow plenty of room. Carry Auto Insurance, but above all—place your insurance with us.

TORONTO STOCKS

Toronto, Feb. 18—Industrial stocks waited almost in a dormant state until the U.S. Supreme Court ruling on the gold clause was announced at noon, after which prices firmed sharply to show gains of fractions to points within an hour. Volume was decidedly heavy for a while in the liquor issues and in other interlisted leaders including International, Ford A. and some of the oils.

Nickel, evidently due to its gold production, moved up above the 24 mark.

The bullish action of the industrial list was mainly based on the strong advance of the Wall Street market and arbitrating helped to swell the volume. After the first burst of buoyancy prices were lower at 1.30 than they were an hour after the decision was announced.

Distillers Seagrams climbed more than a point to 18½ and the other liquor issues added fractions.

TORONTO MINES

Toronto Feb. 18—The gold issues of the Toronto Exchange mining section shot ahead smartly immediately after the court ruling on the U.S. gold clause appeal was announced at noon. The rise being aided by covering by a small short interest. Gains up to $3 were boarded in the high price group in the first rush up and secondary golds advanced 10 to 30 cents but part of the gains were lost after the first hour.

The U.S. Supreme Court decision confirming the government's right to regulate the price of gold and the gold content of the U.S. dollar gave the mining list the best boost it has had in many months.

Dome advanced to $40, Lake Shore to $53, Wright Hargreaves to $9 and Noranda to $33.75. God's Lake, Siscoe, Pickle Crow, Little Long Lac and Reno held most of their gains in the mid-afternoon sell-off.

WALL ST. FINANCIAL

New York, Feb. 18 (AP)—Stocks spurted today following announcement the Supreme Court had ruled in favor of the United States Government's abrogation of the gold clause in private contracts. Bonds of the secondary classifications rallied with stocks.

Among Canadian shares, Dome, McIntyre, Canadian Pacific and International Nickel got up fractions to around a point. On the curb, Lake Shore rose 2, while Hiram Walker improved slightly. Dominion Government bonds ruled steady. Canadian funds were 1-32 of a cent lower at 99.71¾.

In the initial buying movement the stock ticker tape got several minutes behind floor dealings and prices were pushed up 2 to around 7 points before profit taking caused the advance to taper off considerably. After halving initial gains, the list again stiffened.

Gains of around 2 to 6 points were shown by Case, Santa Fe, U.S. Steel, Bethlehem Steel, U. S. Smelting, Chrysler, Johns-Manville, American Can, American Telephone, N.Y. Central, Pennsylvania, Union Pacific, N.Y. Central, Baltimore and Ohio, Allied Chemical, Howe Sound, Dupont, Cerro de Pasco and American Smelting. Many issues were up around a point or so.

CHIEF DESCRIBES ORANGE GROVE OF VERMILYEA

House May Have Been Farmhouse Once He Says

ONTARIO DESCRIBED

Vermilyea a Buyer For Fruit Exchange Co., Says Locke

Chief Constable Locke of Ontario, California, was still on the stand at three-thirty o'clock on Saturday in the Vermilyea murder trial.

Q. Were you present in Los Angles at any time for the purpose of identifying any person? A. Yes. There had been a commission held in that city for the purpose of identifying the accused held in the Los Angeles jail. Evidence had been taken at this time, it was explained.

Inquiry Commission at Los Angles

Col. Greer in taking the witness questioned him closely regarding the quarters of the Los Angeles building in which the enquiry commission had been held. The point of whether or not three men or four men had sat at desks at the time was on which defence counsel attempted to establish. Chief Locke could not definitely swear to the point, although at this time he said he had been in charge of Vermilyea. Quesioning disclosed that witness had paid little attention to these details.

Col. Greer: "When did you swear out a warrant for the accused? A. I did not have one.

Q. Then you don't have to have one to arrest a man? A. Not until later. Q. Then, when you went to the house you had none? A. No.

Col. Greer returned to the finding of the car of the accused.

Q. When you opened the car and found the bags and the check, then from the check you were led to communicate with Fontaine? A. Yes.

This contact had been made through an intermediary with Fontaine (the garage owner) on the same day, said witness.

affairs....IsjuceYE

Q. How many suits of clothes in the bag? A. One.

Q. How about clothing in the house. A. tThere were numerous suits—seven or eight.

Col. Greer: It seems to me that some one said he had some twenty suits? A. I have heard he had a large amount of clothing.

Caretaker Not Told

The only time the matter had been discussed with Caretaker Swayne was on the night of Oct. 4th, said Chief Locke. The caretaker was told nothing of the crime. Swayne had been quite frank and open all through.

Vermilyea lived on Fourth Street corroborated witness. He had a comfortable home and several acres of orange grove.

Orange Trees Old.

At one time the home might have been a farm house; now the city had been built out almost to it. The orange trees were of no decided value, they had become old. Orange trees, he added, generally live and bear fruit about thirty years.

Col. Greer turned to the economic conditions of Ontario.

"Ontario, California?" questioned Justice Jeffrey.

"Yes," agreed defence counsel, "we know what it has been like here lately."

Vermilyea's Home Town.

Vermilyea's home town was described as a typical average town with fruit packing houses, an electrical industry and other smaller industries.

Q. And the unemployment problem would be what percentage? A. There are and have been other places not so well off.

Taxes in Ontario, Calif.

Q. Taxes high? A. What do you want me to compare it with?

Col. Greed: The mill rate for instance. A. I'm afraid I can't.

Q. What chance would any person have of subdividing an estate like Vermilyea's and selling it? A. Not very much chance unless a very low figure was asked, answered witness.

The Vermilyea estate was within the corporation of the town.

Q. What chance would a man like Vermilyea have of getting a job like the one he had if he lost it in 1932? A. Not a very good one.

Vermilyea As Buyer.

Vermilyea was described by witness as employed as a buyer for a fruit exchange company.

The export business in citrous fruits had been marked by lower prices for the last few years. A discussion of the business o f fruit growing and shipping was given by the chief constable.

Market For Oranges.

Col. Greer suggested that in 1933-1934 oranges were a glut on the market. Witness did not fully agree with this.

Justice Jeffrey asked the witness qualifications regarding the business.

"I watch the markets closely," Chief Locke replied.

A brief afternoon recess was then called with the conclusion of the examination of witness.

Telegram For Los Angeles.

Russel Merefield, a Canadian Pacific Telegraph employee, Toronto, identified a telegram from H. W. Vermilyea to Mrs. J. A. Faulkner from Los Angeles, California. It was a Postal Telegraph message.

Defence raised the point as to the advisability of admitting it as evidence. The message which was the original and in the hand writing of the accused, was finally permitted.

TELLS OF TALK IN LOS ANGELES CELL

A.—No.

Q.—Had you ever seen this man before, or had he ever seen you before?

A.—No.

The charge on which he had been indicted was for the manufacture of illicit liquor, witness blandly informed the court. The capacity of the still he had owned was "not remembered" by him. The time he had carried on with the manufacture of the illicit product was placed by him at about a year.

Questioned on Liquor Plant

"Yet," charged Col. Greer in an effort to estimate the capacity of the plant, "you can't after running it a year, tell us the capacity of it?"

"The capacity depends upon the quantity of mash" easily explained Sullivan. But when finally pinned down by the repeated questioning of the defence counsel, the glib witness said it might average twenty-five gallons a day. A "certain" man he said, disposed of the product as fast as made. "And the more he sold, the more I made," said the witness.

Sugar for the still was bought by the ton, and it was the only product used to make the liquor, except for the yeast, it was further explained. "Out of this ton of sugar I could generally make about 100 gallons of stuff." Sometimes he bought one ton of sugar a month.

Sullivan's Business.

"So for one year or so you made liquor against the law?" asked Col. Greer. "Yes," admitted witness. He added that he finally stopped making it because his wife wanted him to. He stopped for a year and then started again. Then he was arrested, only ten days after he had started the second time. Witness did not drink, he made it understood.

Col. Greer: This 30-day sentence on the five charges you faced delighted you? A. No, rather I felt relieved that it was not a longer one.

Q. And when you had been lodged in the cell with this man, you were delighted to start a conversation? A. I was "elated", maintained the witness.

Col. Greer referred to the preliminary hearing: "You would have been delighted to have come up here and testify then?" A. "I would have come up if I had been asked," agreed the witness.

Says Not Asked to Conceal.

Q. Was there any suggestion made by anyone that you conceal your knowledge of this matter and that you had had this conversation? A. No.

Q. You might be called at this time a "surprise" witness in fact. Witness answered by the statement that he had told Inspector Gardiner of the conversation back in 1934. Under further questioning it was revealed by Sullivan that at the time the conversation had been held that Vermilyea had known nothing about what sentence, he (Sullivan) had been given.

"Then," emphasized Col. Greer, "at the time he told you that he would give ten thousand dollars to trade sentences with you, he didn't know whether you were in for murder or not?" A. No.

Q. You said you came in his cell with "elation"? A. Yes.

Q. What does elation mean? A. I felt grateful that a load had been lifted off my shoulder.

The cell in which the two men had conversed, according to witness was merely a detention cell. "Nevertheless, it was a cell from which a person could not escape," pointed out Col. Greer.

Q. After you had talked with this man you felt it your duty to tell the police officer of it? A. I did.

The question of why witness did not tell his cell mate what he was in for brought instant response.

"There was no reason for me to tell this man my sentence, I didn't want him to know that I didn't have the fifty dollars to pay the fine and had to take the alternative of thirty days."

Q. He told you all this in a burst of confidence, I suppose? A. That is right.

Says No Query Made

Q. And you come here and tell this jury that in all that conversation you said you had, he did not once ask you what your sentence was? A. He did not ask me.

Q. Yet you had done nothing to justify all this confidence? A. No.

Q. You told the officer of this conversation? A. Yes.

Witness said he did not know his cell mate's name until some time afterward. The name had then been learned when a police officer who had come to remove him from the cell had asked him if he knew who his companion had been. Then he had been told that Vermilyea had been arrested for suspicion of the murder of his mother.

Conversation Told Officer

"When I heard this," said Sullivan, "I told the officer that he might be interested in the conversation I had had with him. Then I told him."

Harold Vermilyea, lolling on the air cushion in his confined space, and with his one arm across the railing of the dock, sat seemingly unmoved. With his back in the direction of the jury, he did not once glance at the witness whose story ran so easily, and whose answers to the questions flung at him by the defence counsel were so quickly answered.

Sullivan declared that he had always been in a sort of neutral state or position with the police of the district in which he lived. There had been no suggestion of friendliness at any time, he was quick to state.

Further questioning by the counsel for the defence, revealed that with the fine of thirty days he had also been given a year's suspended sentence. The fine levied had been fifty dollars but he had been unable to pay this, he reported. Then he chose the thirty days 'in the can' The indictment against him sometimes carried as high a penalty as five years, he further elucidated. But leniency in his case had been given, owing to his plea of guilty and other circumstances.

Question of Terms

"And the ordinary, mill run bootlegger... what did he usually get when he came up?" questioned Col. Greer.

"If he was a fairly large operator, he generally got two to five years," said witness.

Defence through further questioning brought forth the admission from Sullivan that he had been hoping for probation when he appeared for sentence.

"That's what I want to know," replied Col. Greer.

Col. Greer at this point temporarily concluded his interrogation to request from Justice Jeffrey the privilege of getting some of the transcribed notes from the court reporter. "The witness spoke so rapidly when he told his story that I could not take sufficient notes," pointed out the defence counsel in his request to the Court. A further request that an adjournment at this point made until Monday was not allowed by His Worship. A brief recess for examination by counsel of the court reporter's notes was permitted and the jury then filed out.

With the recalling of witness Col. Greer brought out that point that in the conversation Vermilyea had with him in the cell the accused had said that he was "not a criminal and never was in his life" and that witness had also said "why don't you provide yourself with an alibi?"

This concluded the Saturday afternoon testimony after which adjournment was made by the Hon Justice Jeffrey until 9:30 o'clock Monday morning.

SOCIAL INSURANCE DELEGATES MEET

Non-Contributory Unemployment Insurance Not Planned

Ottawa, Feb. 18 (CP)—There was no intention on the part of the government to introduce non-contributory unemployment insurance, Prime Minister R. B. Bennett today told a delegation from the National Congress on Social Insurance now in session here. But if the Provinces so desired, the Prime Minister said, the Federal Government would continue to assist them so far as possible to discharge their obligations to the unemployed.

A group of 12 spokesmen interviewed Mr. Bennett, Minister of Finance, E. N. Rhodes, Minister of Labor, Wesley Gordon, Public Works Minister, Hugh Stewart and Solicitor General, Maurice Dupre.

Non-contributory insurance paid for entirely by the Federal Government, free hospitalization, medical, dental and optical care for the unemployed, large relief benefits, public works and a National housing scheme were among requests made by various spokesmen. Representatives of Trades Unions and Unemployed Councils from coast to coast were present.

"I realize," Mr. Bennett said, "That you have come here with the earnest desire to do something that will be of benefit to all." The government had no desire to hide behind the fact there were constitutional barriers to carrying out many of the proposals raised, he said, but he outlined the procedure laid down in the British North America Act to govern relations between the Dominion, Provinces and Municipalities.

Admitting full benefits of the Public Works programme launched last year had not yet been felt, Mr. Bennett said with improved weather conditions this work would go forward from coast to coast and it was intended to extend the plan but not on any elaborate scale.

A non-contributory unemployment plan such as suggested by the delegation would not be insurance at all in the real sense of the word but a dole, Mr. Bennett said. It would cost almost $1,000,000,000.

When one member of the party complained bitterly of the treatment of transients in an airport work camp at Raymond, Ontario, Mr. Bennett expressed surprise and promised to investigate. Regarding the plight of transients in Timmins, Ontario, as described by a delegate from there, Mr. Bennett said the Dominion Government was powerless to interfere unless asked to do so by the Province, Preference to returned men on government employment was requested and Mr. Bennett assured the delegation this had been a consistent rule.

"Do you suppose if there was anything we could do to help you, we would not do it?" the Prime Minister asked. "This problem has been our constant worry, day and night. I ask you to try and think of the limitations that are placed upon us. Try to realize how hard it is to keep this country going." If the country broke down no good would come to any person. The problem could not be solved overnight. It was common to all the world and progress was being made in coping with it.

Cock Fight Sequel In Sandwich Court

Killar was one of six men arrested during the raid. He pleaded guilty to building and maintaining a cock pit, His companions were released because the cock fights had not actually started when police appeared.

Magistrate W. A. Smith said he felt Killar was "a victim of the others—an innocent agent" and for that reason was imposing a minimum fine.

Marsh Air-Survey to Locate Missing Men

London, Ont., Feb. 18 (CP) —An airplane survey of a five-mile long marsh, situated between the water and construction camp "B" at Rondeau Government Park, will be made within a few days in an effort to locate Thomas Storie, 30, and John Steele of London Township, missing for a week.

It is believed possible the two men might have taken a wrong trail from Erieau to the camp and are lost in the dense marsh.

LIVESTOCK

Toronto, Feb. 18 (CP)—The cattle division of the Toronto Livestock Market moved away to an active opening today while calves and sheep were steady and hogs and lambs unsettled. Early prices on cattle were 15 to 25 cents higher.

Receipts as reported by the Dominion Livestock Branch were: cattle 1,880; calves, 130; hogs, 580; sheep and lambs, 560.

Choice weighty steers brought $6.00 to $6.50 with a few tops at $7.00. Choice butchers made $4.50 to $5.00 while good cows were strong at $3.00 to $3.35 for the majority of good and up to $3.50 on a few best. Fed calves held about steady at $4.75 to $6.75 cwt.

The calf division was steady at a general top of $7.00 and at $7.50 for tops. Common, light calves made $4.00 to $5.00. Sheep were also steady at $3.50 to $4.00 cwt. for good light ewes.

While feeling on the hog division was strong no early settlement was made. Westerns made the bulk of the lamb run and there were no early sales.

RATEPAYERS PASS TWO RESOLUTIONS

Meet to Discuss Matters Now Before The Council

A meeting of the Property Owners' and Ratepayers' Association was held in the City Hall, Saturday, Feb. 16, 1935.

The discussions were mainly on the subject of increasing salaries of City Officials, and also prohibiting the cutting and selling of meat on the market. The Association goes on record as against raising the salaries of City Officials, at this time, as there are hundreds of our citizens needing help and several citizens cannot raise enough money to pay their taxes and the property may be sold for default of payment. Our taxes are now 47 mills, but if the City Council purchase all that has been asked for, and also raise the City Officials salaries, where will the money come from except by raising the taxes.

In connection with the proposed by-law for prohibiting butchers from cutting and selling meat on the market, the Association is strongly against any such by-law, as several of our more unfortunate citizens would be very hard hit by the expulsion of butchers from the market. Mr. T. A. McMullen, who has been selling meet on the market for a number of years, has never yet been questioned on the quality of his meat, and has customers of years standing. Mr. McMullen in addressing the meeting claimed that it was said that the butchers on the market did not pay Business Tax. He informed the meeting that he had to pay $1.00 for the privilege of being on the market, $16.00 a year taxes, and $25.00 a year for his license. He also claimed that most of his family shopping was done with the merchants of Belleville. The meat was practically home grown, there was not cattle buyers, stock yards and wholesalers' profits, therefore he could sell at a reasonable price with good quality and every precaution was taken by him and all the market butchers in connection with cleanliness. All carcasses are covered with clean linen and protected from road dust. Not as some of the trucks drawing the merchants meat from the railroad are exposed to road dust and the elements. Mr. Clarence Thompson, also a market butcher, defied anyone to say that their meat was inferior to the meat coming from the packing houses in Toronto. Several members of the Association spoke in favor of allowing the butchers to continue doing business on the market.

The following resolutions were passed to be forwarded to the City Council.

Moved by Mr. J. H. Diamond and seconded by Mr. Goteau, "that the Property Owners and Taxpayers Association are in favour of the butchers selling meat on the market. Inasmuch as they are inspected and passed by the Department of Public Health. We would ask your honourable body to give due consideration to the amount of good these market butchers do for the poor of the city. The larger the market, the more money is spent with the merchants of Belleville, and we would ask your honourable body to enact no by-law, that would exclude these butchers from doing business on the Market Square."

Moved by Mr. Wm. Vanderwater and seconded by Mr. A. Calnan, "that we, the members of the Taxpayers and Property Owners Association, ask your honourable body to give serious consideration in reference to the proposal of raising the salaries of various City officials, while many property owners of the City are having their property and homes sold for taxes. It does not seem consistent to raise the salaries of City officials, whilst so many citizens cannot raise the means to even pay their taxes."

Socially Minded Kingdom of Sweden Also Studies Unemployment Insurance

Regarded as the most socialized nation in the world after Soviet Russia, Swedish governments, both conservative and social-democratic, have enacted successful unemployment insurance legislation. Dr. John R. Commons, formerly professor of economics at the University of Wisconsin, is the staunch advocate of unemployment insurance in the United States. Canada now has insurance scheme before parliament.

By MARIKA HELLSTROM
Central Press Canadian Correspondent

Stockholm, Sweden, Feb. 16—The Canadian administration, in common with many other nations, may be looking to the "democratic kingdom" of Sweden in trying to solve problems involving the same kind of reform that has gone on here quietly for years. Scarcely a week passed in recent months that the Stockholm newspapers did not note the arrival of yet another destinguished visitor, coming to inspect the Swedish state-and-privately owned railroads, electrical plants and telephone systems.

These scouts visited Stockholm to analyse the workings of the world's most stable money market. Here the innate conservatism of the Swedish people is seen at its best —speculation on credit, "playing the market," is curtailed by the law causing securities to be delivered and paid for the day following the sale.

The Canadian government has recently suggested reforms to follow along these lines.

Highly Socialized State

It is these observations and the great amount of social legislation which in the past 30 years turned Sweden into the most socialized state in Europe (excepting Russia) all without the aid of revolutions that evidently interests those nations seeking reforms.

In old age pension, sickness insurance and socialized medicine legislation Sweden is far ahead of Canada. Yet the question of unemployment insurance is a contemporary question before both the Canadian parliament and the Swedis "Riksdag".

Two Insurance Plans

It is the first time for Canadian legislators; the Swedish proposal has been up twice before. Back in 1926 a committee was appointed to investigate the possibilities of introducing such insurance in Swedish industry.

As to whether insurance should be voluntary or obligatory, the Swedish committee was divided equally. Since Sweden is primarily agricultural, and therefore somewhat similar to Canada in that regard, the voluntary insurance might seem the most natural. However, the proposal by the Social Democrats, the leading party in the "Riksdag", or parliament, is for a combination of the two systems. This scheme has never been tried by any other country and may mean pioneering for Sweden.

The "voluntary" insurance is open to any worker with a salary not exceeding a specific maximum, while the "obligatory" is restricted to reduce the risk for contributions of employers and the governments. Those engaged in private enterprise five months a year are disqualified, shutting out many small farmers and craftsmen. The "voluntary" form is often called the "Ghent system," after the Belgian city where it was first introduced in 1901. To-day the list of nations with voluntary insurance includes Norway, Denmark, Finland, Spain and Czechoslovakia.

The new Swedish proposal would keep membership completely voluntary, but provides that employers shall finance the cost of administering the funds. This may cause the curious example of an employer paying for workers who are not insured. Yet the typographical workers, a strict and strongest organization, has declared it has no need of unemployment insurance.

The state will also pay its share as in "obligatory" insurance. Benefit periods will be limited to 130 days or four months, a sort of compromise between the European average of 90 days and England's half-year term. Canada's present plan affords benefit for 78 days.

Colors Dominate Apparel In New Styles for Males

By Central Press Canadian

New York, Feb. 16—Just as there is expected to be a revolution in women's fashions this year, so also is there an upheaval in the garb to be worn by the mere male.

Male attire is now in the process of being radically changed—and almost any change in fashions for men is a revolution. And the changes are to be made all down the line, from sporting costumes to that male holy of holies, the formal.

Changes are anticipated that will make last year's styles as out of date as button hooks and celluloid collars.

For example, take the new evening suit. If you're like most men it will be difficult to imagine a formal in any color but black. What, then, would you think of wearing formal clothes in colors? Well, that's what is coming.

And, how about a nice tuxedo in powder blue Or, if you don't care for powder blue, how about one in light green, or canary, or brown? All these are coming in the fashions, too.

The New Wardrobe

How much the tailors and manufacturers believe in 1935 colors for men's styles might be gained from a study of the following list of suggestions adopted for the fashions of the future.

Formal Wear—Evening clothes in midnight blue with silk open vest has to match. A new "streamlined" tailcoat with a silk facing of colored pinhead dots.

Tux Informal

Tuxedos—Now regarded as informal, styled in powder blue, light green, canary or brown, the shawl edo is prescribed particularly for cruise and resort wear. The trousers in lightweight fabric remain black, but a sash has been added around the waist.

Sports Suits—These models are in fancy tailoring with shirred backs, yokes, full belts and other changes aimed at comfort. All contain broad cheeks.

Business Suits—Brightened up considerably, they contain cluster stripes and modernistic plaids. The more daring plaids are five inches square. Fabrics are in shetlands and cheviots. Shoulders contain less padding and coats fit more snugly around the waist and hips. The trousers are somewhat narrower at the cuffs.

Among the other items of wearing apparel involved in changes include the derby, which is coming in a variety of colors, and the line even has extended to the shoes, such as the midnight blue pump.

How Old Age Pensions Work Abroad: Systems Adopted in Other Countries

By MARIKA HELLSTROM
Central Press Canadian Correspondent

Stockholm, Sweden, Feb. 16—As Canada continues to discuss new forms of social legislation involving old age pensions it is interesting to observe what has been accomplished in Europe.

In Canada at the present time, old age pensions are controlled and operated provincially. All provinces and the North West Territories have pension systems in operation except Quebec and New Brunswick. The latter has the legislation passed.

Briefly, in Canada, the federal governments pays 75 per cent of the pensions paid by the provinces, the province and municipality the remainder. Persons over 70 years of age, with incomes less than $365 per year receive benefit. The maximumpension to an individual is $240 per year which is payable to persons whose incomes are not more than $125 yearly.

Probably the best known pension act so far as Europe is concerned, is the English law, put into effect 1908—27 years ago. All workers are insured by the government, one-half of the expense being paid out of national taxes and the other half by the community in which the insured live. By additional legislation in 1911 they were not only a pension at the age of 70 but are also taken care of should one become an invalid any time after reaching 16 years.

Denmark Old Age Law

The English system is young compared to the one it was modelled after—Denmark's—which became law in 1891, after a long struggle by the advocates.

The Danish law, first to adopt the principle of the state administering an obligatory old age pension, became the classic model for such countries as England, New Zealand, Australia, Belgium and France.

The Danish law differs from the usual pension system for government or private industry employees by paying the pensions worked according to his need, instead of on a fixed scale. Thus a man living with his children or already possessing a small steady income, receives much less than the worker who finds himself at 65 alone and propertyless.

Naturally the later a state adopts the pension system, the smaller the pensions to those advanced in years. Belgium, which passed such a law in 1920, will be 50 years building up an old age pension that can take care of all the populations.

The old age pension Germany introduced in 1889 is on a different basis. It is obligatory, but is not sured.

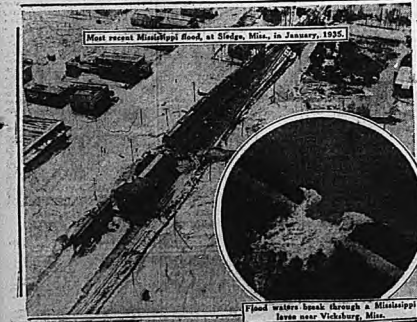
Women sewing garments in a home for the aged.

European old age pensions have been in existence for years, though countries like Belgium which enacted such legislation only recently will not have build up a sizeable pension fund until 1980; England has been insuring its workers since 1908, though Sweden and Russia are the only countries which provide public old age funds for all inhabitants.

financed entirely by the state. Employer and employee contribute equal amounts and the government gives 50 marks a year for each worker. This form was adopted in 1919 by Italy, Spain and Holland.

Sweden's Pension Plan

The only country to combine the Danish and the German type of pension is Sweden in its law enacted in 1913. Here as in the unemployment insurance legislation which also combines two systems (discussed in an earlier article), is seen Sweden's ability to learn from the mistakes of others, and not being afraid to strike out in a new direction.



From the German law comes the provisions that the expenses of the insurance will be borne by state and worker together. Likewise as in Denmark the pension-sum will vary according to the need of the in-

But what is most striking in this insurance legislation is that, so far, Sweden is the only land that has sought to build up a social security system for all of its citizens. It is not sh in England and Germany intended only for workers within a certain salary group.

From the age of 16 to 66, each Swede, no matter whether he earns $100 or $100,000, must contribute a minimum of 3 crowns (or 75 cents at par) a year to the fund. One may pay as much as 30 crowns a year, and the subsequent yearly pension will be at least 30 per cent. of the total sum contributed. This all-inclusive pension is one of the strongest links on the chain of social security legislation that has been enacted in Sweden for the past thirty years.

Old age pensions are now the concern of the United States and President Roosevelt is seeking ways and means of establishing such legislation.

"OLE MAN RIVER" ABOUT TO OVERFLOW ITS BANKS

"Old Man River, he don't say over before, if reports from Washnothin'." And "Old Man River" is ington can be believed. Millions the Mississippi and it is expected of dollars are needed to build to go on a more violent rampage levees and dams to prevent the within the next few weeks than river from overflowing its banks and flooding the country for miles around. Scores of lives will probably be lost, say engineers, if action is not soon taken. A repetition of the 1929 flood is feared.

Doyle Can Sing and Act— Next Query—Can He Fight

By BILL BRAUCHER
Central Press Canadian Sports Writer

Irish heavyweight Jack Doyle has been in New York for several days now... but still the boys don't know whether he's come to sing, sing or merely to circulate.

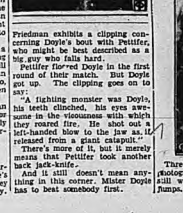
It seems established that he can sing, as John McCormack liked his voice. And that he can circulate there is less doubt, because he was off the boat not quite six hours when he was crooning to Peggy Joyce in a lower suite at the Waldorf.

He must be an actor, also, for he has a theatrical manager.

But that part about fighting must remain a subject of speculation—until he fights. Certainly, if he can fight, act and sing, Max Baer may as well ramble back to the ranch.

Record No Sure Gauge

You never know much about a heavyweight from Great Britain by his looks on his record, is the way they look at it around Madison Square Garden. It is said of Doyle that he has won 26 of his 27 fights, the one he dropped going to Jack Peterson on a foul. The fact that Doyle beat Jack Petitfer means little, and his victory over washed up Moise Bouquillon less than that.



Phil Scott looked good on the face of his British record, but in the ring over here he was not much, even with Jimmy Johnston being brave in his corner. The boys on that side of the ocean seem to move about in a different league. They just don't seem to understand.

Now Jack Doyle may not be a bit like Phil Scott—on the folding order, you understand—and still not a fighter coording to American ring followers who accepted Firpo, Schmeling and Paulino—and even Cagnera.

Mister Doyle may be out for an evening of good clean boxing, or he may get the idea immediately as Jackie Kid Berg did. Berg forgot his etiquette and fought.

"Fighting Monster"

Walter Friedman, one of Carnera's "discoverers," is Doyle's manager-in-chief, with Dempsey going along for the publicity.

Friedman exhibits a clipping concerning Doyle's bout with Petitfer, who might be best described as a big guy who fails hard.

Petitfer floored Doyle in the first round of their match. But Doyle got up. The clipping goes on to say:

"A fighting monster was Doyle, his teeth clinched, his eyes awesome in the viciousness with which they roared fire. He shot out a left-handed blow to the jaw as, if released from a giant catapult."

There's more of it, but it merely means that Petitfer took another back jack-knife.

And it still doesn't mean anything in this corner. Mister Doyle has to best somebody first.

BRITISH COLUMBIA STUDENTS OUT ON STRIKE

It used to be that children were accustomed to walking five or six miles to school. Now if they are asked to take such a jaunt, they merely go on strike. Above are a group of British Columbia students who refused to take a bus to school in the Cadboro Bay district near up in the vehicle. Parents claimed the bus was overloaded and supported their children in the strike. A community hall was commandeered by the parents and the services of a voluntary teacher secured, so that education is now being given on a "booting" basis Victoria until the school board or the parents give in. It appears to be an endurance test, for the school trustees will not provide an extra bus, and the parents won't let their children use the one that is sent. In the picture are seen the students. LEFT: is the voluntary teacher, Miss Dorothy Inglis.

Leafs Knock Rangers Off 5-1 But New York Comes Back To Take Detroit Sunday 5-3

Red Wings Practically out of Playoffs For This Season

BOSTON SHUTOUT

Cowley And Eddie Shore Tangle, With Blows Struck

(By Elmer Dolmage, Canadian Press Staff Writer).

Melville (Bulsh) Keeling, the well-known horseman whose stock will run all the tracks in the Ontario circuit and reputedly brings in more money to the Keeling exchequer than the Rangers contribute, has outridden mediocrity since New Year's to become a leading figure in New York's drive down the National Hockey League stretch.

The Butch is a horseman in a small way and, during his years of hockey service, only seldom had he jumped his way into the circle of the elite. He scored the goal, that brought Rangers the only Toronto victory of 1933, 1-0, and remote in overtime, but aren't present guessing at the jump he's made left winger on the Rangers rather than the rule.

But now the Rangers have spent the first bunch of energy on this year's campaign, and no boy is free more momentum will ca them along, the willowy she Keeling become the first-front. Most unorientationally to say the least, he has drifted without a pause to the first 10 goal-scorers in the entire league.

12,000 Present

While the Rangers were stumbling from the shock of a devastating Leaf attack on Saturday night in Toronto, Keeling found himself off a third-period goal with Earl Seibert's glance to spark a comeback attempt. The score was only 5-1, which was bad enough from a New York viewpoint.

Charlie Conacher scored two and Joe Primeau, Bill Hall and Pete Kelly one goal as the Leafs gained sweet, sweet revenge and, incidentally, kept pace with Montreal Maroons, who were beating Pittsburgh Red Wings 7-3. Thirteen thousand saw the Rangers humbled.

It looked like another drubbing for the Blueshirts last night when Lester Patrick drove his men into Detroit. The score was 3-2 for the Red Wings after the second period. Even Babe Adams had stopped pepperpot by that time that his fumbling brigade was ready to snap a streak of 11 games during which there hadn't occurred a victory.

Then, well it's up in the third period on a pass from Bill Cook. At the 3:45 mark in the overtime session Bill Thoms punched in a couple pass from the elder Cook and Frank Boucher and Cook had Keeling's goal-scoring total for the season to 15. Cecil Dillon's goal another tally, a little later to make the final count 5-3.

Detroit Humbled

Maroons, led by Herbie Cain, had far too much power for the Wings, however. Cain raped in three goals, Nick Cerosky got one and Art Robinson and Russ Blinoo one each as the big red team stayed right points for the Leafs.

St. Louis uncorked the most astonishing performance of the week-end in beating Boston 3-0 on Saturday night. Johnny Gottselig and Wes Saul Bill Cowley did the scoring and Cowley's second goal, added that final stone needed ending the game, signalled a bit of fisticuffs.

Cowley argued unsuccessfully in favor of having his goal allowed and when he and Eddie Shore had words about the matter the Boston "bad boy" flattened Bill with a punch. Manager Buck Boucher of the Eagles jumped over the bench and took a swing at Shore before the tiling ended.

The Bruins made a fine comeback Sunday night, beating the Hawks 2-1. Max Kaminsky and Paul Haynes did the Bruin goals in the second period after Mush March had put the Chicago five in the lead in the first. The Boston defensive system was too much for the Stanley Cup champs.

Montreal Canadiens drew farther away from New York Americans with a 3-1 win last night at New York. The Canadiens were 2 ways in front. Aurel Joliat and Armand Mondou scoring before Lorne Carr gave the single American tally midway through the third period. Leroy Goldsworthy matched it near the finish.

Consecon Carried Away Both Games With a 9-2 Score on Monday and Tuesday's games

Consecon Fishermen baited and hooked the East End Fishinos of Wellington in a league of fast skating and well matched teams.

After a scoreless first period, the respective teams opened up, and Consecon added the goals to a heavy bombardment.

Jake Steen, goalkeeper of East End at some fine work when the Fishermen closed in around his net and tried to give him the rubber.

The score at the end of the Wellington's favour 2-1 finally the red-shirted Fisherman manoeuvered and plunked a nice rubber drive in the net making the score 2-2.

In the overtime Consecon made their third and winning goal also maintaining the top rung in the League.

Jake Steen was struck with a hockey stick above the eye receiving a deep cut however he was very gritty after having very little time to recover he resumed the game and finished the play.

The teams:

Consecon— McConkey goal; defence, Phillips, Burris, Storms, Glenn, Gibbons, Sanders; forwards, O'Hara, Kizer.

Wellington East—Steen, goal; defence, Gibson, Sanders; Whitney, Reilly, Hoddinott. Subs: Carver, Harris, Archard.

On Tuesday night, at Consecon, the Fishermen and Bloomfield Grocers played one of the best games of the season. The game brought together two splendid defence men, Storms of the red-shirted Fishermen and Phillips of Moore's Grocery or in that vicinity.

Both defences stayed up well and if this game is any example of the play-offs; folks we'll see something good.

In the first period Storms scored two goals to Bloomfield's one. Bolle Pearson and Storms did some flashy checking but Bloomfield was equal to their charges.

In the last period the Grocers returned measure for measure and tied the score. Now the game was up and took when finally Phillips of the Fisherman seized the puck and rushed the tumultuous cheers of applause drove the doughnut in the net, thus winning the game.

Owing to the fact that the Gore Gobblers have dropped out a new schedule for the remaining games has been drawn up as follows:

Tuesday, February 19—Rose Hall vs Bloomfield: Consecon vs Hilliter.

Thursday, February 21—Consecon vs Wellington West; Bloomfield vs Wellington East.

CURRENT SPORT

(Day By Day)

"Providing the weather gets colder and the thermometer drops a few points the game will positively be played on Monday night" stated Eddie Wright, manager of the Peterboro intermediate "A" team to Tom Thomas during a long distance telephone conversation, relating to the Belleville at Peterboro intermediate game over the week-end. If the weather had not turn colder, however, goodness knows, when the game in Peterboro would be played. If there had been no outward signs of colder weather in the offing the O.H.A. Playoffs would stepped in and ordered this groun to be played Saturday night as at Oshawa, where artificial ice is available, street rumors hinted on Saturday night. There remain only two more days on the month of February, following which the winter weather is usually behind us. The weatherman seting fit to smile on the packsters. Never, the game at Peterboro will be played tonight unless otherwise ruled after noon.

Although Harold Farlow was appointed to officiate at the return Belleville-Peterboro game, there is hardly a chance of this referee flipping the puck when he locals take to the ice in the Little Lake City. The Pete were highly displeased with the work of Farlow in Belleville, while the locals want no part or part in the official during such an important game as the Belleville at Peterboro struggle. Farlow used to be a good referee in the old days, but of late he has been a little too fast for this slowed-up official. "Its seldom that local athletics kick or squawk regarding inadequate officials in any line of sports, except when such officials spark out of turn, as did Farlow after the Peterboro-Belleville game last when he is alleged to have admitted in the Peter dressing room, his lack of knowledge relating to the scoring of a local goal. There should have been little doubt in his mind, except for the fact, he was not on top of the play. The puck did, for a fact, cross the goal line and was therefore a well deserved and legitimate goal. Undoubtedly another referee is needed for the return game.

Weather permitting the Tweed-Napanee junior play-off series opens in Napanee tonight, with the return game being scheduled for Tweed on Wednesday eve. Incidently Sam Curry is quite confident of the ability of his proteges in the group play-offs, the Curry-led aggregation already having two wins over the Green-clad clan, this season.

During last Friday's duel win of local basketball teams at Napanee both the Deacon juniors and the intermediates are in first place in their respective groups in the O.B.A. The local Deacon kids have not sustained a single loss in six games played and could not be beaten out of a tie for first place even if they dropped their remaining two games. The intermediates are tied at 4 apiece, however, are in a much different position, they regaining first place by virtue of Friday night's victory. Tonight the "Y" aggregation face the locals last, when the sturdy R.M.C. "Cadets" come to town for a twin bill, their juniors meeting the Deacons, while the winner of the R.M.C.-Belleville "Y" intermediate game moves into sole possession of first place in the group standing; in other words the winner of tonight's game should about cop the group honors. The intermediate group of the E.O.B.A. has provided the greatest race of any league loop operate in this district in many years, four of the five teams in the loop still holding a commanding position in the standing. Both games tonight will be played at the Collegiate gymnasium.

Out in Peterboro the baseball moguls are apparently worrying over the future of the diamond game in Eastern Ontario. In a sport note published in the Peterboro Examiner on Saturday the following note, which is by no way minced or exaggerative, but to the point, the Little Lock City sport scribe says:

"A chap from Florida was talking to us the other night at a hockey game, and he said he loved the game ball. He told us that plans were afoot for a strong intermediate "A" O.B.A.A. loop consisting of Napanee, Belleville, Kingston and Gananoque, "They know better than to try to get Picton in against packed teams like that," he said. "Teams of senior calibre." This chap explain why the Alemites of Belleville have taken over the intermediate franchise there, and also why Ernie Gibson has such as yet committed himself as to whether his "A" team will step up this year—although it was supposed to have been the Orioles' title last summer. Well, it will all come out in the wash, and there might be quite a bit of dirty linen aired! One thing sure, the C.O.B.L. is not going to sit back and take it on the whiskers without doing a bit of rolling.

Just what our Peterboro contemporary means by "dirty linen" we do not know, but if all the rumors floating around are but half-way true, there maye bi more burprise than one longtime come to the surface.

Ralph Morden's "Y" intermediate hoopsters had a nice little grace-ful at the expense of the Cadet basketeers Friday on Saturday night when the locals won 41 to 27. The visitors failed to impress the first half, but outscored the locals in the last period, as the "Y" seized victory after a tonight's big battle versus the R.M.C. intermediates when the league leadership will be at stake.

Unless you hear from us before noon on Monday, the game will be played on Monday night"...was the latest message Manager Thomas received from Peterboro relating to the Belleville at Peterboro return O.H.A. fixture.

Jay Ferris, manager of the Canadiens, advised Maroons authorities today that the first game of the group finals would be played in Belleville or Peterboro, depending on the ultimate winner of tonight's tussle. Therefore a date for the locals meets a game here on Wednesday night.

'Y' SCORES AN EASY VICTORY

Defeats Camp Borden "Flyers" by 41-27 Count

Assuming an early-game advantage the Belleville "Y" cagers coasted home to an easy victory over the Camp Borden "Flyers" by the score of 41 to 27 in an exhibition game played locally. Although the visitors showed plenty of speed and combination in the initial half, they seemed rather weak around the basket while the Morden-coached "Y" aggregation sank a total of twenty points in their opponents' two in the initial frame. The "Flyers" opened up in the second stanza, while the homesters rested on their laurels and coasted home to a 41 to 27 victory. Ernie Gibson led the locals for a total of 14 points to lead all scorers of the night. Hall, Byrne, Langdon and McKell also played good ball on behalf of the locals. The local squad all turned in fine efforts, but were satisfied to take matters rather easily and save themselves for tonight's important E.O.B.A. game versus the R.M.C. team here.

GRILLS TEAM LOSES AT MADOC

Intermediates of Madoc Shake Off Losing Streak

Madoc— Madoc intermediate hockey team advanced another notch toward a play-off position when they snapped out of a three-game losing streak and defeated Grills' Garage of Belleville by the score of 5-2.

The ice was in very poor shape and play was ragged but teams constantly overskating the puck. Odell team work was practically impossible. Herb Henn and Hap Day were the pick of the losers while Percy Henderson, Ashley Alexander and Rulin turned in real games for the winners.

First Period

The game began listlessly with teams taking it easy. The puck rolling was not developed. With a change of forwards the play soon peppered up. Noble opened the scoring when a Henderson shot was deflected by the goalie. Belleville evened the score in the last minute of play when West left Hap Day standing and he scored on a pass-out from the corner by Henderson. Hap and H. Henn were serving time in the penalty box when goals were scored.

Second Period

Play opened fairly fast Henderson and Day missing good scoring chances. Belleville jumped into the lead when Ashley Alexander got a pass from Hap Day. Henderson and Ashley Henn released for rough play. Madoc continued to carry the play to Belleville but were unable to score.

Third Period

The third period produced the best hockey. Madoc began a drive to tie the score and succeeded. The third period began Akey knotted the count when he scored on a nice pass from Henderson, the puck glancing in the net off Bushard's pads Bill Henn was penalized for tripping Henderson. Madoc attacked but Belleville broke away for a thrilling one by Akey. Madoc again evened the count when Henderson stole the puck from Ethier and scored. Shortly after Bushard left the net and passed to Akey, who gave Bushard no chance. Mr. Dennis was banished for holding the puck and the homesters forged ahead on a nice combination play from Akey to Henderson. Bill Henn fingered Henderson as counter ice. Madoc added the last goal in the dying minutes of play when Akey banged in the rebound of Alexander's shot.

OLYMPICS STILL IN FIRST PLACE

Divide Weekend Schedule Defeating Bisons And Losing to Indians

(By The Canadian Press)

Detroit Olympics lost a chance to go two games ahead of their nearest rivals in the International Hockey League over the week end but still retained first place along locay.

They divided their week-end schedule, coming from behind to defeat Buffalo Bisons 4-3 on Saturday night and losing 4-1 decision to the Falcons in the Ohio City Saturday.

The Herd took a two goal lead mid-way in the first period before Detroit clicked. Jarvis and Cunningham counted for Buffalo and Ross Anderson notched for Olympics.

Art Peterson added another for Buffalo before the period ended and Cronin King scored for Detroit in the second, added another in the third and Moffatt scored the winning goal.

Falcons outscored London 2-1 in the first period of their set-to. There was no scoring in the second frame and Bud Cook and Roger Cramer added markers for the Falcons in the third, George Lever was the lone London scorer.

Nick Mets and Eddie Burke loomed large in the Syracuse victory over Detroit Sunday. Mets scored the first goal and Art Jackson counted again for the Stars before the first period ended. Anderson came through with the lone Detroit goal in the second frame and then Markle, Mets and Jackson scooped in the Stars' third counter, Markle did the scoring and assisted Jackson in scoring his second goal before the game ended.

R.M.C. CAGERS HERE TONIGHT

League Leadership Will Be at Stake in "Y" Intermediate Game

Not only will their game against R.M.C. Intermediates be the most colorful of any in the series to date but it will likewise be of paramount importance to the local Y. M. C. A. entry in the E.O.B.A. Tied for 1st place in the league standing with R.M.C. and Queens and with only two games remaining to be played in the schedule, the local intermediates have to take the Cadets this evening in order to avert elimination in the race for group title. Although the Association team have to their credit one win from Dr. Low's charges in the present series, it was by the very narrow margin of one point and in that particular game, the locals' goals were inspired by services of one of their outstanding players. Since that game Stevens has returned to the fold of the R.M.C. squad and it is safe to say that they will be a stiffer opposition than they were on the occasion of the initial meeting. A win for the Y. M. C. A. quintet will elevate them to the topmost rung of the ladder and with the full realization they are being weighed in the balance, the Campbell St. aggregation will not spare themselves in their endeavor to prove conclusively that they are a better team than the boys from the military college.

The Deacon Juniors will open tonight's programme at the Collegiate when they meet the juniors of the R.M.C. Juniors and as they have been the leading quintet all at Kingston, it is doubtful if the Cadet Juniors will be equal to the task when they meet the locals, the local Juniors to the group play finals on an unbroken string of wins. The league leaders have demonstrated conclusively they are the class of this eastern grouplas and unless they become careless in their play, Coach Laughlin's youngsters should go a long way in the Provincial series this year. Their opponents of tonight, however have shown a marked improvement in their play of late and an interesting tilt is in store for the fans who attend tonight's double header, the first game of which, we might point out, is scheduled to begin at 7.30 p.m.

AS IS ALSO VIRTUE TO TOP FLIGHT OF GOAL GETTERS

GOODWIN WINS—Tommy Goodwin sinks a putt on the 16th to win the Lake Worth, Fla., championship tournament.

HOGAN TRAINS—Francis (Shanty) Hogan, RIGHT, Bruins' heavyweight catcher, cools off after a workout at Somerville, Mass.

LOVE SCHOOL

By MARYSE RUTLEDGE

Faith was so relieved, so glad to see anyone she knew, that she clasped his arm. "Oh, Mr. Stevens—Mr. Stevens—" Her lips fluttered in and her white face.

"Steady, in distress, eh? Well, I'm the best tonight." At the sound of his laugh, she looked at him again. this time more closely.

"Don't be afraid. I'm not out on a bat little girl," he said harshly. "But you'd better run along."

"I have nowhere to go," Faith admitted suddenly. She must take a chance with this man, she thought, in desperation.

He stooped to peer at her. "Come on, then," he said. "This is a jungle and I'm out hunting tonight. There's my car—" He waved to a big sedan at the curb. "And here—" He slipped his hand in his overcoat pocket.—"Here's my gun!" He laughed once more. "Want to be in on the spoot?"

He wasn't joking. He wasn't drunk.

Faith stared at the blunt-nosed thing he had half drawn out of his pocket.

WIFE HUNT

CHAPTER SIX

She must do something, anything, to stop this madman. Faith gave whatever she couldn't hear her eyes upon the gun in Philip Stevens' hand.

"Please put that away, Mr. Stevens," she begged. "It's dangerous—" she stopped. Stevens gave a mirthless chuckle, glancing up and down the deserted street.

With an effort, Faith steadied her jangling nerves. "Do you think it's safe to carry a gun if you've invited to go out with you?" But her voice was pleading.

Stevens glowered at her, his thick brows meeting over his jutting nose. "Nothing out of course," he said harshly. "You might spoil my party. Well, if you won't consider me,' Faith retorted, "you might think of your wife. I'm sure she hasn't done anything—"

Stevens thrust his head forward. He looked haggard in the harsh light of the dashboard lamp. "Since you know so much," he muttered, "tell me where my wife is. I said she was playing bridge at the Colony Club. But a friend of mine saw her dancing with Bandini at the Casino. They actually had the gall to tell him they were making a night of it. Read them!"

Faith began again, but he had worked himself into another fit of rage. "I've been to nearly every joint in town. Even went to the fellow's penthouse. I almost caught up with them a couple of times. By God, if I—"

"There's no harm in their dancing," Faith argued desperately.

But Stevens was absorbed in his violence. Without paying any further attention to her, he strode toward his car.

Faith stared after him. Not safe to leave him alone.

"Mr. Stevens—Mr. Stevens," she called.

He turned frowning, his foot on the running board.

"You've got to take me with you," she cried. "Ronnal, I was awfully blue when I met you tonight." Suddenly her eyes swept slightingly to the door of the car. Dimly, Mr. Stevens' red face blurred into a spinning world.

"Stop in," she dimly heard him say.

But he had to help her in. "You need a drink." He stared ahead of him, gripping the wheel. "Well try Roberts. But don't say I didn't warn you, Faith," he grimly added. "If I see my wife and Barclay, you'll have to take care of yourself."

Faith prayed: "Don't let anything happen—keep Hunter away." She said meekly: "I'm not dressed for a grand place. Can't we find a quiet—"

"A girl like you needn't worry," he relaxed enough to answer.

It she could only keep him thinking of her! She cuddled closer, "I'd never worry with you. Life's funny," she went on. "Here you and I are, both kind of down—you know—not feeling so good. Just being together ought to cheer us up."

"Glad I can be of some use." His tone was bitter, but he patted her hand as he drove up to a narrow brick house with a wrought-iron door. Then his face darkened again.

With a sense of helplessness, Faith saw him pause to transfer the revolver from his coat pocket into the back pocket of his trousers. He hadn't forgotten. He wouldn't forget.

She had to force herself to walk quietly behind him into the night club. She dared not look up. At any moment, she thought, the music, and the chatter might cease. What would she do if Philip started to draw his gun!

Hunter and Mrs. Stevens weren't there.

She felt weak with relief as she sank into a chair. But the danger wasn't over yet. Philip had selected a table opposite the door, where he couldn't miss anyone coming in.

"Order anything you like," he said gruffly, and drawing a silver flask from his pocket, poured himself a glass of whiskey. Gulped it down straight. Nursing his rage along.

At his curt order, the waiter brought champagne, caviar and thin slices of toast with anchovies. He had wanted these things always, but now she took only a few sips and tried to dingle down her throat, gave her courage to look around.

She had dreamed of such a place. Soft lights, flowers, jewels. Well-groomed men and beautifully gowned women, who moved with an ease she envied. Their cool eyes passed from her to Stevens, and she became conscious of her black taffeta, the wilted spandie of her collar and cuffs.

"Having a good time?" Stevens was growing restless. He strummed on the table with his short, blunt fingers.

She wasn't playing up to him. She leaned forward, her cheeks pink from the wine, her eyes very bright. "Wonderful. Aren't you?"

He poured himself another drink. "You're a d—— beautiful girl, do you know it?" His ruddy complexion deepened. He laid his hand over hers.

Faith dared not draw away. Her nerves jumped every time the headwaiter moved to the door to welcome newcomers. Her will pushed back the picture of Gertrude Stevens and Hunter coming in that doorway.

Philip Stevens had brooded himself back in his chair, brooding again.

"We're having a real party, are not we?" she said quickly. "Let's think just of you and me."

"All right. Let's think of you and me." His eyes were hot upon her with a look she had summoned. Unhappy eyes trying to forget. "What next sir?"

"Nothing especially," she murmured. "Well, it seems a shame to waste all this when you might be enjoying yourself."

The light dimmed. A sensuous tango sent couples threading on the small polished floor. Tiny white Shoulders hardly moving. Faith saw again that cluttered room, and hating face. Agnes taunting: "The Princess doesn't even know the magic!" Oh, God, help her! Show why do people have to hurt one another so?

"What's the matter? Seen anyone?" Stevens half started up from his chair, glaring at the door.

"No—there's no one." She must wish him very much.

"Let's go," he said brungeuly.

In silence they stood again in the street. If she could hold on to him just a little while longer, the dreadful night would be over.

"Couldn't we drive out to the country?" she suggested. "I've always wanted to go to the country after a party."

"One more place first." Suddenly almost roughly, Stevens put his arm around her, as if he were using her as a shield against pain.

Faith let her head rest limply on his shoulder in the car. He was only playing at being a playboy. He must have suffered a great deal to be so dangerous because he wasn't really cruel. It was all Hunter's fault. Gertrude goading him on. Gertrude leading Jim Hunter—

The next place was small, practically empty. A Blues droned and moaned from the orchestra.

Loose-lipped tangle-haired woman crooned at the piano.

Stevens had two more drinks. Faith nibbled at a cheese sandwich. There were bluish circles under her eyes. Her lips felt heavy when she smiled. She couldn't help thinking of her own problems. Where would she go when it was safe to leave Stevens?

He wouldn't need her much longer. Hardly a chance that they would run into Hunter at this hour.

"I've had enough." Stevens said suddenly. "Come on. I'll get you a country or anywhere you like."

But she didn't want to go to the country now. What was the use when he would be better safe at home, if she could get him there? Then she would slip away—oh, to some place—

They walked to his car, arguing. "Why not?" he kept on saying. "It was your idea. I know a dandy inn near Greenwich. We can have fresh eggs and country sausage."

"I'm awfully tired." If only she dared ask him for the price of breakfast and a bed. But he hadn't seemed interested in her troubles.

"Come on now," he urged. "A little spin will do us both good. You're a—" He broke off, staring over her shoulder.

His stillness was like a storm in the air. His face glared, crimson, distorted with passion. His fist clenched.

It had come when Faith wasn't ready, when her guard was down. She turned very slowly.

Hunter and Gertrude Stevens were sauntering toward them, the two lovers on a country lane. They must have come out from one of the clubs farther up the block.

Hunter carried his head over his arm. The carnation glowed in his button-hole. He lapered from the shoulders, slim and distinguished in evening clothes and top hat. Beside him, Gertrude Stevens, in a short white satin wrap and a furlong white satin gown, seemed to float her dark head held like a queen.

Why didn't they look where they were going? Why didn't they feel the danger!

Faith tried to cry out, to warn them, as they drew nearer. But her throat was choked with panic.

"I'll fix him, the—" Stevens muttering, clasped his hand to his pocket. He had the gun almost out.

Except for those two unaware of danger, and with all her strength clutched Stevens' arm, pulling down.

"No—no—you shan't kill him," she panted. "I won't let you blame it down as her.

"Don't you understand?" she cried frantically: "I love him."

A WILD RIDE

CHAPTER SEVEN

"I love him." Faith wasn't conscious of saying it again and again. Her voice seemed a mere echo to Stevens' maddened brain. He pushed her away, staring at her with contempt.

Hunter Barclay and Mrs. Stevens were at last of some disturbance ahead, had quickened their steps.

Gertrude Stevens' face showed her voice in horrified recognition. Then it turned to protest to the pavement. The long white satin draped about her magnificent body seemed to cling to her in terrified, contrasted marble.

Hunter moved in front of her as Philip Stevens broke from Faith's hold and whipped up his gun.

Faith caught her breath with a little moan, flinging herself blindly between the two men. Suddenly mouth tightened, his eyes narrowed as he sprang, reaching her to thrust her aside.

"Why didn't you let me?" She was sobbing.

"By God, Faith, you mean it!" Philip hurled. His hand on her wrist, pulling her forward, his gun still moving the other way.

For a second they stared at her. Gertrude with story question, Hunter with a puzzled interest in his dark blue eyes.

"You damn fool!" When he spoke, Hunter's voice was low, contemptuous. He looked at the girl go, and stop frightening Gertrude to death."

A strange savage hunger glibbed in Philip's bloodshot eyes. "You can thank the girl for saving your life. She's given me a better idea for getting rid of you."

Startled, Faith looked at him. He seemed quieter but no less dangerous.

With an unexpected movement, he released Faith's wrist, and edged up to his wife, with a muscle of his revolver pressing against her skin. "I regret, my dear," he said grimly, "that I won't have the pleasure of your company this evening. But you will be in my car."

Gertrude shuddered. "You're mad, Philip. Do you want a scandal? Do you want to disgrace us all?"

Philip's laugh brought fear. The situation had gone beyond her. She felt him turn toward her in his chance. Turned gangster. Philip with your talk of ridin'!" he sneered. He was watching Hunter, to direct Philip's anger back to himself.

"If you do as I tell you, you may get clear from this ride." There was an odd quietness in Philip's tone. "Walk to the car, sir dear," he ordered Gertrude, prodding her with his gun. "And don't think I won't shoot if your boy friend doesn't behave."

Gertrude's cry for Hunter for my sake, do what he says.

There was nothing she could do. Faith realized with a sickness as Gertrude Stevens stood. She was more deadly this way than at the climax of his passion. Hunter evidently agreed with her, for he shrugged in temporary surrender. "Very well, Stevens," he said drily. "No, not in the back, Barclay. You are driving this thing, sir."

Thanks for the asking, but considering that his new discovery is merely in the nature of a postscript to his original discovery, and seeing that only 13 men in the whole wirk, are said to be able to grasp the meaning of his original discovery, I hardly think I'd better undertake to explain his new discovery, pop said, and me said, Now Willyum, why do you delibritly put yourself in an inferior catiegory? For hours, without apparent fatigue, Tarzan followed Olga's trail. He believed she could not reach the town on foot in less than two days. Suddenly he heard a distant locomotive's whistle and knew the railway was again in operation.

His keen ears heard brakes applied. A few moments later he knew a train had stopped, started again, and was going south. Continuing on the girl's trail he found it ended at the railroad, showing she had boarded the train, just as he thought.

He decided to follow on to Wilhelmstal, hoping to find Gernswolf there, possibly also the girl, and recover his diamond-studded locket. Night when he reached there, he loitered on the outskirts getting his bearings.

He wondered how an almost naked white man could explore the town without detection. The place was well guarded; unclothed as he was, it was almost impossible to enter and search it. Yet only a moment was lost against the ape-man.

'Human Element' Between Campbell and Success

By RAYMOND R. COLLETT

(Central Press Canadian Writer)

New York, Feb. 16—When Speed Monarch Sir Malcolm Campbell points the nose of his blue chariot down the white - racing strip on Daytona Beach, in his effort to raise the land speed record of 300 miles per hour, all that will stand between him and success will be the "human element." That is, in effect, is what the British speed king has said.

"Possible?" he echoed when asked if he thought his rebuilt Bluebird could travel at that speed. "It is not only possible but distinctly probable. Moreover I feel confident that the car could go much faster than that if I cared—or rather let me say, if I dared to throw open the throttle."

All the length that the strip of racing sand gives Sir Malcolm for high speed driving is ten miles. "306 seconds allow room to open her up," he shrugs. "If I did—" Theoretically the rebuilt juggernaut is faster than her counterpart which set the present record of 272 odd miles an hour, but how fast she will actually go if pushed to capacity neither Sir Malcolm or anyone else will ever know. "After all," the 50-year-old 'pilot smiles blandly, "I have a certain interest in staying alive."

Only Sir Malcolm Lives

It takes a brave man to enter the cockpit of a huge racing machine such as the Bluebird and send her seven tons hurtling along the beach, seeking new records. Five men have driven more than 200 miles an hour but only one—Sir Malcolm—is alive today. Even at low tide the natural speedway at Daytona is only 300 feet wide. The slightest deflection from a perfectly straight course while hurtling through space at more than four miles a minute, and the Bluebird with its driver would finish piled up among the sand dunes. The tall, cultured Englishman is not unaware of this, nor does he fail to realize that in spite of the most modern improvements in the new steer machine he could do nothing to avert a crash should a slip occur during the trial.

"Dangerous? Of course. But necessary. Someone must make tests in order to produce improvements. The racing beach is my laboratory and I consider my tests have a real value to the motor industry".

Many New Changes

It is seven years since Campbell first came to Daytona, pitting his skill and steel nerves against the dangers of super-speed driving. He says that each succeeding attempt has taught him something of value. The last record breaking jaunt over the measured mile carried a lesson which is reflected in the new edition of the Bluebird. It is wider, built out over the wheels; it is longer and the huge tail fin which is as much a balance and assist in keeping the monster on a straight course is slightly lower and more vertical. The car is more radically streamlined double rear wheels replace the former single units; air brakes—useless of course at anything like record breaking speed, but a valuable addition in the pilot's opinion under certain circumstances—have been installed. Last of all an air intake shutter across the flattened snout can be closed by the driver to give an additional 15 miles per hour to top speed.

That will be just another thing for Sir Malcolm to solve, the closing of that shutter. He must push a plunger in the cockpit to secure this advantage, and pushing anything with a roaring demon like the fast-travelling Bluebird in charge will not be simple.

Built Car Himself

The Britisher is not merely a driver, but is a technician of the highest order. He built the Bluebird himself and knows every square inch of her mechanism. He knows all about the pressure of wind resistance to his machine, the terrific strain on tires burning against the sands at abnormal speeds and he knows the danger that he must face travelling down the mile course. A black oil line, marked in the sand directly up the centre of the course will be his guide Flags, a mere blur once he is on his way, show where the ocean waves lap the shores.

A slight bump, an unexpected stone, a small drift of sand or puddle of water, an unseen flaw in a supposedly perfect tire, and nothing the helmeted figure crouched low in the body of the seven-ton monster could do would avert tragedy.

Deeply all this he is not a daredevil. He trains like the most highly strung athlete. His nerves are steel and he is trained to perfect co-ordination of mind and body. If he were not he might drive himself to destruction in the most perfect car.

"Thrill? Oh yes, in a way," he says, "but the real thrill is in preparation and retrospection. One hasn't much time during the run, you know."

Strangely enough there is little discussion on this occasion of an attempt to beat the standing record; 300 miles an hour has been set as the objective. Sir Malcolm believes it is already assured.

Socialized Medicine Has Firm Hold In Sweden, Where Fees Are Very Low

Socialized medicine is firmly entrenched in Sweden. State clinics, hospitals and sanitaria, provide medical care that is termed the most inexpensive and among the best in the world. Most physicians

By MARIKA HELLSTROM

(Central Press Canadian Correspondent)

Stockholm, Sweden, Feb. 16.—The introduction of socialized or state medicine into Canada as has been many times urged, would be even more revolutionary than unemployment insurance and old age pensions.

Sweden listen with astonishment to the tales of Canadian and American hospital experiences, where the doctor's fees alone amount to a third of a year's salary of a Swedish policeman, and the patient's entire bill sometimes takes years to pay.

They find it impossible to believe in a medical system that costs so much for the average individual. In their own country socialized medicine an old established institution.

Such a scheme has been often proposed for Canada, but as yet no action has been taken and the prime minister has declared the matter up to the provinces.

Several plans are being drawn up in most Canadian provinces for health insurance which is in fact operation except in small areas where experimental work is being carried on. Manitoba and Alberta seem to be leaders in this respect.

In Sweden the newly graduated young physician usually has no thoughts of starting in private practice. Nor does he find work in a private hospital, for there are few.

Swedish Physician's Income.

Stockholm, the capital, has only eight small private hospitals and clinics, all of which are modern large state-supported institutions, twelve small ones, and four Polyclinics belonging to the city. There are also hospitals in each of the 24 counties of Sweden, as many more in other cities and towns, all state-supported.

In one of these the young physician may be employed as assistant for eight of ten years before he considers private practice, if even then his salary varies from 100 crowns some of which date from the 1750's are the finest in Sweden.

There is probably no group of physicians in all Europe which is as proud of its intensive training period — eight years — and of the Swedish state hospital system. While in Canada, medical men consider it a rare privilege to pass at least one or two years abroad, in Vienna or Berlin, the Swedish physician seldom thinks of leaving his own country to study. To him even Vienna seems unimportant compared to the old Carolinian Institute, in Stockholm.

Sickness Insurance has been established in Sweden since 1891. It is not the obligatory kind which began in Germany in 1883 and found its most inclusive organization in the English law of 1912. The Swedes have retained free choice. But the government continues its subsidizing activities even here and contributes about one million dollars yearly to the various voluntary sickness insurance funds.

Regular Insurance.

If a fund gives help to mothers at childbirth, the government contributes an extra sum. Otherwise the system is modelled on strict insurance lines, with premiums beginning at three crowns a year and benefits of four or six crowns a day for a three-month sickness period each year.

The present form of socialized medicine in Sweden was established during the sixties and seventies. Of all the social legislation in Sweden it is the most far-reaching and admirably out of the older systems.

Sweden's tax burden shows the effect of its governmental activities in so many fields. It is savvy, in some cases, taking more than a third of the income, and inheritance taxes are 50 per cent. But the majority of the Swedes seem to like it, for there is no sign of discontent. At the last election the Social Democratic party gained a surprisingly large victory.

in Sweden set up private practice only after eight or ten years of state medical practice.

RECONSTRUCTION SYSTEM NEEDED

C.C.F. Secretary Says Battle in Politics is For Socialism

Toronto, Feb. 18 (CP) — Reconstruction and reform of the capitalist system is the objective of the Co-operative Commonwealth Federation and the battle in Canadian politics is not for capitalism but for socialism, David Lewis, national secretary and leader of the Saskatchewan section of the party, told an audience here last night.

Outlining C.C.F. policies at a mass meeting, Mr. Lewis said a study of the party's aims is "our Canadian Bible shall not be made cannon fodder."

"The C.C.F. says that in the event of war Canada must remain neutral; that in the event of war the C.C.F. will use all the means in its power to prevent one Canadian youth being offered as a sacrifice to the god of war," he declared.

During the war-time emergency of 1917 the government conscripted men for military service and he didn't see why now the instruments of production could not be similarly conscripted. To the owners of machinery of production the C.C.F. would allow sufficient money to maintain them and further compensation would be decided after the war against poverty, Mr. Coldwell said.

"Pets" a pleasure. None of this standing out on a cold veranda whistling vainly for Fido — providing you even countenance Fido's mingling with the common herd. They now have silent dog whistles that sound like a steaming water kettle. And they work like an alarm clock.

If you don't like dogs to get up on the furniture — and even the bluest of bluebloods will do it simply sprinkle a little antipoulize around and Fido won't go near it.

But if all these modern inventions still leave you cold—and you still want a dog for atmosphere, here's the last straw: Buy a newspaper, turn to page 1010 and a little winding-up effort you can hear a dog that is house broken, yet which nods its head, wags its tail and barks furiously. Not satisfied with an already long list of outstanding achievements, this aeroplane, the only all-metal tri-motor in use in Canada, is writing more history under the expert guidance of Pilot Grant McConachie, of United Air Transport. In 1928 this big machine rescued Baron Gunther con Huenfeld, Capt. James Fitzmaurice and Capt. Now it is blazing new trails in northern Canada carrying out perishable cargo from the Buffalo Lake Post, Smith, to Conchaan, Alberta, quick shipment to Chicago and New York. McConachie is one of Canada's outstanding norther fliers.

INSURANCE BILL IS APPROVED BY HOUSE BY 101-0

Unprecedent Situation on a Major Government Measure

11 CLAUSES PASSED

Special Committee Set up to Study Housing Scheme

Ottawa, Feb. 19 (CP)—Based on average employment figures for the 11-year period, 1921 to 1931 inclusive the actuarial structure of Canada's unemployment insurance scheme is believed strong enough to stand the test of another depression.

In explaining the long study of statistics which preceded drafting of the bill Prime Minister R. B. Bennett last night said a date for next session of Commons he believed the government had hit upon a safe medium between undue pessimism and undue optimism.

"These figures have been framed in an honest effort to avoid," Mr. Bennett, "which, it is believed, will be an adverse factor against the fund as it would be possible to conceive under ordinary conditions. We would be unwise if we projected ourselves into the future with a mind that was fearful and on the other hand we would be unfair if we dealt with the matter with a mind that was hopeful."

In arriving at the basis for the scheme the results of the two censuses of 1931 and 1931 along with figures of employment maintained by the Dominion Bureau of Statistics and records of strikes and lockouts kept by the Department of Labor were used.

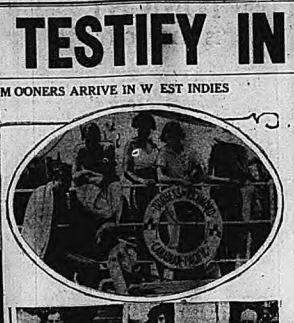
The bill received its second reading yesterday and some 11 clauses were approved in committee of the whole today. It will be passed further through committee. On a recorded division not a single member voted against the bill. The vote was 101 for and none against, an unprecedented situation on a major government measure.

Would Stand Court Test

One member wanted to vote against the bill and to be recorded "no" which led to the recorded vote. He was Jean-Francois Pouliot, Liberal member for Temiscouata. When the vote was taken Mr. Pouliot found the Conservatives with whom he was paired was not present so he could not vote. He explained that he supported the measure because he believed it illegal, and unjust, unsound because based on figures of unemployment for 1931 whereas conditions were entirely different in 1935.

Had Henri Bourassa, Independent Conservative member for Montcalm, a vote would have been registered against the bill for in a speech last week he declared his opposition.

Mr. Bennett in the final speech of the debate on second reading yesterday affirmed his right to make war within the competence of parliament and would stand a test in the courts to argue it if necessary be a provincial matter as no Province of Canada could make a measure. It was a matter of national concern one on which the only voice was the people of Canada was through Federal Parliament not through Provincial Legislatures.



No estimate could be made of the size of the staff required to administer the Act, said Mr. Bennett. He admitted it might run to 2,000 people although this would not mean new employees as the staffs of the present employment service offices would be taken over.

Yesterday the House, on motion of Mr. Bennett, set up a special committee to study a housing policy for Canada. The motion follows a resolution presented some time ago by T. L. Church, Conservative member for Toronto Spadina. The committee has instructions to study the housing problem and provide for improved housing in both urban and rural communities, of giving employment, and of finance.

PARLIAMENT TO OPEN WEDNESDAY

Norman O. Hipel of South Waterloo to be The Speaker

TORONTO, Feb. 19.—(CP)— In opposition for three decades. Ontario Liberals will return to the government side of the Legislative Chamber tomorrow afternoon when Hon. H. A. Bruce, Lieutenant-Governor, opens the first session of the Province's 19th Legislature.

Full complement of the Liberals who under Premier Mitchell F. Hepburn captured 66 of the 90 seats in the Provincial general election of June 8 will not be present. Two of them, D. Paul Munro from South Wellington and Theodore Legault from Nipissing, have died and two others, D. J. Taylor of North Grey and Earl Hutchinson of Kenora resigned to take other positions.

All the seats have been filled but Nipissing and a by-election is scheduled for next month to choose a successor to Mr. Legault who died suddenly in January at a meeting in the Oshawa Council Chamber. The desk he was to have occupied will be draped in mourning for the opening.

In by-elections Liberal strength was increased because Roland Pelkerson was elected on the straight Liberal ticket in North Grey to succeed Mr. Taylor who ran as Liberal-Progressive. The party standing is: Full complement 66; Conservatives 17; Liberal-Progressives 3; U.F.O., C.C.F. and Independent one each.

It may be the last time for several years that an Ontario Lieutenant-Governor will make the traditional journey from Government House, Premier Hepburn has indicated he will not permit a vote for the maintenance of his official residence.

Although the customary speaker's reception has been cancelled through the Government's desire to economize the opening promises to be as popular a social event as ever and the supply of admission cards has been exhausted.

The oft-time custom taken by United States soldiers, when they raided Old Fort York in 1813 will add a touch of drama to opening day and it will be carried by the new Sergeant-at-Arms, Capt. Walter Rayfield, V.C.

After Norman O. Hipel of South Waterloo has been elected speaker the Lieutenant-Governor will read the speech from the throne. Contents of the document are being kept a close secret and there has been no indication what Legislation it will forecast.

The cabinet met all day last Friday and again Saturday afternoon, putting the finishing touches on legislation the Government intends to introduce.

FIVE YEARS BEHIND

Toronto, Feb. 19—(CP)—Ontario is five years behind in its audit of corporation taxes, Premier Mitchell F. Hepburn said today and the government through a careful check on collections hopes to increase revenues thereby more than $1,000,000.

Further re-organization of the treasury department is underway and three chartered accountants have been placed in important positions in the corporation tax branch. The three are Philip T. Clark, C. P. Morgan and O.F.L. Gardner.

To make way for the new men three officials of the department will be dismissed but the Premier did not reveal the names of the ones to go.

EQUALIZATION OF INTEREST RATE HEPBURN VIEW

Toronto, Feb. 19.—(CP)—Premier Mitchell F. Hepburn said today there is "some merit" in the proposal of Mayor Camillien Houde of Montreal for a National Loan Board in Canada.

Speaking at the Canadian Club here yesterday the Montreal Mayor suggested the creation of such a body to pool all government debts, equalize interest rates and provide a sinking fund to deal with debts incurred in relief programmes.

"There should be equalization of interest rates," Mr. Hepburn said. "The less able a municipality is to repay its debt the higher is the rate of interest."

Dr. Etherington of Kingston Refers to Osteopathic Practice

Chicago, Feb. 19 (CP)—"The aspirations and demands of Osteopaths for licensure on the same terms as physicians demand no consideration" stated Dr. Frederick Etherington of Kingston, Ont., today addressing the Federation of State Medical Boards of the United States in conference here.

Dr. Etherington, Dean of Queen's University Faculty of Medicine, said he and a colleague who visited four leading United States schools of Osteopathy examined the "graduates of these institutions could not be admitted to practice on the same terms as graduates of medical schools of the United States and Canada."

Previously the conference heard from Dr. Charles Gordon Head of New York the prediction that 60 percent of the medical practice in thickly populated states would be in dispensaries and clinics 10 years hence.

The New York medico said: "It is apparent that the voluntary hospital system is in the process of breaking down by reason of the inadequacy of funds derived from philanthropic sources."

Control of Cultists

Dr. Charles R. Parkham, secretary of the State Board of Medical Examiners of California at Sacramento, urged a uniform standard licensure of physicians be adopted by State Boards to control "cultists."

Giving the conference his conclusions with regard to Osteopathy Dr. Etherington claimed he had found virtual testing of membership at the bedside of the sick "grossly, even lamentably, inadequate," at Osteopathic Schools and that colleges visited.

"At the largest school," he said, "the building devoted to hospital service is old, dirty and in a state of disrepair. Instead of modern laboratories of medical education," he said, "the laboratories courses were given in manipulation."

Place For Experts

He asked: "What dire calamities would immediately and inevitably befall our great centres of population if their supplies, food, water and their sewage systems were operated not by men who had devoted long and arduous years to mastering science, but by those unmasculated, misinformed individuals who believe disease to result from pressure of bony irregularities upon the nerves."

This question he said demands frank answer from politicians who "fasten to disease theories for votes of a clamorous minority."

Miss M. Kelso Tells Court of Remarks Made by Mrs. Vermilyea

RINGING OF BELL

Witness Swears She Heard Footsteps Climbing Stairs

Evidence dealing with the attack on Mrs. Aurelia Vermilyea, 78, and the arrest of her 49-year-old son Harold, two days later in Ontario, California, was related at the fifth day of the son's murder trial today, along with detailed identification of clothing and articles found in the California home.

A beginning was made in the reading of transcript of evidence of witnesses taken by Commissioner at San Bernardino, California, before Mr. T. W. Duckworth, who had been appointed a commissioner for that purpose, but the reading was halted for the time being.

Police on Stand

Chief Constable Alex Kidd, Inspector Hamar Greenwood, (now O.P.P., and Miss Mary Kelso were the first called this morning.

Within three hours after the discovery of Mrs. Aurelia Vermilyea in a dying condition on the floor of her daughter- on Bridge Street East, her injuries being the result of an alleged hatchet attack, contact had been established by the police of Belleville with the police of Ontario, California, the city police of Police testified.

After an adjournment on Monday, owing to the illness of four of the jurors, suffering from influenza, Court on the trial of Harold W. Vermilyea, resumed on Tuesday morning.

Vermilyea entered the court room at 9.30 o'clock. Carefully groomed dressed in his usual neatly pressed blue serge brown suit, and suave and poised as usual, he took his seat in the prisoner's dock and after a brief survey of the court room, settled back on his air cushion, arm resting on both railings as he lolled at ease.

Stained Hair on Blade

Chief Alexander Kidd of the Belleville police force, first witness called under the questioning of Crown Attorney R. C. Donnelly, told of the night in question and of subsequent to the scene of the assault shortly after 7 o'clock. The hatchet given him that night was described by the Chief as having blood and matted hair on the blade and certain figures on the handle. The hatchet had been "handled with paper" during the examination.

An envelope, marked as Exhibit 29 was produced by Chief Constable and identified. It had been previously read by the Chief and was the same shown jury earlier in the trial. A warrant sworn out for the arrest of the accused was produced and identified.

Cover took the witness.

Q.—You made no personal examination of the house?—No.

Q.—Officer Lund brought this hatchet in—do you remember how he held it?—I don't remember.

Q.—Evidently he didn't carry it by blade? A—No, there was blood on it.

Care For Hatchet

The hatchet was put on some paper in the police station and later taken away by Inspector Greenwood.

Chief Kidd could not tell if the congealed blood was human or otherwise, and to the best of his knowledge the hatchet had not been handled by the handle.

Col. Greer referred to answers made by previous witnesses where it was said he had handled it by the handle.

Issue of Warrant

Q.—Since then you have had time to think it over? A—I just forgot about it.

The approximate time of the issuance of the warrant for accused Harold Vermilyea was on Oct. 30th, 1934.

Q.—It was in the afternoon? A.—Yes.

He did you instruct officer Locke, of California, to arrest Harold W. Vermilyea? A. I requested him.

Q. How soon after you got back to the office did you do this? A. I'd have to refer to my records.

Q. Didn't you send a message that same night? A. Yes I wired.

Communication With California

The first telephone communication was made with Chief Locke next day.

It was sometime on the 5th the wire was sent requesting the apprehension of accused, but no hour could be fixed by witness.

Q. Now soon after the accident, did it occur to you Harold Vermilyea might have been implicated? A. The same night.

Q. Before midnight? A. It was.

Perhaps by eleven o'clock suggested Col. Greer.

A. About half past?

Q. Did you have any discussion with Miss Mounteney?

This question was objected to by his Lordship.

Witness told of wiring all border points after which contact had been established with California. Telephone communication, to the best of his recollection was not made with Ontario, Calif., until October 6th, about 9 o'clock. Before court adjourned for the noon hour messages had been sent.

Edition of Newspaper

Roy Norman Stubbs, a Mail and Empire reporter, and superintendent Toronto, recalled October 5th and placed the time of the "one star edition" of the paper as being on the streets at 12:35 that morning.

All three editions of the paper that morning carried full headlines telling of the attack of Mrs. Vermilyea, and witness.

Inspector Ransac Gardner, of the Provincial Police Department, Toronto, on the night of Oct. 4th had been at his home when news of the attack on Mrs. Vermilyea at Ontario had been received by him at midnight. He proceeded to Belleville at about 2:45. He had then proceeded to the scene and made an examination. This was carried on by flashlight.

Foot of Blood on Lawn

On the lawn of the home she saw a spot of blood about 2 or 3 inches wide. This was about two feet from the steps where the blood was fresh but had congealed.

Mr. Urquhart produced a hatchet.

Q. When did you first see this? A. After arriving in Chief Kidd's office. Witness told of the blade being covered with hair and blood. A piece of the scalp of accused was produced.

Today the jurors appeared in livelier spirits than on Saturday.

HYDRO PAYS OFF $15,000 ON DEBT

Debentures of $7,000 and $8,000 Ordered Paid

On the first of March, Belleville Hydro Commission will pay a debenture for $7,000 due March 1st, 1936, and also the additional one for $8,000 which would be due in 1936.

The decision was made at the regular meeting of the Commission last week.

The balance left the Belleville Hydro system to pay of outstanding debentures is about $23,000 and it was stated that the Hydro could pay this off with money on hand were it disposed to do so.

The debentures taken up by the local system so far (not including the $7,000 and $8,000 just ordered to be paid) have been as follows:

March 1, 1930	$ 6,000
April 15, 1930	36,000
August 31, 1930	34,000
February 28, 1931	6,000
June 30, 1931	31,000
August 31, 1931	6,000
February 29, 1932	6,000
February 28, 1933	6,000
August 31, 1934	9,000
Total	$156,000

The debentures yet to be paid will be those for the years 1936, 1937 and 1938.

So far the Belleville system has paid off eleven years ahead in spite of increases and the consequent increase in the system and three reductions in rates, it was pointed out.

The advance payment of debentures has saved the consumers many thousands of dollars.

The payment of $8,000 due March 1st, 1936, and now ordered to be made on March 1st, 1935, will save the consumers $1,000 in interest. The interest between 4 3-4 per cent which the debentures carry and the current rate of bank interest, which is at present two per cent. This debenture is paid four years in advance.

The plant was bought in 1928 and has been thoroughly modernized. A conservative value of the system at $250,000 stated Mr. O. H. Scott, manager.

A charge following a drunk-Blackhorse drove to the police station to report the incident locally.

A transient giving his name as Walter F. Coughlin of Chatham, N. B., was taken into custody by local authorities last night and charged with begging. Appearing before Magistrate E. J. Butler, K. him on the hands shank.

Hatchet And Wounds

Later, on Oct. 5th, the hatchet had been given witness by local police. It was taken to the undertaking parlor, where lay Mrs. Vermilyea and comparison made of the wounds on the head to compare. The cuts in the arm were the same width as the hatchet. The wounds on the head also equal the same length as the blade," witness related.

Sample of Hair Taken

A small lock of Mrs. Vermilyea's hair was given witness by Dr. Stobie. Later the hair and hatchet were given Dr. Fralick. This was on Oct. 6th.

After the hatchet was given Dr. Fralick, it was taken to an identification bureau, Toronto, where was examined for finger prints. None were found, said witness.

Came Dr. Fralick to Belleville next to Dr. Fralick it was in the same condition in which he had received it, except for some white powder on the handle, the Inspector maintained.

Time of Plane Trip by Gardner

Witness left for California on Oct. 8 by train. He left Toronto 8.30 a.m., arrived in Chicago 9:30 the same day. On the train he had met the colored porter, Lenard. He got off at the 63rd St. stop in Chicago, and proceeded to the Municipal Airport. Here he boarded the plane for Los Angeles. He landed at Glendale in California shortly after 6 o'clock Monday morning. There was one change of pilots at Albequerque.

Time From Glendale

From Glendale he drove to Los Angeles in a taxi. On the train and the plane were Fred Whitney and one other.

Witness went to Ont. Calif. that evening of the same day.

Questioned by Crown Prosecutor Urquhart brought the statement that three officers from Toronto were necessary for a train trip from Los Angeles to Chicago by the Santa Fe line. This trip would be three days and three nights by train from Toronto.

Articles Given Witness

On his arrival at, Ont. Calif., several articles of clothing and even a club bag and suitcase were given him by Chief Locke.

Q. What else, A. A cake of soap with a hotel label upon it, cards with "Made in Canada" labels, a pair of scissors, a needle and spool of thread. The clothing was a blue suit and a top coat. All the articles except the exhibits were identified by the police witness. Witness had given them over to the stand. A careful scrutiny was given by the inspector.

Spots Pointed Out

As the articles were given a careful scrutiny by the be-spectacled witness they were handed to Justice Jeffrey. "Have you a magnifying glass?" Mr. Urquhart was examined closely and carefully. Witness pointed out sewing of the side pocket in the coat was pointed out.

Q. Did you notice that not have the small holes in the legs when you left? A. Yes. Witness had on dark-colored stains on the lower right leg also when the police were pointed out by witness. Other articles of clothing were a pair of socks, shirt and a top coat. These were produced and identified.

Given Dr. Fralick

A second top coat, shirts and neckwear were also in the baggage, held in Chief Locke's office. Dr. Fralick received the articles. The coat was identified. It had been purchased in the U.S. of accounts. These articles were given him on Oct. 7th by Chief Locke, just prior to the time he left by train to Canada.

"Anything else you recall?" questioned Mr. Urquhart.

"I think I've told you now", Justice Jeffrey "You say these trousers were not in the same condition when you got them Dr. Fralick? A. They had passed out of my custody to Dr. Stobie.

Objection Raised

Other articles of clothing were also given Dr. Fralick.

Witness first met accused on Oct. 6th when he had been under arrest. One - - the first moves made by the Inspector was to meet Chief Locke, interview several people, go to the Holiday Avenue garage where he received a card from the garage owner, Mr. Pontelan.

Defence raised an objection at this point over the admissibility of the garage card and claim check on the ground that the originals had not been identified.

Garageman to be Called

Prosecutor Urquhart suggested deferring the examination of the witness until the evidence of Pontaine could be taken.

Questioning shifted to a new point.

A sheet of paper received from Mr. Swayne, caretaker of accused's home, by the Inspector, containing names and addresses was identified by him.

and had agreed to come back, said witness. They left Los Angeles on Oct. 17th.

Q. What time did you give these articles to Dr. Fralick for examination. A. Oct. 8, Sunday, 31st.

Search of Buildings

Q. Did you search any of the other buildings of the accused. A. Yes, a hatchet of the same type as the one exhibited in court. This was not brought back.

Col Greer took the witness, but at this point a recess for the jury was declared by His Lordship.

Spectators Coughing

Constant sniffles, coughs and sneezes from the packed rows of spectators today disturbed the usual quiet and stillness of the hearing making it one of the noisiest days yet.

Col. Greer resumed his questioning of Inspector Gardner. Vermilyea was being held in a Federal jail, said witness which prompted defense to wonder why. Extradition proceedings were taken by the British Consul in Los Angeles. Witness had been in California 9 days.

Q. Accused waived extradition? A. Yes. The waiver had been signed and was in possession of the Inspector.

Request For Time

Q. Everything was carried out with all due expedition? A. Yes. Vermilyea wanted five or six days to fix up some of his affairs, he added.

When accused came back, he was put in a police line up at Toronto. This was held in a special room. He was with 12 others in the line-up. Two of these were about Vermilyea's size, the rest were bigger men.

Q. Danzinger (the taxi driver) did not recognize accused? A. Not positive.

Q. How did the others identify him. A. They walked up and down the line—a couple of times each.

Vermilyea was fourth man from the left in the line. None of the men were placards. The taxi driver identified accused turned to the chief and told him he was the fourth man. Accused had chosen his fourth place himself.

Justice Jeffrey: See one witness identifies this man, they are not in contact with the rest. A. No. They go out before the next one comes in.

Q. Did anyone pick the man as the one? A. I don't recollect.

Anyone saying the eighth from the right.

Result of Line-up

Danzinger was unable to identify accused, defence counsel established. Witness, the hardware clerk, was also not sure of his identification. Vermilyea when first seen by witness was in a gray suit.

Witness was present with the finger print man at Toronto, when a search was made for prints "But none were found, not a finger print or one on the handle or elsewhere," added witness. When the hatchet had been given him it was wrapped in newspaper.

Defence shifted to transportation. Planes, it was stated run on an independent schedule of the trains. Witness had been forced to wait 2 hours for a plane at Chicago. The elapsed flying time to Los Angeles is 14 hours.

Defence brought from the Inspector that Swayne, caretaker of accused's home had been absolutely frank in all things connected with the investigation.

Evidence by Commission

Mr. Urquhart at this point introduced certain letters by witnesses before a commission held at San Bernardino, California before Mr. Thos. W. Duckworth who had been named a commissioner for the purpose of taking evidence of witnesses. Defence was not satisfied that such evidence should be brought in the case, but did not press his objection.

Mr. Donnan then read the finger evidence contained in a report of the commission. This finally was handed to the court which will have the evidence given by various witnesses in examination. The matter was temporarily deferred.

Witness' Residence

Miss Mary Kelso, next witness, visitor at the Farley residence on the night of the crime told of Mrs. Farley and Mrs. Vermilyea being in. She had been ushered into a living room in the north side, operating into the office. A photograph of the room was identified.

Witness had been seated on a chair near the arch of the door and Mrs. Farley had been sitting on a sofa. Mrs. Vermilyea sat on a second chair near a parlor table on witness' left.

Mr. Urquhart questioned closely the furnishings of the room and the floor layout.

Witness had entered the house through the main door. She had arrived at 9.30. Mrs. Vermilyea was not there when she left.

Mrs. Vermilyea to Door

Three calls at the house that night had been answered by Mrs. Vermilyea. The first two front door calls. The second call came a few minutes after 9.30. Mrs. Vermilyea Davidson was the second caller on a friendly visit. The evening was received at 9.30 at the office door. Mrs. Vermilyea went to the front door first. Then the telephone and then the office door. Then the office door bell rang. She was not certain of the place of ring.

"It's You Back Again'

The door from the library to the office was partly shut, said witness. She had been seated near the door so that she heard: "It's you back again," said by Mrs. Vermilyea as the door was opened.

Then I heard people go through the office, through the hall and then immediately.

Q. Then—? A. Mrs. Vermilyea came down stairs.

Q. Anyone with her?

A. I don't know. As she passed the door she said "I'll be back shortly."

Mrs. Vermilyea left by the office door. Witness added that as Mrs. Vermilyea went past the door the figure in a brownish coat also left with her.

The people stayed upstairs ten minutes, said witness.

Mrs. Vermilyea had on a dark, wine-colored coat on that evening. The coat was identified as Crown Prosecutor Urquhart held it up.

Not Sure, Man or Woman

Justice Jeffrey questioned witness: "You don't know if this figure which passed the door was that of a man or woman." A No.

Q. And you merely caught a glimpse of a brownish coat worn? A. Yes.

A floor plan of the rooms in question in the lower part of the home was gone over, witness pointing out relative positions during the evening.

Witness did - not know of the crime at the time she left.

Tall Man' First

Col. Greer took up the questioning.

It was established that two doors led from the office. Defence brought out the first call at the home had been by a man, followed by a request for food. He was told that there was no one to prepare it. Witness heard the man's voice on this occasion, but had been told later by Mrs. Vermilyea that "a tall man" had been at the door.

The bulb over the office door was lighted when witness arrived, in questioning. "It is always lighted", she added.

Light Burning Over Entrance

"Do you say that it was lit that night because it was always lighted?" asked Justice Jeffrey. A. No, it was lighted.

The front was lighted only by the illuminating bulb. The office was lighted by a suspended globe giving a good light when the front door was opened.

Woman's Long Search for a Remedy

The trouble with most remedies for constipation, as that woman found, is that they give only temporary relief. Having at last found a permanent corrective, she writes to tell us about it.

"For upwards of 30 years I was a victim of acute constipation. I tried practically everything that it was possible to try. I admit I was a chronic case, and every new remedy I tried helped me a day or two—after that I was just as bad as ever. Three months ago I took my first taste of Kruschen Salts, and every morning since, and every morning as long as I live, my first duty upon rising is my Kruschen. Immediately I feel a different woman. My bowels act to the clock, and my friends remark how well I am looking. My only regret is that I didn't try Kruschen years ago."—(Mrs.) Jane Smith.

Youth Calls for Repeal of Law That Bars Teaching of Evolution

The late William Jennings Bryan making a plea at the famous Scopes trial.

O. Towns (sides, elder) mem ber of Tennessee's lower house, and Cecil Anderson, the youngest, planning a battle against the Tennessee anti-evolution law.

BY WILLIAM S. HOWLAND
Central Press Canadian Correspondent

Nashville, Tenn., Feb. 18—Rebellious youths, in the person of a leader just barely past the legal voting age, has sounded a call for battle in the Tennessee general assembly.

The revolt which youth is calling for is against the Tennessee anti-evolution law, introduced into the assembly last year by rural members and pushed through by religious fervor by the State's "monkey law" state around the world as the "monkey law" state.

Standard Introduces Bill

And the reason for the revolt of youth against the law which makes it a crime to teach evolution in the schools in Tennessee receiving state funds is cited by Cecil Anderson in a bill introduced by him in the House for repeal of the "monkey law". It, it stated by Anderson

"Ten years of being known as the 'monkey law' is enough. We want to get Tennessee of the intellectual blacklist. We have a legislature this time more interested in helping Tennessee to regain her reputation for intelligence than in mere academic questions of interest to no one. Therefore, I think the bill has an excellent chance to pass."

Anderson, himself a second-year law student at Vanderbilt University, one of the few private institutions of learning in the state able to defy the evolution law, is believed to have the support of the campus liberals of the state solidly behind him.

Anderson's History

A brilliant student, Anderson came to the legislature from rural Chester county determined to learn at first hand how the law worked while he is studying at the same time how laws are interpreted in Blacksone and the classroom. To this end, he attends classes in between legislative sessions and has amazed many of his more experienced fellow-assemblymen by his knowledge of parliamentary law. His practical experience for his attack on the "monkey law," he is a graduate of a religious college. He is armed, therefore, with experience in the public opinion of fundamentalist and liberal colleges in the state.

In his bill to repeal the evolution law, which is simple and brief, Anderson states that the reason for repeal of the "monkey law" is that "the public welfare demands it."

Anderson's Support

Unexpected support came to the young Lochinvar from west Tennessee sought to temper the dragon of fundamentalism in the person of the eldest member of the lower House of the Assembly. This experienced legislator, O. Towns Gaines, of Knoxville, has exactly 50 more years to his credit than the young law student, but he has the same youthful spirit of liberalism and is backing up the young champion of mental freedom.

Another supporter came from the ranks of the Republican minority to sound a call for intellectual freedom. This champion of intellectual freedom is Robert M. Murray, representative from prosperous Obion county, who vainly introduced an evolution law repeal bill in the 1931 legislature.

"For Intellectual Progress"

Murray dares the fires of fundamentalism to say: "I am for intellectual progress. And removal of the anti-evolution law from our books will remove one of our obstacles to intellectual progress. There should be no limitation in our state to the acquisition of knowledge nor should a bridle be placed on the tongues of our educators, especially when the bridle serves only to hamper the progress of our intellectual growth."

It was but ten years ago that the original anti-evolution bill was introduced into the House by representative John W. Butler representative of three "hillbilly" counties. That bill, regarded in the state as the catechism of fundamentalism, provided "that it shall be unlawful for any teacher in any of the universities, normal or public schools of the state, which are supported in whole or in part by the school funds of the state, to teach any theory that denies the divine creation of man and to teach instead that man descended from a lower order of animals."

Defiance

That was the bill which surprised the world by becoming a part of the statutes of Tennessee and which became a red rag to the liberals of the world. And in the test of it, youth played its part as represented by Judge Thomas Scopes, youthful school teacher of Dayton, Tenn., who was the first defendant acclaimed and convicted of violating th elaw.

As the youth of youth's daring to challenge the law, the trial of Scopes brought the little country town of Dayton, Tenn., into the eyes of the world much on the same manner as the recent trial of Bruno Hauptmann has brought the quiet village of Flemington, N. J.

In the trial of Scopes, the late William Jennings Bryan was the spearhead of the fundamentalists. He was opposed by Clarence Darrow, shrewd lawyer from the city of Darrow, shrewd lawyer from the city of Chicago, who made a mock of the sincerity of the trial came later when the state supreme court upheld the law, but reversed the conviction on a technicality and recommended the case be nolle prossed.

RALPH ELLIOTT, NORWOOD KILLED

Crushed Between Top of Elevator Shaft And Elevator

Montreal, Feb. 19 (CP)—Ralph Elliott, 28, No. 2 Telephone assistant engineer and graduate of Queen's University, Kingston, was fatally injured yesterday, when crushed between the top of an elevator shaft and an elevator in a downtown office building.

The young engineer, repairing the elevator shaft at the time of the accident, died in hospital of a fractured skull, broken legs and internal injuries.

Elliott was on top of the elevator and repairing cables at each floor. At the seventh he shouted to the elevator man to go to the next floor. The elevator suddenly shot up and crushed him against the roof of the shaft.

Elliott, whose family resides at Norwood, Ont., is survived by his widow, formerly Doris Haig, whom he married three years ago.

Market Butchers Protest Action of Council Limiting Cutting Meat on the Square

Deputation Informed By-law Would Only Affect Non-Producers

PASS BY-LAWS

Committee Named to Study Fire Equipment in The City

Protest of a recommendation passed by the city council at their last regular meeting, that butchers on the market would only be allowed to cut meat by the quarter and that a by-law be prepared by this effect," was assailed by a large deputation of butchers and local businesses on the market each week at the council meeting held last night. After the deputation had concluded, Mayor Tice informed the deputation, that a by-law was being prepared along the lines of the one now in force in Kingston, and believed it would be satisfactory to both city and country butchers. It is understood the by-law will prohibit the cutting of meat on the market excepting by those butchers who produce their own product.

Deputation Heard

Mr. T. A. McMullen and Raymond F. Thompson were the spokesmen for the deputation of butchers on the market with, Mr. McMullen as the first speaker. Mr. McMullen had a copy of the Ontario Intelligencer, which contained the petition of the butchers presented to the last meeting of the council. Explaining his side of the question he spoke as he informed the council, that meat sold on the market had to be inspected and that the butchers were allowed to sell for 12 months of the year. Pointing out that business selling was decreasing, there being only eleven selling this year, while there were twenty-seven in 1931. "This petition says we are offering unfair competition to the local grocer, "but I have learned, that the butchers on the market are paying more taxes than the grocers. The business tax of one butcher in the city is $52.50, and the other is another $52.50, I pay my license which is $25.00, $16.00 for the rental of the space on the market on Saturday as a market fee, and this only entitles me to sell for six months of the year."

Some Not Producers

"There are many on the market that are not producers," continued Mr. McMullen, "but I am a producer, I have a 200 acre farm, I have from 30 to 35 head of cattle and raise 19 to 14 veal calves a year besides pigs, sheep and poultry cattle, I slaughter and sell this produce on the market and I can really see no reason why these butchers not producers to the same system as I am. They are working under the same conditions as the city butcher and I offer my meat for sale at the same price as he with the money I make, why I should be discriminated against, while merchants and I hesitate to think that merchants of this city would be prepared to back a prohibition cutting meat on the market for the reason that it interests one of their closes to spite their faces."

"Again I say there are those who are from $10 to $15 a day by buying on the market and this money is distributed in the city, whereas, Mr. McCreary; "Is not summer the most expensive time to keep meat?"

Mr. McMullen: "Yes it is but is not the highest in price at this time, when there is no competition from the market butcher."

Ald. Arnott: "How many of the eleven are producers and how many are slaughtering their own produce."

Mr. McMullen: "I am not aware what question authoritatively."

Ald. McCreary: "Would you take the number of cattle you were a city butcher?"

Mr. McMullen—"I believe I would."

Mayor Tice—"I can tell you, that the council are going to stop the non-producers from selling on this market. Some buy a pig on Thursday, slaughter on Friday and sell it on Saturday. The council has at present a By-law to prohibit them and at the next meeting a by-law will be introduced."

Alderman McCreary—"The licence you pay and rental of stall is not the same."

Mr. McMullen—"I consider it the same."

Bakers Sell Outside

Ray F. Thompson told the council, that bakers from the city were selling bread in the surrounding townships yet the council in the city wants to put up a barrier against them. Continuing he said you realize that 60 percent of the farms in the country kill their own meat. The speaker said, that in selling a pound of meat in the market, there was only a profit of $12.00. All the farmer is asking for is a fair deal.

Alderman Domenico asked Mr. McMullen if he sold cheaper than the butchers in the city and he stated in the affirmative. I know I have sold a lordid roast for 12 cents a pound, when the city butcher was getting 20 cents a pound."

This ended the discussion on the question.

The recommendation to licence all and pin machines created a short discussion with the recommendation being sent back for further consideration.

Alderman Riley asked if it was intended to collect the fee all at one time or in installments and was informed by Ald. Wills that the fee must be paid in one sum, when license is granted.

Mayor Tice—"I think the fee should be higher, I have been informed by reliable sources that children are spending the money given for Sunday School in these slot machines and I am also told, that where these machines are located that proprietors are practically paying their rent from the profits. I am almost certain that someone will rent a store and place a number of these machines there, and in—where is this money coming from?"

Alderman Barlow: "Gum machines and weighing machines should be exempt from the license fee and the council agreed.

Alderman Domenico—"Do we need to bother with the pin machine for it is purely a game of skill." On a recommendation was then sent back.

Three By-laws Passed

Only three by-laws were offered for consideration, the most important being the ratification of an agreement between Fred Hindis and Dallen Parker with the City Clerk of Belleville, which was carried. A by-law authorizing the payment of $1,800 to Arthur Chet Limited, also was passed and third reading was given to a by-law authorizing the borrowing of Money from the Bank of Montreal for relief purposes, the interest rate of 5 per cent fee prevent.

The by-law respecting the salary cuts for civic officials which appeared at the last meeting and was referred back to committee, was brought up at the meeting. Until the by-law is passed, the cuts under the by-laws have been restored as from February 1st. The by-law will be passed at the next meeting.

The two resolutions sent to the council by the Ratepayers' Association respecting the butchers' complaint and protest of the salary and reinstatement were ordered filed without discussion.

T. E. Ketchenson, Tax Collector of the city, was authorized to make every effort to collect taxes now in arrears. Ald. Holley was authorized to be paid $25.00 from February 1st. The offer of Public Liability for the city, of Jamieson Hope was accepted with addition of a covering for the clerical and office staff not to exceed an additional $26.00 provided by letter of February 1925 and that endorsement excepting city employes not on the City Hall staff be inserted.

A letter was read from the Welfare Department of Toronto, and Alderman McCreary expressed the opinion that the city should share part of the cost of transportation of men to the road camp if government would also share. "I think the Faulkner Highway will be of great benefit and we should assist in some measure.

Mayor Tice—I was notified by Hon. David Croll, that the city had to bear the cost of transportation of the men to and from the camps and that all employed would have to reside. The money being paid is only nominal and sometimes we have to help the families of those who are working. I told Mr. Croll the city would assume no cost as to transportation, but that I would give an order to Mr. Wood, the Superintendent, to arrange with the to work on the road and thirteen went out on Monday.

How did they get out ? asked a member. "I could not say" said His Worship.

Sell Piece of Land

A triangular piece of land at the intersection of Camrilton Road and Station street was for sale appearimately 174 by 177 feet was ordered sold to Mrs. R. C. Bourk for consideration of one dollar. The purchaser to pay local improvements charges from date of transfer, a letter from Skinner and Company, Publishers of Canada Weekly was read asking for a price for land and material for one sheet be sent at once. The matter was turned over to Alderman R. E. Arnott, chairman of industries for action.

Report on Fire Equipment

In addition to Alderman R. R. McCreary was elected by Alderman Harry Hill, "That a committee consisting of Mayor Tice, Wills, Barlow and McCreary be authorized to investigate when the management of the Fire Department to consider the advisability of additional equipment, the location of the property of the city and its efficiency and the production of reports to the Council with recommendations therein", received the suspension of the Fire Production Act, was unanimously passed.

Ald. Wills, chief of Inquiries Alderman Arnott asked about the outstanding list of relief vouchers and when the Council was to have a report. Mayor Tice told the Alderman that the information would be supplied. Alderman Barlow stated that when the committee was going to function with respect to the Public Welfare Department, Alderman Sale promised immediate action.

Alderman Domenico—The Council closed Alderman Cushing asked the chair who was responsible for the erection of the Toronto Star, which stated that the Council had refused 100 men transportation to the road camps of the Faulkner Highway and that these men were now idle. Mayor Tice next day and also that 80 of them were now employed on the Faulkner trial. "That is not the truth" said Ald. Cushing. "The men never asked for it and now refused it. I don't mind dispatches going out from the Star but the rest of the respondents could at least tell the truth." Mayor Tice—"I know the would try and have the story corrected. There being no more business the meeting adjourned. All members were all present at the meeting.

WALLBRIDGE MISSION BAND

Dorothy Christopher read the Scripture, taken from the fifth chapter of Matthew, verses 1-16. Audrey Nicolson read a story, "Little Shadie" Eileen Lane read a story about Chinese education. After which the collection was taken.

A hymn was sung and the meeting closed with the Mizpah Benediction.

STAGE APPEARANCE

The possibility that the Hauptmann jury may go on the stage strikes as rather a discordant note. One might understand that some of the jury, might like to appear with the footlights while the public is interested in anything which has been associated with the Hauptmann trial, but it does seem strange that the entire twelve members would be found agreeable.

Whatever the patrons of theatres who would go to see the jury if they did appear may say and feel, it must strike many other persons as scarcely becoming.

Evidently there is nothing in the law to prevent such appearance for hire and it would seem almost strange if a measure were not soon enacted as would prevent such stage appearances. The fact that one of the jury said the appearance if undertaken would be dignified, does not decide the question. The problem goes deeper than that. It is one of propriety and respect for the law.

DURABILITY OF WOOD

In Canadian Lumberman appears a report of the Research Committee of the Canadian Lumbermen's Association. One of the subjects treated is the durability of wood on which the report says:

"Upon investigations extending over several years, a good deal has been learned about the mechanical properties of wood, concerning the durability of wood however, which in many respects is just as important as strength, comparatively little reliable information is available. In a similar manner, experience has shown some particularly favourable some species of wood may become useless in two or three years, though the durable species may be good for three or four times that period under the same conditions. In other situations where wood is used, it is practically impossible for decay to occur and it will last indefinitely. There are a number of illustrations of houses several hundred years old, in which some of the lumber is just as serviceable as when it was first used. Between these extremes are, however, all degrees of hazard. General statements regarding relative durability of different woods have little significance since usually what is required is definite data regarding the relative durability of different woods for specific uses, as e.g., ties, poles, piling, mine sills, etc.

"Laboratory experiments do not satisfactorily answer such questions, though they may give good indications. The best evidence is procurable by long records over a number of years of woods in different conditions of use. This the laboratory can undertake by co-operation with services using large quantities of timber or a great variety of situations.

"One of the most important features of the study is the information it will afford to observe the cause of failure and subsequently to suggest improvements in design so as to enhance the efficiency and utility of construction.

"The qualities of wood depend on conditions of growth, in which soil, density of stand, latitude, and in some cases longitude play a part. This is the practical experience of every lumberman. It has in some cases become an important point not only in the domestic but in the export market, as purchasers have developed preferences for lumber cut from certain districts. Sometimes this preference is based on prejudice, but frequently it has a solid basis of fact and experience."

WORLD'S OLDEST MANUSCRIPT

In connection with the thousandth anniversary of the birth of the Persian poet Firdausi, the British Museum has arranged an exhibition of some of his MSS. and miniatures, which J. V. S. Wilkinson, in writing about them in The Observer, declares to be "probably" the most ancient in the world.

Among them he designates the "Hijra", an epic of 1276-7, as the most ancient and continues:

"Unfortunately, the exact date is not absolutely certain, for the last leaf of the original, on which the date was given, has been lost, and has been replaced by a later one, written in the hand of the sixteenth century, but the subscription, stating the date, and professing to be copied from the original, is probably correct. The script is in any case very early. Even so, it is strange to reflect that we have no manuscript of the epic which can be dated with certainty less than 250 years after its completion.

"Fourteenth century manuscripts of the Shah-nama, which are very rare, are not represented in the national collection. Two fine detached leaves, with early fourteenth-century miniatures, are, however, shown. One of the miniatures, in which the hero Rustam is depicted aiming an arrow at the Turanian Ashkabus, whose horse he has just slain, is a recent acquisition. It is a design of great power. The other, perhaps from the same manuscript, shows the appointment of Rustam as a paladin by his father, the 'white-haired Zal'.

Shah-Nama manuscripts must have been illustrated from very early times, and the miniatures in the various fifteenth, sixteenth and seventeenth-century copies which are included in the exhibition, give a good idea of the course of development of the miniaturist's art. It must be remembered, however, that neither in Persia nor in India is the best miniature work to be found, as a rule, in Shah-nama illustrations. The reason for this is uncertain, but it is possibly due to the extraordinary popularity of the work at all periods, necessitating something like mass-production and resulting in hasty execution."

DISCERNING MARKERS

Strange it is that no one has thought of it before—larger or smaller with larger figures on the license plates of motor cars. That is suggested by Fred H. Hoare in a pamphlet, who refers to the difficulty in discerning numbers on the license plates of motor cars when speeding.

It is an interesting game to try and take the numbers of passing cars on the highway outside of the urban boundaries and the result might prove that the larger figures are really necessary.

Whether they are or not, it is not a question of the appearance. Whether a marker is large or small would not change the appearance of the motor car. If the figures are too small they ought to be made larger.

THE PATRIARCHS OF LIFE

It may be true that "We live in deeds, not 'years'; but everybody is keenly interested in the subject of longevity and probably there never was a time when a keener interest was displayed in matters pertaining to health and the means of preserving physical fitness than in the present day. That wisdom has improved in this respect is a gratifying reflection. Statistics are invoked in confirmation of the thesis that the average term of life, broadly speaking has been lengthened and that even under the rush and scurry of modern conditions, the notable endeavours of our scientific experts have met with an encouraging response. "There is a thirst for health," say Sir Arthur Thompson, who goes on to treat of mortality tabulation as regards the measurable standard of healthful living. "The country is better than the town because the country means more open and moving air, more sunlight and ultra-violet rays, more of the vitamins in which country food abounds, less smoke and less crowding and less disposition to shut off the ventilation in the domestic household." But above all else is set the importance of having some healthful occupation, good food and a "merry heart" which is a continual feast. Parentage, climate, environment, milk, food, exercise and many other items may enter into the score as regards longevity, but this keeping of an easy mind and level temper through all "the ups and downs" of life appears to be a definite conclusion agreed upon by all who have made the "century mark" and by the health experts who have gone into the various aspects of this subject.—Montreal Gazette.

MORE TEETH FOR THE CODE

Securities Commissioner Godfrey calls for additional safeguards against stock-market manipulation by an amendment to the Criminal Code. The Commissioner states that this amendment ought to be forthcoming at the present session of Parliament. Although the Code offers protection it is claimed that the machinery is shown, it does not provide a safeguard when share prices are manipulated by an individual.

"The law," states the Commissioner, "is clear that conspiracy can be proved by inference from certain facts, and any one who proposes to engage in manipulative operations may not be successful in concealing from those whom he employs in the operation a knowledge of what he is doing, and in that case he may be liable for prosecution under Section 444 of the Code. As this involves an amendment to the Criminal Code, the Province has no jurisdiction, and it will have to be dealt with by Dominion legislation." He suggests further: "In any new legislation it should be made clear that sponsoring a stock or supporting a market at a reasonable price is quite legitimate. It is not difficult to distinguish stock sponsoring and market supporting from manipulation. In fact, when a stock is sponsored and supported, manipulation is made extremely difficult."

It is to be hoped the point comes to the attention of the Federal authorities, that the efforts to curb speculation evils may have adequate support.—Toronto Globe.

CANADIAN COMPOSERS HONORED

Canadian composers' works were played over the British Radio Broadcast on Sunday night, the program consisting of numbers by Healey Willan, Dr. Ernest MacMillan and Leo Smith, all of Toronto.

British broadcasting proves that the Canadian composers' works have already begun to reap their reward of fame in the Old Land.

It is pleasant to hear of Canadian artists in any one of the art fields receiving recognition from the older countries.

WHAT MOTHERS DO

This is what mothers do,
They have a year or two
Of Paradise,
Of ohubby fists, pink toes,
Lips like a budding rose
And wide, clear eyes.

Then for the child, life's storms;
For mother, empty arms
And fears and sighs;
Long, long the steep roads wind
When she has left behind
Her Paradise.

She lifts a weight of care.
She has a load to bear
Until she dies;
This mother gladly do
For just that year or two
Of Paradise.

SMITHFIELD IS A COMMUNITY of souls with but a single thought, and that to put Smithfield on the map as a wide-awake community, not very populous but very ambitious. Smithfield has a hockey team which is apparently making sporting history for the sporting editor of the Trenton Courier speaks very highly of it. The same erudite person uncovers the fact that Smithfield lads have gone out into the great word of business and distinguished themselves, including one E. A. Collins, who is assistant to the General Manager of the International Nickel Company of Canada, Limited, and resides at Copper Cliff, location of perhaps the greatest nickel and copper mines in the world. Mr. Collins, in response to a request of the Trenton Courier, has put up a cup for competition, to be awarded to "the cleanest and most useful player in the Trenton and District League."

MET A FRIEND who is a paying guest at the Belleville Home for the Aged. He was just bubbling over with joy in that he was in receipt of his Old Age Pension which enabled him to pay for his board and lodging and still have three dollars each month to spend. That will keep you in tobacco, suggested we, but he replied that he did not use tobacco and would be able to pay his church money and buy little things in the stores, even an umbrella, said he. Just another illustration of what a blessing the Old Age Pension is to many aged people who have been sorely buffeted by the storm and stress of life and forced to anchor in a haven which formerly carried a taint of dependence not relished by many. Now the pension transforms them from dependence into paying guests with a bit of pocket money of their own each month to re-admit them into the joys of the purchasing class. Talk about changing the social order, why the social order is always changing and this Old Age Pension is one of the finest changes that could be devised, and anticipated with misgiving by many as a very radical step, it is working smoothly and efficiently just as though it had always been a part of the social order.

"THERE'S A LONG, LONG TRAIL A-WINDING into the land of my dreams," a song which sprang into great popularity during the war, enhanced, no doubt, by the Front Page publicity accorded through a story of a sinking transport—the soldiers were drawn up on deck as on parade, the situation explained, a probable speedy transfer to Davy Jones' locker—then with the ship sinking under them the soldiers of the King sang "There's a Long, Long Trail A-Winding". The incident happened off the coast of Africa and had a happy ending as the soldiers and crew were all taken off safely. All of which is recalled by a Sidelight Fan who conveys the information that the author of the song was Stoddard King, a student at Yale University, in 1913, and a cousin of Fred Douglass, of Belleville. The song was first sung by Yale Glee Club but not received favorably by the music publishers or public of the United States. Stoddard King took it to England where he had no difficulty disposing of it for a gratifying sum, plus royalties. It is interesting to note that Mr. King's first cheque for royalties amounted to two thousand pounds.

GOOD AND BAD REASONS FOR EYEING CLOCK

Clock-Watching Indicates Variable Efficiency of Labor

By Louis E. Saph, M.D., Ph.D., Psychiatrist, Authority on Health and Psychology

(Copyright, 1935, King Features Syndicate, Inc.)

Watching the clock has fallen into disrepute, for it is generally assumed that the person who continually has one eye on the clock is lazy and inefficient, or that he does it because he lacks interest in his work and wants to be off.

This does not, however, necessarily follow. It may mean quite the opposite. Watching the clock may be prompted by the motive of covering the most possible work into the shortest possible space of time.

In fact a vast percentage of individuals would distinctly further their efficiency if they did watch the clock a little more. Too many go through their day's work and no thought of time. Few, indeed, can tell you off-hand just how long it takes to perform a certain task which they have already performed hundreds of times before.

If you work with no thought of time, you do not know how to let down. You invariably tend to let down! One day you may be feeling specially interested in your work and, of course, you work harder and the task doesn't seem long. Then comes another day, when your spirits are low, and, in consequence, you positively waste time.

Watch the clock, but watch it in order to make the most of your time. Don't let it be a thing which the hands seem to move slowly. Watch it to speed up your work. Watch it to jack yourself up.

Apportion your time. Make the experiments and see how much more efficient you can become for nothing is more likely to make the day drag on your hands. The more you concentrate the faster the quicker they go by.

Hit the clock a wallop you! Make it show your variable efficiency so that you may know your performances are not steady and even, and so that you may learn how to increase your speed.

If your output and energy and work, whatever the work may be, is not desultory, you will not wear yourself out. Rather, you will function then like a high-powered but smoothly running motor, smooth and noiseless, with friction reduced to a minimum.

What the clock does do for you depends entirely upon how you use it.

DR. BESCH'S DAILY DIET HINT

There is a cause for "heartburn" and it should always be found. Burning is different from the excitement while eating, eating hastily, too much food, overeating —any of these may cause the formation of gas. Such gas presses on the diaphragm, embarrasses the heart-action and causes discomfort. For an acid condition the alkaline bicarbonate of soda is indicated.

Paris, Feb. 19.—The truly elegant woman is she who draws no attention in the street whatsoever. About her it is whispered with surprise and often with a tinge of envy, in the evening at home, in the restaurant or the dance floor or in the theatre: "How is it she looks so well? What is the secret of her perfect appearance? Is it her gown, her hat, or the ensemble she wears?"

It is neither of these things. The greatest charm, the enduring beauty of woman, which extends across the changeable fashion seasons, and which even conquers age, we may well add, resides in simplicity, in soberness of design, in an unostentatious appearance and quietness of color. If you will take a good and disinterested piece of advice, believe me when I say: Never choose the most brilliant robe in a collection which is shown you. Instead, select the discreet, the softly harmonious, the simple gown. Don't say: "Everybody is wearing a cape this year and a blouse, so I will pick myself a vest and a large picture chapeau. I will be original. I will be remarked at last what may!" Don't say that and don't proceed along that line. It would be childish and unworthy of your character. "But," you object perhaps: "What about personality?" Must I come out with something distinctive, something startling to set me off against the sameness and the standardized style of so many others? How am I to assert my personality if I bury myself in the mob so far as dress is concerned?"

Simplicity the Keynote

And the answer is: If you have intelligence and character, madam, this will come to the fore exactly and only when you are soberly apparelled. Be not deluded by following a tendency which I have often remarked in women who desire to "stand out" and who will put a necklace of rather startling hues or design or a collar of their own fancy or invention on a gown of studied simplicity. Your individuality spoil the effect and everything that way. Dress one's self up to soberness. I know it is difficult, very hard even. But you will be the one who stands to gain in the end, you alone.

This little preface was necessary before I could begin to introduce to you the new styles and the general tendency of fashion this year as decreed by the master designers of Paris, Gaston, Paton, Worth, Lelong, Rouff, Paquin, Molyneux and so many others.

Begin With Hats

Each new style, you all know, begins with the renovation of hats. New hats are the first sign that spring is near. Styles in hats never last long. Before spring is out, the modistes will have invented another shape. Before the leaves fall again we will have gone through an infinite variety of shapes. But there will be so many different models that all tastes should be satisfied, all types becomingly hatted. The time of the high turbans is over, gone is the conical toque of last fall and winter. I would not say never to come back. Fashions do return, but then always in a refined or chastened form. The crown of many of the new shapes of hats is flattened out, made as low as possible, reduced to a minimum. But the brims and borders, to the contrary are growing broad-ening or lengthening forward and sideways and at the rear and some models in all directions at once.

The extended brims of this year are supple, softly undulating. There is nothing harsh or rigid about them. That in fact is their characteristic, an eminently feminine quality I should think. But now come the different interpretations. One specialist has produced a model, which only shades one eye, thus giving an air of subtle malice to the wearer. Another has made the peak so long that both eyes are shaded, quite military and very dashing. If you have lovely eyes however, you will feel more sympathy for the hats of the famous house of Maria Guy, which are poised well away from the face-head, almost on the back of the head, I would say but in every instance (for even in this model there is again much variety and subdivision), showing the first streaks of hair.

Quaker Bonnet Back

The Quaker bonnet is back with us. I saw many models of this and in very attractive colors, but I do believe that the fashion will last a long time, not much beyond early spring. Of course there are too many strings to the bonnet models, as in our grandmother's days. Strings of any kind are rather out of vogue with the modern young woman of our day. Husbands and parents know this—and the modistes, too, apparently. Bonnets go well with capes which have accompanied us from winter into spring's sunshine, in modified, drier form and more colorful, of course. Complicated trimmings are the most elaborate hats to be worn this season. They turn up at the back, because the prevailing mode is coiffure, with its display of curls, is not to be denied its rights.

Whatever hat you look at in the collections, there is but little trimming on the whole. And yet again there is always an exception to the rule. I saw some large hats exquisitely decorated with ostrich feathers in a languorous, seductive style — much to be prized, they should be by women of let us say the Theda Bara type, I mean those with a suggestion of the camp in their make-up.

Definite sailor-hats are positively coming much in vogue. I saw some in the new spiral-twist linen, white with a black triangle printed on it, and a wide black patent leather, but again in this balance I remarked the shallowness, which I find typical of all this year's creations. Strangely enough, and also exciting, some of the hats this year can be worn both ways—back to front and front of back—according to whether you want to appear sentimentally languid or ready for adventure, or both.

Still Wearing Veils

The triumph of the season is the halo hat, which is worn well back-ward. It is reminiscent of the French Judge's cap. Very becoming in young persons. And all sorts of fancy designs, with brims and and not the limitation os of the without. I saw some delightful Eugenie shade hats dipping down-ward—both front and back. But whether orientated in a backward or forward direction, the models are all marked with a spirit of youthfulness.

The chief materials for this season, I noticed, include shiny woven straws, taffeta, pique, linen and felt.

The veil has not left us. That little accessory to the make-up of the really attractive woman with its soupcon of languidness, accompanies us into the next season. But let me give you one more piece of advice, madam, avoid hiding your eyes under the network of too densely ornate a veil. Avoid also too sombre-hued a border to the winsome half-veils. They give your face an appearance as if it were cut in two. Distrust stiff veils, who follow their own line, and not the undulations of the hat. They give the head an exaggerated volume and can only be worn by very tall women.

A well-chosen veil can make up for all the charm of a very simple toque.

RAWDON—On Thursday afternoon ten ladies of Mount Pleasant (Rawdon) Woman's Missionary Society gathered at the home of Mrs. John Holmes for their February meeting, despite the downpour of rain, slippery roads and an epidemic of colds.

Mrs. Arthur Phillips presided and Mrs. K. Weaver played the accompaniment. The programme was prepared by Mrs. M. Rose. Mrs. Holmes offered a gracious prayer and acted as secretary pro tem. Nine members answered roll call. In the business period it was decided to sign the temperance resolution. Mrs. Roy Thrasher was appointed to prepare the program formerly assigned to Mrs. Mc-Keown.

Miss Eileen Macdullen read the Bible lesson found in Matthew 16-12-28, and then Mrs. George Weaver read a splendid paper based on that Scripture under the heading "Making the Most of Life."

Mrs. Kenneth Weaver gave an interesting blackboard talk on the second chapter of the study book, entitled "The Ways of Old," dealing with "The Thomas Christians of India."

A season of prayer followed, led by Mrs. Bailey, and Mrs. Percy Macdullen read a poem entitled "Sandwork."

The offering amounted to $2.10, and the helpful meeting closed with the Mizpah Benediction.

Mr. and Mrs. Archie McGee and Mr. Thomas McGee, of Stirling, spent Sunday with Mr. and Mrs. Reg. McGee at Wellman's.

Mrs. George Tompkins has returned to her home in Rawdon after a visit with relatives at Toronto and Uxbridge.

Master Frederick Thrasher visited Ormel Macdullen on Feb. 9th.

Rawdon folk were sorry to hear of the accident to little Isobel Lorne Watson, fourteen-year-old son of Mr. and Mrs. Wesley Watson, of Wellman's, on Wednesday. While at the barn in company with some one way he fell from a scaffold in the barn to the floor below and a plank from the scaffold also fell and struck the lad in its path. He was taken to Belleville for an X-ray examination and it was discovered that his left wrist was broken, as well as internal injuries. Lorne and his father remained in Belleville until Friday evening, and on Saturday the young lad was resting fairly well.

Few Discordant Notes on Gold Clause Decision

(By The Canadian Press)

The gold clause decisions of the United States Supreme Court were studied widely throughout the world today by governmental and business heads and satisfaction was the keynote of many expressed opinions. There were, however, a few discordant notes.

The decision, that gold bonds held in the United States may be honored with the equivalent value in the country's legal tender was gratifying to Canada, it was explained Canadians could continue to pay interest and principal on New York obligations in inflated currency.

From London came predictions foreign holders of United States government bonds might ask their respective governments to seek enforcement of the gold clause. Traders expressed relief the court decision was reached and hoped definite stabilization of the United States dollar in relation to foreign currencies would follow.

In Paris relief was expressed at the rulings, since it was indicated gold currencies would not be affected. Financial circles, however, feared a cheap dollar might put a heavy strain on the gold bloc moneys.

In Berlin leaders of the Reichsbank called a special meeting to discuss the decision and representatives of big business said they believed the decisions meant there would be fewer financial complications.

Italy welcomed the ruling with relief since government and private firms have been paying their dollar debts in devalued United States money.

Feeling in Brussels was that, with the question of gold payments settled, stabilization of the dollar with respect to the gold currencies —including Belgium—would be expedited.

In Buenos Aires it was noted in authoritative circles Argentine countries to United States interests would be greatly reduced in terms of their own currencies.

Japan's vice-minister of finance, Juichi Tsushima, expressed the opinion the Japanese government's 90-dollar bonds floated in the United States belonged to the category of private bonds. Japan was relieved of anxiety about them.

WILL ELECTRIC CHAIR CLAIM HAUPTMANN ON MARCH 18?

According to the verdict as it now stands, these three, two men and an inanimate chair, will meet on the evening of March 18, when Bruno Richard Hauptmann mends death, via electrocution, in payment to the state for the murder of Baby Charleg A. Lindbergh. And the man who will regulate the enormous current that sends life from Hauptmann's body is Robert Elliott, the veteran of a hundred legal killings.

Hauptmann's lawyers have been however, may succeed in staging execution until May, pending appeal to higher courts.

C.G.I.T. PRESENT BARRIE PLAY

"Kiss for Cinderella" Given by John Street Group

"A Kiss For Cinderella" one of Barrie's lovable plays, was presented last evening by the C.G.I.T. of John Street United Church to a very appreciative audience. The adventures of the wistful little waitress Cinderella and her big-hearted policeman captivated the spectators and all who played their parts with real understanding are to be congratulated on the success they attained. The play was under the direction of Miss Sylva Ross and Mr. R. Crowe assisted by Miss Jean Gardner acted as pianist.

The story of the play was familiar to many in the audience and tells of a little London waitress who tries to do her part in the war by adopting an assortment of refugees and supports them until she is physically exhausted. She is rescued by an admiring policeman and is nursed back to health at the home of the doctor-sister of her former employer. At these taking Kari received much praise for their splendid efforts, but to Phyllis Archibald, the very appealing little Cinderella and Baden Kiser, as the policeman, go special credit for their performance of the major parts.

The most charming touch in the play is the scene which represents Cinderella's dream of the fairy ball at which the real Cinderella is claimed as the bride of Prince Charming. Her fairest prince bears a strong resemblance to the policeman and the Prince of Wales and the King himself is a bit like Santa Claus. The effects obtained were very cleverly done and the costumes very fetching.

Between acts delicious home-made candies were sold, the booth being in charge of Mrs. C. O. C. T. under the direction of Miss Phyllis Hodge.

Advice to the Lovelorn

By Beatrice Fairfax

IS JEALOUSY BEHAVIOR AN ASSET IN MARRIAGE? OR HAPPY MARRIAGE?

Copyright, 1935,
King Features Syndicate, Inc.

There is something new under the sun, Solomon to the contrary notwithstanding. Here's a letter from a man who is happily married, and who thinks jealousy is a fine thing for keeping people together. I'm turning the rostrum over to him today, as he has some interesting things to say for the green-eyed monster.

Dear Miss Fairfax:

My wife showed me a letter in your column this morning, which had to do with jealousy. The writer—she is a "constant reader"—had unusual attitude toward what is known as "the green-eyed monster" —That it is ignoble and unworthy, and acts as a slow poison on the better nature of its victims. Let me disagree to the extent of saying that that isn't the whole story.

"In spite of much philandering, man is a monogamous creature. As proof of my argument, let me point out that it is no uncommon thing for people to celebrate their golden weddings. You cannot open a paper without seeing a picture of a pair of life's old warriors who have stood the storms and strains together for half a century; while the philanderers, who live by the trial and error method, change and change o'clen.

"And who has kept these old people together? The feeling that he's her man and she's his woman. Both these two are partners in a little kingdom of the spirit and of the flesh; but in the fullest sense, they are one. And that when anyone seeks to enter this little principality, this kingdom of the spirit and the flesh, he or she is a usurper of another's rights—a poacher on what doesn't belong to him. He is a destroyer who annihilates to me.

Dear Mrs. Bradley:

Our Ladies Aid Society has just heard of your sad loss of your husband, and the Society has asked me to tell you of our deep sympathy. Our thoughts and prayers are with you these sorrowful days, and if there is any service that we can possibly do to make the burden lighter, I do wish that you would let me know and let me come to see you to talk it over with you. Will you do this please.

Your husband was admired and deeply respected by all who knew him, and we and our church have lost an honored friend.

Dearest love and sympathy from us all.

Most sincerely yours.

Dear Mrs. Allen:

The members of our Ladies Aid Society have asked me to send you a message of our deepest sympathy at the death of your wife, who was one of our most loved members. We all have beautiful memories of her, of her charming personality, of her eager joy and happiness in life, of her untiring willingness to be of service to her friends or to any others who needed her sweet understanding and help, of her high ideals in everything she did and said. Her memory will always be a great inspiration to all of us who had the privilege of knowing her.

Please do let us know if there is anything that we can do to be of service to you in these sorrowful days. We would so like to help, if you will only call on us.

Most sincerely yours,

Dear Miss Graham:

The members of our Ladies Aid Society have just heard of your sad loss, and we wish to tell you of our profound sympathy and understanding thoughts in these sorrowful days and your readjustment in the days to come from dear mother. She was beloved by all of us, and we shall miss her more tremendously, from our meetings. She was so generous in her "good works", so kind in her service, so friendly.

Please do be so kind as to tell us if there is anything that we may do for you these days, to ease your burden.

Most sincerely yours,

The Child Learns by Mistakes

By LISA GRENELLE

"Mother!" Dorothy begged, "will you choose my clothes from now on?"

"Why, Dotsy!" mother asked in surprise, "don't you want to choose it yourself?"

"No," said Dorothy, "I'd rather get something you like me in."

Mother laughed and looked a bit puzzled. "That's nice of you, dear, but after all you have to wear it."

"I know," Dorothy interrupted solemnly, "that's the trouble, haven't I been punished enough for picking that old coat I chose, for two years?"

"I was afraid, dear, that you might find it a little extreme."

"I know," she said, "I haven't got very good taste. Anything I choose seems to look terribly awful after the first month—it's always too fussy or the wrong color or too much trouble. I'm just going to buy another dress, mother, unless you let me choose it."

All most amazing, coming from Dorothy, who was a strong minded individual, fiercely independent and wilful since her sixth month. Always insisting that she knew her own mind and gone after it; and now for the first time she was admitting defeat, admitting that perhaps, "mother knew best" after all, becoming fond of authority.

Dorothy had had wise handling. The Dorothys of this world need wise handling, no matter to which sex they belong.

If Dorothy's mother had insisted upon choosing Dorothy's clothes from the beginning she would unquestionably have looked far smarter, neater, been more appropriately dressed. But Dorothy would never have been convinced of this. Whether she submitted to her mother's choice graciously or with grumbles and growls she would always have nursed a desire to do her own choosing, a conviction of her own superb taste. She never would have learned that she needed advice. She never would have learned that having her own way might not work out to her own advantage.

There is another thing, a more important one, that Dorothy having discovered the infallibility of her own taste in the matter of dresses, will perhaps not have learned to question it in other matters. Having been allowed her head and free choice in unimportant things when she was small she will be less inclined to stubbornness as she grows older. Advice not having been forced upon her she may ask for it when confronted with a really important problem. The most important problem of a girl's life, boys, beaux and potential husbands.

Matter of Control

There are only two kinds of government, the first of and by and through fear, always under the shadow of an inevitable rebellion; and government through the voluntary assent of the governed, or through domination and too tight a rein put where resentment, or rebellion in your children, sooner or later they will break away. Often choosing a time to assert and carry out their will, when they are least capable of making a wise decision. When their whole future need requires seasoned advice and guidance they refuse to ask for and accept it. They have learned to dread and resent a guidance which has too long proved crushing.

A nice balance is maintained this season between rich fabrics and the simplest cut and design. This is present in a new dinner suit of brown crepe, with top and tailored coat of silver and brown striped lame.

There is no need to confine vivacity to the sport class of frock. Designers are using it for very dressy afternoon and dinner frock is done in gray velveteen with cone buttons of cut steel an ideal frock for a smart luncheon.

There's a smile in the thought that we can wear suits all the winter, especially those with smart cardigans. Such a suit is a handsome tweed of a fine, heavy weave. It has a gaily striped cardigan that is fitted at the waist in wasitcoat fashion, and worn over a blouse of white wool lace mesh. The long coat is collarless with white wolf, edged with the same fabric as the cardigan and lined with the wool mesh of the blouse.

Romance lives again in those new and beautiful period frocks that are so much admired this season. A lovely model is in deep pink slipper satin. It has a tight bodice, made of the satin cut on the bias, and a wide, full skirt gathered into a heart shaped yoke. The fichu partly covers the shoulders.

We are rich in appearance, at least, when we have one of the new cloth of gold dinner frocks. A charming model is done in very dull gold metal cloth and is made on shirtmaker lines. The buttons are large affairs with rhinestones and emerald colored stones and there are similar links at the tailored cuffs. The belt buckle is of the rhinestones and green stones.

Fashion Flashes

By ALICE ALDEN

Fluffy hair, too bouffant, too thick and too kinky is no longer a fashion fault. It gets professional treatment, behaves like manners and dresses.

The scissors are used to thin the growth and to taper the ends. While the hair is wringing wet, right out of the shampoo bath, a setting oil is applied, brushed in thoroughly and vigorously. The setting lotion comes along and the finger waving is designed. If the wave pattern is exactly the same after each shampoo, the glorious tiara forgets to fade, and the hair is pleasing design.

While every woman yearns with all her emotional machinery for naturally wavy hair, no member of the phrail sex wants locks that look like mattress stuffing. More than one is rejoicing that the kinks can be curbed, laid in wide, fluid like undulations.

The blotchy, skin that flushes easily is a trial. It requires the most tender handling, no hot or cold water, loads of creams, no detergents.

Much can be done by a change of diet, deleting rich sravies and pastries, stoking up generously on vegetables, green salads, fruit, meats. The citrus fruits will help. Every morning take a glass of orange juice to which the juice of half a lemon has been added. Drink quantities of water. Facial massage rouses up over-stimulated capillaries, is likely to make the condition more unbearable.

CENTENARY W.A. AT HOME

A most enjoyable Valentine party was held at the home of Mr. D. A. Thrasher on Thursday evening, Feb. 14th, and though the weather was very inclement, a goodly number were in attendance. Mrs. Harold Thrasher, the hostess, had decorated the home in keeping with the Valentine spirit, and the rooms were very pretty indeed. A dainty buffet lunch was served from a table entired with a valentine tree and decorations of red crepe paper. A pie contest added much to the merriment of the crowd, the first prize, which was a pie, was won by the group, singing "Comin' Through the Rye," and consolation prize by those who sang "My Bonnie Lies Over the Ocean." The prize was a candy heart. Following was the program:

Chairman's Address—Mr. Edgar Adams.

Community singing.

Reading—"So Did I," Miss Keaton.

Musical selection—Miss Mildred Cassidy.

Reading—Mrs. Glover.

Duet—Miss Myrtle Wright and Miss Mildred Cassidy.

Reading—"Jack"—Miss Keaton.

Musical selection—Gordon Carrison and Arthur Calvert.

Pie contest.

A hearty vote of thanks was tendered the host and hostess for the very pleasant evening spent in their home, after which everyone adjourned to their respective homes.

NEWSPAPERMAN IS THREATENED WITH DUEL

Paris, Feb. 19 (AP)—A duel in defence of "a newspaperman's right to describe what he sees" was threatened today by Bertrand de Jouvenel, journalist member of a famous family.

M. Jouvenel announced he was sending a challenge to Julien Duvivier, a film director. The journalist visited a studio and watched the filming of a scene. He then wrote an article, which the director said in a letter to newspapers ridiculed his work. He questioned the critic's right to comment on one scene before the whole work was finished.

Current Attractions at Local Theatres

What Local Theatre Managers Have to Say About Current Offerings

AT THE CAPITOL
"Wednesday's Child"
An emotional drama of an innocent boy's heartbreak.

Re-echoing the sensational success it scored as a play on Broadway, "Wednesday's Child" now playing at the Capitol Theatre, brings to the screen a story highly charged with emotional tensity. Avoiding as much as possible anything of a controversial nature, this drama d votes itself to the emotional reactions of the little character, a boy, innocent victim of the institution of divorce. It provides one of those all-too-rare motion pictures that have depth of feeling, without sacrificing their entertainment qualities.

Featuring Frankie Thomas, twelve-year-old star of the stage play, as one element of a disrupted domestic group—father, mother and child—the story reproduces faithfully those values which thrill audiences throughout the latter part of the theatrical season.

It is a subtly dramatic narrative of Bobby Phillips, a highly sensitive boy, who has been accustomed to a wealth of affection, kindness and of sorrow that is thrust upon him when his father and mother part and the mother remarries. He becomes torn between his loyalty to both and oppressed by the neglect that follows their separation. In the divorce hearing Bobby is made to testify in his mother's behalf, and she is granted the decree, although a word from him might have thrown the case the other way.

The boy's ordeal is intensified when he is awarded to his mother's care for eight months of each year, his father to have him for the remaining four. He is really without a permanent home, a "part time" child. The mother immediately remarries, and Bobby is utterly wretched in his new environment. What is to become of him? It is at this point that real suspense of his situation begins.

In the role of Bobby, Frankie Thomas has the longest and most difficult role that has ever been intrusted to one of his tender years, and another splendid piece of histrionic opportunity is given Edward Arnold in the role of Bobby's father. Karen Morley has the difficult role of the boy's mother. Other capable members of the cast include Robert Shayne, Shirley Grey, Howard Lee, Leeds and Dick Quine.

Added Featurettes

Shown in support of the feature attraction are several excellent short subjects including a side-splitting comedy entitled "Smoked Hams," featuring Daphne Pollard, an interesting British Miniature "Sandwich"; the latest episode of Screen Snapshots showing intimate glimpses of popular movie stars, and last but not least a clever cartoon "Little Boy Blue," Du Barry song plates t-day. Shows at 2:30; 7.15; 9.15.

AT THE BELLE
"We Live Again"
Laughs, Romance and Drama Blend In Two Excellent Features

The genius and color of five great personalities have been blended together to make one of the really great pictures of all time.

The illustrious quintet is made up of Leo Tolstoy (Samuel Goldwyn), Anna Sten, Fredric March and Rouben Mamoulian, author, producer, stars and director, respectively of "We Live Again" to be presented at the Belle Today and Wednesday, matinee and evening.

Goldwyn showed his usual keen judgment in choosing this powerful and beautiful story as the second vehicle of the glamorous Russian star, Anna Sten, and the role of Katusha, the peasant girl who loved and was betrayed by a Prince, seems to have been suited peculiar talents and rich, earthly beauty, had it been written to order for her. More than that, it is also appealing than ever, the beauty and fire of Count Leo Tolstoy's work flowering in this magnificent film.

Fredric March, her co-star, is also ideally cast and gives the performance of his distinguished cinematic career as the handsome Prince Dmitri whom army life turns into the idealistic young revolutionary who sincerely loves the little peasant to the dashing voluptuary who betrays her.

The human, moving story of how, years later, he experiences a rich awakening when, as a member of a jury, he recognizes Katusha being tried for a murder of which she is innocent, and gives up everything in following her, has been finely transcribed to the screen with a sure sense of entertainment values and Mamoulian's direction stands out as unquestionably his greatest achievement of a brilliant career.

Jane Baxter, Goldwyn's lovely new British discovery who scored so finely in "The Constant Nymph", is splendid in Dmitri's aristocratic fiancee and C. Aubrey Smith turns in one of his matchless characterizations as Mme. Marie, Prince Korchagin. Sam Jaffe, Jessie Ralph, Ethel Griffies, and the remaining members of the cast are uniformly excellent.

"The Band Plays On"

A worthy picture that throbs with the glorious youth and moves along at a fast pace is found in "The Band Plays On", the second feature attraction on the same program. Although it is a story of football heroes, it is not, in the sense of the word, a football picture. It is a picture of three days in the trials and tribulations, the romantic interests and the lighter moods of the effervescent students of college.

A Charming Romance

Too, there is delightful boy-and-girl romance played to perfection by Stuart Erwin and Betty Furness. Stuart Erwin repeats with one of his inimitable performances. Others who contribute fine performances are Leo Carrillo, Ted Healy, Russell Hardie and others. "The Band Plays On" moves along swiftly, without a lagging moment, in and out of classrooms and on the college football field. Latest News Reel flashes will be exhibited on the same program.

How Do Movie "Extras" Get Along?

Minor contract players line up at the paymaster's window once a week to receive their checks.

By RADIE HARRIS
Central Press Canadian Correspondent

HOLLYWOOD, Feb. 19.—One of the by-products of the motion picture industry is the "extras"—the men, women and children, who provide atmosphere and help carry the story along, although seldom achieving the heights of stardom.

From the earliest history of the motion picture, the problem of the extra has been an acute one. Every day, scores of persons of every type and creed arrive in Hollywood, with their eyes and ambitions fastened on a screen career. It is all of mankind on parade. Some should know better. Some do.

Once in the cinema citadel they find a weary road ahead of them. They tramp from studio to studio, looking for the big chance. They attempt to curry favor with persons of influence, or the capitalize on a real or imaginary "pull." They find themselves without money, without work. There is tragedy, suffering and hardship.

Kept Out

But, within the last few years, the motion picture industry as represented by the Association of Motion Picture Producers, has done much to relieve this suffering and hardship. At least now, one who seeks fame in the movies cannot charge that he was not forewarned! Everything possible is done to keep out persons who are unfit for the work, or who could never realize their fondest heartache and disappointment.

This work is being borne by the Central Casting Corporation, a subsidiary of the Association of Motion Picture Producers. It performs a meritorious service, not only to the producers, but also to the great army of would-be motion picture stars. Representing 95 per cent. of the studios and 23 companies, this organization provides a free employment bureau for extras, and is effective in seeing that not all players needed for extras. All persons wishing to act as extras must register at the bureau, yet due to the heavy supply and the consequently small demand, only a very, very few can be accommodated.

Only One!

Of the 17,541 extras registered in Hollywood during a single year, only one of this vast throng earned enough to pay an income tax of $2,000.

Of the many extras ever attain stardom? Approximately one out of every 20,000. Yet these tremendous odds against an extra need not exist; the cause for such a gigantic procession of failures lies directly with the extras themselves.

What usually happens to the local girl from home who wants to make "good" in Hollywood is this: She registers and receives her first call in a "mob" scene. She reports for work, fired with ambition. From the set, she sits close at hand, eager to work in any scene where she is wanted. All this is well and good . . . until the little girl changes her points of view. Extras, you recall, are paid by the day, and they must be on hand the thing in the morning, even if, as it often happens, they aren't needed until late afternoon.

Becomes "Lazy"

The average extra soon becomes bored with waiting and subsequently turns into a shirker. In a short time, she grows lazy, and works at "extrating" merely to get what she can with the least amount of work.

Observe the extras on a set and you will see them in groups playing cards, catching up on their sleep, chatting idly or reading magazines. If the sells them ill also suits the director, but these extras are never given more than they are at the moment.

The extra who will rise is the one who becomes and remains a student. She sits near, and listens and watches everything that goes on. She studies the methods of acting used by the well-featured players, and profits by their successes and failures. She studies their methods to her own personality, without imitating. She masters every technique of every director on whose set she works, until she knows the demands of each one.

In the future, when working with this director, she does things exactly as the director desires without being drilled into it. Since this saves a director considerable time, he soon will be demanding this extra for certain bits and before she realizes it she is the first extra sent up the ladder to her long feared with waiting and subsequents dreamed of goal!

Conflicts in Views on the Court Decision

Washington, Feb. 19 (AP)—Here are some of the most striking conflicts in views on the United States Supreme Court majority and minority in the gold clause cases:

Majority: "It is necessary to consider the power of Congress to establish a monetary system."

Minority: "Any abstract discussion of the constitutional power over money would only tend to befog the real issue."

Majority: "There is no constitutional ground for denying to the Congress the power expressly to prohibit and invalidate contracts although previously made, and valid when made, when they interfere with the exercise of that policy it is free to adopt."

Minority: "To say that clauses in three bonds were valid and in entire harmony with public policy when executed is to ignore history . . . To destroy a validly acquired right is the taking of property."

Majority: "If the gold clauses interfere with the policy of the Congress in the exercise of that authority of 'monetary), they cannot stand."

Minority: "The power to issue bills and 'regulate' values of money cannot be so enlarged as to authorize arbitrary action whose immediate purpose and consequence is to destruction of individual rights."

Majority: "We are concerned with the constitutional power of the Congress over the monetary system of the country and its attendant frustration. Exercising that power, the Congress had undertaken to establish a 'uniform currency, and parity between kinds of currency, and to make that currency, dollar for dollar, legal tender for the payment of debts."

Minority: "Such arbitrary power is nowhere to be found within any Congressional power heretofore recognized."

We are anxious to co-operate with the Ontario Government in the safety and accident campaign. The year 1934 witnessed approximately 600 people killed and 10,000 injured by Autos—many of them right in this Province. FINANCIAL MARKETS
NEW YORK - TORONTO - WINNIPEG

WALL STREET FINANCIAL

New York, Feb. 19.—(AP)— Although the supreme court's acceptance of the United States new deal monetary legislation was still considered today a constructive influence many outside stock traders were inclined to cash in their profits from the exciting upturn of the previous session, with the exception of the metals, most equity groups displayed an easier look. Trading turned quiet after an active opening.

Among shares of Canadian companies, McIntyre lost a point while Dome, Canadian Pacific and International Nickel were a shade lower.

On the curb, Hiram Walker eased but Lake Shore held about even. Dominion Government 4s were up slightly, Canadian funds improved 8-16 of a cent at 10.00 cents.

Shares of U.S. Smelting, American Smelting and Union Pacific added slightly higher but losers of fractions to around a point included American Telephone, Consolidated Gas, Santa Fe, N. Y. Central, Johns-Manville Du Pont, General Motors, Chrysler, Case, Schenley Distillers, American Can, Sears Roebuck, Mississippi Valley, Westinghouse and General Electric. United Corp. Preferred dropped a point. U. S. Steel and National Steel lost about a point each.

TORONTO MINES

Toronto, Feb. 19.—(CP)—The mining market developed two waves of strength today, at the opening and in the early afternoon, with a sagging movement intervening, the result no doubt of profit-taking. Heavier gains were inclined to hold Monday's closing position with a few soft spots while the secondary trend dawn ran into large scale selling that cut off the first hour gains. Recoveries were generally made, however in the early afternoon.

In the quieter hour selling net losses up to 3 cents were registered for God's Lake, Macassa, Moose, Noble Five, Consol. and Sylvanite but most of them had something to cha ge for the better before the day's buying. MacWatters featured the cheap gold prospecting 10 cents at 6.97 and holding the bulk of the advance.

TORONTO STOCKS

Toronto, Feb. 19.—(CP)— Profit-taking on Monday was the test of confidence in the industrial section throughout the early part of the day's session and while prices eased back following a fairly strong opening, the early afternoon trade was again firm with trade however concerning itself moderately. Recoveries were showing on the board this afternoon.

Distillers Seagrams dropped 1-4 to 18 and Walkers Common lost the same amount to 18 1-2 while Industrial Alcohol A held to the up side. The oils sagged lightly and the other heterlisted leaders, Nickel, Brazilian, Ford and C.P.R. had losses up to 3-4, as the local trend followed along with the New York market.

Bank, steel, brewery, food and construction issues held fairly steady and the utilities recorded narrow losses.

HAMAR GARDNER QUESTIONED

The third ring had occurred at 1.30 o'clock. Only then did Mrs. Vermilyea say she heard, then someone entered the house with her.

Q. And she never came back to the room? A. No.

A glimpse of the coat was obtained when witness sighted it through a crack in the door. She stood still for a moment while I looked," he added.

Q. You heard several footsteps but no voices going upstairs A. Yes.

Q. You heard no voices? A. No Yes.

Footsteps Not Voices

Q. Could you swear there was anyone with Mrs. Vermilyea when she came down and went out? A. No, I didn't pay any attention.

Witness endured a stiff cross under the questioning of defence, calmly maintained her original story of events on the night in question.

"I heard footsteps going upstairs—no voices," he said, after several times when defence sought to establish the point.

Q.—The main hall was well-lighted? A.—Yes.

Dome Coat? A.—Yes, there was a little light on the desk.

Q.—A visitor entering the house would pass after the outside office light, several others if a walk to the upstairs room, and yet that whole hall was well lighted?

A.—Yes.

Q.—Did Mrs. Vermilyea say anything more that night than what you have told us?

A.—The only statements I heard were, "You back again?" on the first time. Then "I'll be back in a few moments."

Back To Door

Col. Greer—May I suggest that from the position you were in you had a very poor view of the door?

A.—Yes, I sat with my back partly to it.

Dr. R. S. Gibson, the medical attendant of Mrs. (Dr.) Vermilyea claimed Mrs. Farley was in very poor health. She had been charged with a nurse constantly in attendance.

Solicitude for Jury

In calling adjournment until 2 o'clock this afternoon Justice Jeffrey warned the jurors that upon the first signs of fatigue during the afternoon, "just tell me, I don't want to work you too hard the first day," he added.

Reference to "Aunt Lizzie"

Court resumed on Tuesday afternoon with the calling of Mrs. Blakely Chadwick by Crown Prosecutor Urquhart.

Mrs. Chadwick, official assistant court reporter of the county of Hastings, had taken the deposition of Mrs. Jay Farley in February. A transcription of the notes taken under the direction of Sheriff Ponton, was then read, according to the custom of the late Nathaniel Vermilyea who also produced and marked as exhibit.

The deposition was taken on Friday, Feb. 15th, 1935.

In the testimony read by Mr. Urquhart, Mrs. Elizabeth Farley described as saying, in answer to the home of Mrs Farley where the late Mrs. Vermilyea had resided, that she quoted as saying that Vermilyea was usually called her "Aunt Lizzie."

Door Bell Rang

Monday night, Mrs. Farley was recalled as the night when Miss Vermilyea answered the door, when the bell had rung twice. She had not noted who the caller was. She did not hear the door opening had seen anyone. The night of Oct. 4th was a breathless evening, having spent in friendly chat each drinking ginger ale in the library. The bell rang. She heard the door open rung and was answered. Then the door closed. Footsteps were observed by Mrs. Vermilyea. Mrs. Vermilyea had said: "Oh", then the chain on the door was quickly loosened and persons went upstairs A short time after they came down and went out. "That is all I know until the accident," she said.

Mrs. Vermilyea's answer to the deposition had never taken anyone in the room at night unless it was her son.

Had Not Seen Accused

Defence counsel Bowerman brought out the point that Mrs. Farley had not seen the accused. "That is not the best of her recollection." This was on a sheet of cross examination by him.

In a re-examination of Mrs. Farley, Bowerman asked her with respect to the furniture of the room on the night in question.

Detective Sergeant Arthur Harman of the local police force, next witness, testified to Crown Attorney B. C. Donnan, told of receiving a call by telephone on the night of the affair at 9 p.m. He at once despatched Constable Arnold to the house. Three calls later were received and Constable Constable to the scene of the crime. Later a search warrant to Detective Sergeant Harman was sworn out. Two letters identified by him, were found in the bed room; one was with the return address of Harold Vermilyea and had been sent in April. The second letter—

The contents of both letters at this time were objected to by the defence. This was sustained by Mr. Bowerman.

After the search of the room of Mrs. Vermilyea, witness had visited the kidney home of Clarence Vermilyea. A third letter was found. This was also identified. It was purported to have been sent by Harold Vermilyea to Mr. Clarence Vermilyea.

Belongings of Deceased

Jewelry, a diamond ring, a wrist watch, necklace and other articles of the late Mrs. Vermilyea and a bottle of clothing were also received by witness. A bottle of A drug, wine-colored, was identified. The remainder of the clothing—three pieces—were given by witness to Mrs. Franklin. The doctor had picked out a dress, a coat with fur collar and a hat. They had been given to the police in the same condition as when found, witness said. A small, black beret-shaped hat and the coat given witness for inspection were identified.

The Three Letters

Col. Greer, defence counsel, had no questions to ask—

"Oh, yes, just one question," as witness stepped down. "You found two letters in the bedroom and then you got another one from Clarence Vermilyea?

A.—Yes; she brought it into the station.

Plainclothes Constable Fred Izard, recalled, was questioned by Crown Urquhart regarding a hatchet. An objection on witness being recalled at this point was raised by Col. Greer.

"This man has been examined, recross-examined," he objected. Objected Col. Greer.

"There was but one question I wanted to ask about the hatchet."

"No I don't think that is fair," counsel objected.

Defence objection was sustained.

Question is Re-Framed

Again Mr. Urquhart re-framed a question. Defence objection was also raised by defence. This was not allowed.

The "continued Mr. Urquhart", You made an examination of the rooms occupied by Harman and found the letters, A. I did.

Witness identified the letters by a mark placed on them.

Constable Izard left Belleville for Los Angeles on Thursday, October 24 last. He arrived at Glendale, between 2 and 10 a.m. Oct. 13th. Witness was excused.

Sister-in-Law On Stand

Mrs. Clarence Vermilyea, next witness, residing in 4th Concession of Thurlow, identified she had known deceased "practically all her life." She had last seen him about 11 years ago when he visited the district staying at Mrs. (Dr.) Faulkner's and her home before several weeks.

On the night of Oct. 4th witness was in bed when telephone call had been received at the home. Both witness and husband dressed hurriedly. Arthur Vermilyea was then driven to the home of Mrs. Vermilyea where she found Mrs. Vermilyea and Greer both at the entrance. The horn of the car she was driving had sounded. Mrs. Vermilyea took Arthur, to the balcony of the home and Greer.

Writing About Business

A letter dated May 30th, 1934 was produced by Crown Attorney and identified by witness. It had been written by Mrs. Vermilyea to Clarence.

Col. Greer took the witness.

Q. Was Harold in the habit of corresponding with his brothers. A. He was not much interested in writing.

Mrs. Faulkner Testifies

Mrs. (Dr.) Faulkner, still weak from recent illness, was handed a letter of May 30th, 1934. Dressed simply in black mourning, the witness of the deceased answered the questions of Crown Urquhart in low voice almost inaudible to spectators. Identification of her letters were identified by witness.

On the night of Oct. 4th, she had been in bed reading just prior to the attack.

Noise Near Door

The first unusual occurrence was a noise near the surgery door, said witness. At the point of door Dome was not on.

Q. Thought someone was at the office door, so I opened the window and called down.

A. Yes.

"No one answered. I heard some one walking in the hall and proceeded to come from the flower beds. I thought it was a dog."

Q. Then the office door bell rang. I went down, opened the door and saw Mrs. Vermilyea and Dr. Gorman. I went out—one of the men had a flashlight.

Fled Like a Woman

Q. When did you first discover it was a man? A. When the light was turned on.

"The man lying with her head pointed towards the hall's inside her feet were toward the walk. She was lying on her back, her face up.

"The men said she couldn't be moved till the police came, but I said get her in the house, I want to see her. Then we phoned Dr. Gibson. Then the police were sent for."

Realizes Victim Mother

Q. Then did you identify her? A. Yes (in a low voice).

"The last identification I had was a brooch on front of her dress A. I knew it more closely and saw it was mother."

Crown Prosecutor at this point produced the brooch which was identified by witness. A hat was also identified. Court adjourned.

Q. Your mother was a widow? A. Yes, she had been for 11 years. She was 76 years.

Occasionally witness glanced at the accused brother who was hiding in the dock. The glances were not returned.

"Mother's health had been wonderful lately" said witness in answer to a question.

Left in 1908

Accused she said left home in 1908 and went first to Vancouver. He had lived there two or three years, said witness.

Q.—Had he attended and graduated from Toronto University A.—Yes.

"What has this to do with the case?" questioned Mr. Justice Jeffrey.

"Just to show his education" replied Mr. Urquhart.

"The last time Harold Vermilyea was in Belleville was during the time of his father's death, eleven years ago.

"Again I ask you what has this to do with the case?" questioned Mr. Jeffrey when questions concerning the children of the accused man were addressed by Mr. Urquhart to witness.

A letter, dated Sept. 29, 1934, was shown witness. It was identified as one that had been shown her previously "a day or so after she had had a caller on Monday evening."

Says Signature Brother's

Q. Is that the signature of your brother at the bottom here? "It is," stated witness in a low tone after a moment's scrutiny.

Afternoon session for the day was called at 3:35 by Mr. Justice Jeffrey.

Many Women Present

Tuesday afternoon's session in the Court House at Belleville when the Vermilyea murder trial was resumed was colorful than on previous days, as many women were present. Packed rows of seats allotted the public were well filled with feminine spectators, all very interested in proceedings. The afternoon produced prominently in the seats than yet observed during the trial.

Specialer Determined

One of the latest stories concerning the trial now proceeding in this city was told today by a local taxi man.

A well known lady, determined to attend at least one day's session of the trial, arrived at the court house on Monday morning and immediately hurried to drive to the court house. Shortly after seven o'clock when she arrived, she was one of the first admitted. Courteous officials located a seat which was occupied by her during the day.

Purses on the trial of Harold Vermilyea were in a better mood today. Enroute from the hotel to the court house for the afternoon session, one of the men took the opportunity of purchasing the new tube of snow to snow ball the others with, decided impartially.

THAT FIRST BRANCH BANK AND 500 MORE

The founders of the Bank of Montreal firmly believed in branch banking. Two weeks after opening the Bank in Montreal on November 1st, 1817, the directors appointed an agent at Quebec. By the following June the agency was made an "Office of Deposit and Discount," and then the first branch came into being. Two others soon were established at Kingston and York (afterward Toronto).

Those early bankers sought to extend and perpetuate for the farmers and merchants, the benefits and stimulus of a branch banking system the seeds of which had been abundantly proved in the British Isles.

Thus they introduced one of the elements of elasticity for which the Canadian banking system has received so much praise.

Consistently, throughout the decades, the Bank of Montreal has added branches wherever business warranted, giving to new and growing communities the advantages of banking strength, ample facilities and sound management.

Today over 500 branches are serving Canada. Each branch is the Bank of Montreal, with all the facilities and public service for which the institution is known.

From the first branch in Quebec to the most recent one opened, the spirit of the Bank of Montreal is expressed—and will continue to be expressed—in terms of friendly service.

SHAW PERMITS WORLD PREMIERE

Fantastic Play Allowed to Artistic Theatre Guild

(By Mark Barron)

New York, Feb. 19—(AP)—George Bernard Shaw ended his tiff with the Artistic Theatre Guild last night by allowing it to sponsor the world premier of the drama that marks his 50th year as a playwright.—"The Simpleton of the Unexpected Isles".

Quite unknown to the public, Shaw and the Guild, his American producer for the last twenty years, haven't been on the most friendly terms for two years.

The spat came about because the Guild turned down a play submitted to them, an unproduced work called "On the Rocks", a title which sounds like a product of the market place.

A few months ago a guild director read in an Hungarian newspaper or Danish that Shaw had a new play. A cable to Shaw brought back the script of "The Simpleton". Evidently the 78-year-old author was still angry about "On the Rocks".

Ten weeks later, unannounced, a manuscript of "The Simpleton of the Unexpected Isles" arrived in the Guild offices.

Rehearsals Began

Rehearsals began almost immediately but first the Guild called Shaw requesting him to shorten the title. Shaw came the rebuke: "Have you gone crazy? Title indispensable, Shaw". So the electric sign outside the Guild Theatre was not changed to undergo considerable enlargement.

Of all the fantastic plays Shaw has provided for the Guild, the newest one of the long title is perhaps the most astounding.

Shaw has described it as a setting it pretends to picture what Shaw actually did find in the Garden of Judgment Day.

Only content with that apparently to him simple theme, he musn include a half dozen other debates, prominent of which is the dispute he has of any endeavour to merge Britain, the United States and West.

Also, it strikingly brought out by Alla Nazimova and Romney Brent in the leading roles.

The refusal to produce "On the Rocks," illustrates that the Guild may be becoming somewhat cautious in accepting plays, in fact they have exclusive rights of his "dramatic works in this country.

Virtually all his plays are artistic successes but they do not always show a profit at the box-office. For instance, the Guild lost $30,000 on his "Back to Methuselah," whereas with Shaw retorted they had made $10,000, as he had expected they would lose at least; $20,000..

Sir Malcolm Campbell is Ready for Record Run

By BILL BEAUCHER

Central Press Canadian Sports Editor

Daytona Beach, Fla., Feb. 16—Five men have sent motor cars slithering along hard sands at Daytona Beach, Fla., at more than 300 miles an hour.

Only one of the five is living to tell of the thrill at that tremendous speed. He is Sir Malcolm Campbell, and he is at Daytona now, ready for one more terrific dash against time.

The British ace set his goal at 300. In an effort to break his own world record of 272.46 miles an hour, the highest speed ever attempted.

Two hundred miles an hour was fast sight years ago when Sir Henry Segrave, first of the five superspeeders, attained 203.97 in his Mystery S. Sunbeam at Daytona. He was the first to travel that fast in an automobile.

Keech Beats Britisher

Just about a year later, Feb. 19, 1928 Sir Malcolm barely beat his fellow countryman's record in his first Bluebird, slithering along the beach at 206.96 miles an hour. But Sir Malcolm's record was shortlived. In April the American driver, Ray Keech, sent his "White Triplex tearing along the [illegible] strip at 207.55.

Three days after Keech set that record, Frank Lockhart gave his life in an effort to break it. After he had been clocked at 208 miles an hour, a tire blew, and his 8-cylinder Black Hawk went rolling over and over.

Sir Henry Segrave returned to the trail the following year. On March 11, 1929, he drove his automobile along the beach at 231.36 miles an hour, and that seemed tops in speed for all time. Yet, two days later, Lee Bible, driving Wilcox-Triplex, tried to break Bible, a former mechanic, was clocked at 236 miles an hour. On his next trip he met the fate that had been Lockhart's.

Segrave's record stood until Feb. 5, 1931, when Sir Malcolm set it up to 245.73 miles an hour.

One More "Ride"

Not content with that, Campbell returned two years later and shot up and down the beach at 272.46, again in the Bluebird. Now, in the same car, remodelled with air brakes and changed in appearance with "a new streamlined idea, but with the same motor, the British ace is ready for "another ride."

Speed has claimed the four bold spirits that compeled against him in the eight years since the first 200-mile mark was set. Keech, Bible and Lockhart died with their helmets on, and the motor roaring.

Segrave Has Jinx Day

Segrave met his death on the water. Defying the jinx of Friday the Thirteenth (June, 1930) he drove Miss England II. to a new world's speed record for motor boats—98 miles an hour—on Lake Windermere, England. He took a third trip, and while the boat was making an estimated 110 miles an hour, it struck an underwater obstruction. A mechanic was killed Segrave, rescued, died a short time later.

Sir Malcolm carries on, his goggled eyes fixed on 300 miles an hour—plane speed on the ground—five miles a minute.

Remember that 30-mile motor trip you used to take on Sundays? Six minutes.

Father and Son Banquet Given By Sunday School Classes

MADOC—Three classes of boys and their dads held a Father and Son banquet in the school room of Trinity United Church on Friday evening last, February 14th, at 6.30. The mothers of the boys sent along good things to eat, which were served to the men and boys by the mothers of the officers of the Tuxis Square and other workers closely in touch with the boys' classes. In all sixty persons sat down to well laden tables. With Mrs. A. Kincaid as accompanist, Mr. Colin Ross acted as song leader and Merrym Rutherford, Proctor of the Tuxis Group, made a splendid chairman. The toast to the King was proposed by the chairman and was responded to by the singing of the National Anthem. The toast to the Sunday School was proposed by Robert Bristol, Jr., and responded to by Mr. R. F. Wellman, superintendent of the Sunday School. The toast to the church was proposed by Russell Foster, and responded to by Mr. T. R. Burnside. Mr. Wm. Scrutton then favored the guests with a violin solo, accompanied at the piano by Mrs. Leslie Ashley. The toast to the Dads was proposed by Murray Irwin, and responded to by Mr. W. McBain. John Bristol, member of the Ontario Older Boys, Parliament for East Hastings, proposed the toast to the Boys' Work Board, and this was responded to by Mr. Percy Holland, Returning Officer for the constituency.

During the evening the chairman read a letter from one who used to attend these banquets in the person of W. Gray Rivers, leader of the Opposition in Parliament this year. After more enthusiastic singing, Rev. C. W. Rivers made a few remarks and introduced the guest speaker, Rev. Bert Howard, the new Principal of Albert College, Belleville. Mr. Howard made a very fine impression on this his first visit to Madoc, as he gave practical advice to fathers and to sons as regards their relation to one another. Mr. G. S. White, in suitable words, moved a hearty vote of thanks and appreciation to the guest speaker, and the motion was seconded by Jack Kincaid, and applauded heartily by all present.

Gordon Moon then proposed a toast to the ladies, those present and those who had helped to provide the banquet, and Mrs. Rivers replied on behalf of the mothers, expressing their joy in helping to bring the fathers and sons together in such a happy way. Before 8 o'clock the gathering was brought to a close with the Benediction pronounced by the minister.

On Sunday morning, February 17th, the Tuxis Boys took charge of the service in Trinity United Church. A men's choir led the service in song. Messrs. Merrym Rutherford and Murray Irwin took charge of the devotional part, Rev. C. W. Rivers read the Scripture prayer. Messrs. Robert Bristol and Carl Wellman took up the offering, after which Mr. John Bristol, member of the Older Boys' Parliament for East Hastings, gave an address on the Challenge of the Youth in the Present Day.

On Friday evening, February 14th, the members of Gordon De-Bekah Lodge held a very successful social evening at the home of Mr. and Mrs. Percy Holland. Some splendid contests were put on Mrs. W. McBain and Miss Christie being the winners. After a hearty sing-song a dainty lunch was served by the hostess, Mrs. Holland, assisted by Mrs. Phillips, Mrs. Roberts and Mrs. Davies.

On Friday night a goodly number of the members of St. John's Anglican A.Y.P.A. motored to Marmore to join in the rally of the Anglican Young People of this district. All reported a very pleasant time.

Mrs. Robert Wickham is spending a few days in Peterboro.

Mr. Rutherford, student of Queen's University, Kingston, spent the week-end in Madoc, visiting Mr. and Mrs. J. Rutherford.

Obituary

MRS. OSWALD LAIDLEY

In ill-health for a considerable period, the death took place on Friday morning at Napanee of Mrs. Oswald Laidley, at the age of sixty-five years. With the exception of a few years spent in Belleville, Mrs. Laidley had always resided in Napanee. She was the daughter of the late Mr. and Mrs. George Hall, and was a member of Grace United Church. Mr. Laidley, who retired a few years ago, was for forty-eight years connected with the G.N.R. and succeeded the late J. P. Hanley as station agent in Napanee. Besides her husband, Mrs. Laidley leaves one son, P. U. Laidley, proprietor of the Gibbard retail store, Napanee, and a daughter, Mrs. Wilfred Brown, of Owen Sound.

STIRLING

ANXIETY IS FELT OVER HIGH WATER

Temporary Bridge in Danger, Traffic Allowed on New Bridge

Stirling—Situated in a natural valley, Stirling suffers more or less by the spring thaw. This year is no exception, but in the previous in its appearance, Residents in areas usually afflicted by these happenings, kept an anxious eye on their gauges and critters all day Friday, as the water flowing from the north of the village kept rising higher and higher. Running almost directly through the centre of the town is a creek starting at the Anglican Church and passing under several buildings and the main street, draining an area for two or three miles north of the village, the water flowing into Rawdon creek. It was feared several times on Friday that this drain would not take the water fast enough, so the open and has been watched very closely. No damage has been reported in the village as yet. Traffic is at a standstill on the Stirling and Frankford Highway. The waters of Rawdon Creek have come up so high at the point where the road crosses the creek that traffic has been stopped. A new bridge is under construction at this point, and a temporary one, over which north and south bound traffic has been passing, is now closed. The ever rising torrents of water have entirely submerged the structure, and all through the night it was necessary to make a three mile detour around by the Trent river, reaching the highway again at Seager's corner.

At midnight on Friday it was feared that the temporary bridge might be washed away by the flood. On Saturday, traffic was allowed over the new bridge, although it is still under construction.

Group Number Three of St. Paul's Women's Association, led by Mrs. C. P. Linn, sponsored a very successful Bacon and Egg Supper on Thursday evening, Feb. 14th. The church parlors were attractively decorated in Valentine colors. The tables which were seated in a blind formation for this particular occasion, were decorated with red heart centres and pink roses. Valentines were in evidence in great numbers. A splendid attendance, in spite of the unseasonables weather, testified to the ladies the appreciation of their efforts.

Centre League Hockey

The largest crowd of the season gathered at the Stirling arena on Friday night, Feb. 14th to see the double header which leaves only two more games to be played on the regular schedule. In spite of the mild weather the ice was in fair condition for the first game, when lastly cheered by the spectators. Mount Pleasant, bolstered up by several local players from Mount Glen Ross by a score of two to one. The appearance of new faces on the Mount Pleasant team ceased to be a mystery, when it was announced at the end of the first period that regardless of the outcome, the game had been forfeited to Glen Ross. The encounter turned out to be merely an exhibition game. In view of the fact that the opponents had bagged home two counters, and had the best of the play all through the first period, this announcement met with considerable disapproval. But it was a good preliminary for the main event, when Zion's Hill and West Huntingdon played sixty minute of real speedy hockey, which ended in a one all tie.

Excitement was great on the part of the fans in the first period of the first game, when Robinson, Reid, and Dalrand made some tricky combination plays. Robinson and Reid received a great hand when they each secured a goal. When the announcement came that it was an exhibition game only, the fans lost interest and saved their noise making for the main fixture, which really meant something. The Mounties won the game, but Glen Ross who were not permited to extend themselves, gained two points without much effort.

As the main event got under way, the crowd let forth its pent up cheering, as these two classy teams, West Huntingdon and Zion's Hill in the press box. As play resumed, the crowd cheered as they contended, and both remained standing. So ended a great game of a series between water polo and hockey with both teams giving a good account of themselves, and each gaining a point.

'Y' Cage Team Loses Chance For Group Honors as R. M. C. Wins by One Point in Overtime

Deacons Defeat Cadets in Junior Tussle Quite Handily

GOOD GAMES

Belleville Leading in Senior Game With 29 Seconds to Play

Belleville basketball teams split a double header in the E.O.B.A. at the B.C.I. gymnasium last night when the Deacon A. C. juniors trimmed the "Cadet" kids to the tune of 39 to 16, while the R.M.C. intermediates down into third place offensive attack, that eventually gave them a 21 to 20 overtime victory over the "Y" intermediates. The deacon kids' win virtually assures them of finishing in first position in their section, while the "Y" reverse pushes the local intermediates down itno third place and gives the R.M.C. intermediates sole possession of first place in their group. Both games were bitterly contested and hard fought throughout, with the intermediate struggle supplying the thrills of the evening as the two teams battled at even terms, practically throughout the entire play.

Close and heavy checking featured in the intermediate struggle as both squads turned in excellent accounts of their evening's efforts. The Morden-coached "Y" team led by a scant two points at the half way mark, the score then being 10 to 8 for Belleville. The "Y" aggregation forged to the fore further late in the last stanza, when they led by a score of 17 to 14 with but a minute left to play. A basket by Christian and a foul shot by Sisson in the last few seconds knotted the count 17 all at full time. Although both teams scored major points in the overtime the Cadets sank two foul shots to the "Y" team's one and took the game by the odd point. The game proved most thrilling throughout and had a filled gallery standing in excitement, especially when the Cadets came from behind.

Led by Ernie Smith, who scored eleven points for the "Y" team, Herb Burley and Farley Faulkner played stellar basketball with the locals, while the defence of White and Wickerson proved a stumbling block for all visiting forwards. Scott looked the best of the alternates used by Coach Morden. Sisson led the Cadets on practically all plays and proved their pivot player, with MacDonald leading the offence with 11 scoring points. Sterne, Stevens and Christian also turned in good games for the winners. Faulkner opened the scoring by sinking a foul shot, that was followed by Sterne duplicating. Smith scored twice in succession and the locals kept their lead until the half finished. Both teams were travelling at a dizzy pace as the second half opened and the heavy checking saw many personal fouls called. Burley put the locals well to the fore late in the second half with two fast baskets but centred attack by Christian, MacDonald and Sterne, knotted the score just before the final whistle. In the overtime Stevens scored, but Burley took a pass from Faulkner and Smith to knot the count. Smith tossed a foul to put Belleville one up, while Christian duplicated this feat seconds later. With ten seconds left to play, Sisson sank the winning counter, when he tossed a free shot into the basket for a victory, that gave the Cadets the group leadership.

Deacon Kids Win Handily

Coach George Laughlin's Deacon A. C. Kids romped home to their seventh consecutive victory in the junior section of the E.O.B.A. by taking the R.M.C. juniors into camp by the score of 39 to 16. The locals led by a 28 to 4 count at the half-way mark and despite the fact they were out-scored in the last stanza, they literally coasted home to victory. The game opened fast with the Cadet kids checking the locals hard and keeping the play will in the Belleville zone. With the exception of Ostrom's foul shot, that scored, there was no sign of scoring during the first ten minutes of play. Art Cole, elongated centre player of the Deacons, notched the initial major counter with Moffat sinking Clarke went on a scoring rampage one seconds later for the Cadets. for the Deacons and from then on the game proved rather one-sided as the Deacons mounted the score.

George Ostrom was by far the pick of the players on either side with Art Cole following close behind. Clarke, an alternate played a stellar game and won his spurs in O.B.A. competition. Faulkner and Martin also stalked well, while the local defence of Cowain and Countryman were inspired by the work of Ostrom and played good games. Moffat was by far the best cadet to take to the floor with Mackay, Ellis and Burton also going fairly well. Ostrom with ten scoring points, Cole with ten, Faulkner with seven and Clarke with eight points were the leading scorers. While Moffat led the visitors with seven points as Mackay bagged 5. The Deacon victory gives them the championship of the group, despite the result of their remaining one game to be played.

First Homer Sells at $1,450

Gabriel Wells Gets Item From Terry Estate — Charles Lamb Letter Auctioned for $600

NEW YORK, Feb. 19.—A copy of the first printed edition of the works of Homer, published about 1488 was sold for $1,450 yesterday afternoon at the American Art Association Anderson Galleries, Inc., at the auction of the third part of the library of the late Rev. Dr. Roderick Terry, of Newport, R. I. The buyer was Gabriel Wells.

Among several Charles Lamb items bought by Walter M. Hill was an apparently unpublished letter in rhyme, written in 1830, "To Miss Gray, or Grey, at Mrs. Gisbon's School, Enfield." The letter reads:

Green in years and Grey in name—
How shall we reconcile the same?
Or how can I devote a rhyme
To one that's Grey before her time?
Most folks till forty—fifty—stay;
You little lady, were born Grey;
Do not with your poet quarrel,
If from your name he picks a moral.
If manners should to names prove true,
Grey should be grave, and Grey are you.
Though young in years, your name already
Instructs you, dear one, to be steady.
Should ever giddiness approach you,
Your name, if nought else, would reproach you.
Be a good girl and you'll content me;
And then I never shall repent me
That I bestow'd an idle rhyme
On her "that's Grey before her time."

This manuscript brought $600. Mr. Hill gave $700 for several brief manuscript poems by Charles and Mary Lamb. One apparently unpublished was called "Chusing a Name." Mr. Hill gave $380 for an apparently unpublished letter of thanks by Lamb for remittances in payment for two "Essays of Elia," and for an invitation to partake of venison. The afternoon's sales brought a total of $11,297.

Golfers, Tennis Players Compete In Old Country

(By Elmer Dulmage, Canadian Press Staff Writer)

Toronto, Feb. 19 (CP)—Like the track and field people, who have been doing it for years, Canadian golf and tennis authorities have moved all at once to develop its young and promising competitors on foreign fields. Trans-Atlantic ships will carry golfers and tennis players to England this summer.

A bare 48 hours after the Canadian Lawn Tennis Association announced plans to send four or five players to Wimbledon and British and Scottish tournaments, the Royal Canadian Golf Association went one better yesterday. It decided, that C. Ross (Sandy) Somerville will lead a team of eight into the British amateur championship.

Except for Somerville, the greatest amateur golf competitor Canada has produced and Marcel Rainville, veteran Montreal Davis Cup player who probably will lead the tennis force, the two teams will be composed of immature players. If international competition will help make them champions, then they are getting a chance that older players in Canada never had.

The golfing brigade will be composed of Gordon B. Taylor Jr., and Euward A. Innes of Montreal, representing Quebec; Phil Farley and Fred Hoblitzel of Toronto, representing Ontario, and three western players yet to be selected.

Sandy a Favorite

Somerville will be more than the mere playing captain. In all probability he will be among the hot favorites to capture the British amateur, won last year by Lawson Little of San Francisco. London's Sandy won the United States amateur in 1932 and went to the sixth round in the British event before he was eliminated in 1933.

If the R.C.G.A. is considering young players alone in the west it probably will choose the three western representatives from among Ken Black and Stan Leonard of Vancouver, Bobby Reith and Bud Donovan of Winnipeg and Stewart Vickers of Calgary.

The tennis squad will include Bob Murray and Laird Watt of Monrteal and Caroline Deacon and Eleanor Young of Vancouver. As the ranking singles player in 1934 and the Canadian, Eastern Canada and Ontario title-holder, Rainville is believed certain to go along.

Belleville Eliminated by Petes In High Scoring Game by 13-8, Petes Now Meet Campbellford

Local Team Weakened as Carl Morgan Unable to Play

GOAL DISALLOWED

Covert, Powers, Ethier, With Jeffrey Star in Loss

Peterboro, Ont., Feb. 19— In a typical Belleville-Peterboro high scoring game here Monday night, Belleville were eliminated from the O.H.A. race when the Petes turned them back, 13 to 8, to win the semi final round by a 15-12 count. Over 1500 roaring fans thrilled to the exciting encounter which saw the Petes playing in top form to get an early lead and to keep in front all the way. The "Combines" went down battling and were forcing the pace at the end.

Manager Thomas' charges played wide open hockey as did their opponents and it made for a thoroughly exciting fracas with the score see-sawing up and down and both goalies having their busiest night of the winter. The homesters had an edge on combination and shooting, but the "Combines" missed many fine scoring chances in close. They were robbed of at least one goal by a home town goal umpire, who refused to turn on the light. Of the 13 penalties drawn the Petes were guilty six times.

The score by periods was 5-2 for the Petes, 5-4 for the second and 3-2. Five straight goals in the first before the visitors got going gave the Liftlockers an edge, which they never relinquished, although their lead was cut down repeatedly. On good ice, play kept fast throughout with both sides tearing up the ice on rush after rush in a lively and fairly clean contest. The loss puts Belleville out and sends the Petes into the group finals against Campbellford this week.

Jeffrey Stars

Despite the score, Jeffrey starred in the Quinte net. He robbed the home snipers of at least a dozen goals with great saves and had little chance on most of those, that beat him. His defence was strong most of the game and the two forward lines worked their heads off in a hopeless cause. Covert, Powers and Ethier played outstanding games, while Barriage, Weir, York and the others flashed some smart hockey in spots, Foley, Calladine, Ellis and Dundas went best for the Petes all of whom looked good. Covert and Powers figured in four goals each, while Calladine was in on seven. Dundas bounced one by Jeffrey early in the red hot thrilling first frame. Calladine got the second in close shortly, and later took Creighton's pass for a third. Dundas made it 4-0 on Ellis' assist after the latter got back from serving a penalty. Dallin notched one more at pointblank range on Ellis' pass. Weir went off for boarding and the visitors ganged up to score two neat ones, Covert and Powers tallying. Belleville held its own the rest of the frame and was robbed several times, when Foley made spectacular stops.

Covert took Power's pass to notch a neat one early in the second, both Covert and Gardner being hurt in a collision in the goal. They left for repairs. Calladine took Creighton's pass to score with nice stickwork and Ellis got a soft one on a breakaway with Belleville ganging up. York went off for slashing, followed by Creighton and McGuire for roughing it. Calladine took Cadd's passout to give Jeffrey no chance, but Ethier came back to tally a nice one on Covert's assist. MaGee slapped in Creighton's pass at the goal mouth, and the same player scored again on a pass from Calladine. Powers and Ethier broke away to catch the Petes flat-footed, the former notching the counter. Ethier went off for tripping followed by Calladine for a trip and Powers bulged the hemp in close assisted by Covert and York to make it 10-6 for the homesters. Barriage was chased for tripping to end the hectic chapter.

Third Period Hot

The third was hot again and even. Ethier climbed the boards for trippng and then Creighton got the finger for tripping. Belleville ganged up to pepper Foley and finally scored but it was not allowed. The goal umpire was changed. Five of the "Combines" stormed up and Barriage blazed the puck in a scramble.

Ethier got the gate again for tripping and Jeffrey kicked out some hot drives, Gardiner finally rapped one in on assists by Calladine and Cadd. Covert was erased for holding and Calladine took Ellis' forward pass and drove it home. Barriage knocked in another for Belleville at close range in a scramble but Gardiner got it back on a high shot on Calladine's rebound. An argument ensued as to whether the puck had gone in and not through the twine near the top or over the top, but it was ruled a goal. Play kept hot the rest of the way with York carried off from an accidental injury, while checking a player just before the gong sounded.

The teams:

Belleville—goal Jeffrey; defence, York and Ethier; centre, Covert; wings, Powers and McGuire. Alterrates, H. Morgan, Weir, Green and Barriage.

Peterboro—Goal, Foley; defence, Cadd and Weir; centre, Ellis; wings Dallin and Dundas. Alternates, Calladine, Gardner, Creighton and MaGee.

MAROONS FACE AN ACID TEST

Play Four Games in Six Days Starting at Toronto

(By The Canadian Press)

Montreal Maroons tonight face the first and probably the highest hurdle in six days of hockey that will include four games and take them as far west as St. Louis on their last long tour of the season.

They clash with Toronto Leafs, still enthusiastic over their 5-1 win from New York Rangers Saturday, and then go on to Detroit for a Thursday game. They play in St. Louis Saturday and Chicago Sunday. After that all their games will be at home or on the eastern wheel of the National League.

Although Toronto are still eight points up on Tommy Gorman's team they have played three games more than the Montrealers and do not consider their lead too secure. It can be expected they will put everything they have into an attempt to defeat Maroons.

Montreal Canadiens meet Bruins in Boston with the knowledge two points would make their five-point lead over New York Americans a lot more comfortable. Bruins, tied with Chicago for second place in the American Division, might be able to go into another tie for first place by defeating the Habitants.

But that would be only if Rangers lost to St. Louis in New York. Even after the splendid game they played against Boston Saturday Eagles are given little chance of beating Rangers the way the New Yorkers are playing now.

KI-Y LEAGUE

Two games of midget hockey were played in the local Ki-Y League last night with the O.S.D. kids downing the Chihawks by the score of 10 to 1, while the "Stars" trimmed the Flying Canadians to the tune of 9 to 0. The O.S.D. victory elevates that club into a contending position in the loop standing. Peets and Elliott led the Stars in scoring with Warren and Graham also entering into the picture. Every member of the O.S.D. squad notched at least one counter, except the goalie with Sword bagging the lone Chihawk goal.

The lineups:

O.S.D. 10—Traini, Bailie, Manning, Walton, Kiniski, Wilson, May, Robertson, Mahrgang and McKenzie.

Chihawks 1—Fitzgibbon, Reed, Cavanaugh, Hibbard, Sword, Muncaster, Davis, Miller and Taylor.

"Stars" 9—Semark, Peets, Warren, Graham, Elliott, High, Mansfield and Meens.

Flying Canadians 1—Pepper, Feets, S McBride, B. McBride, Jackson, Ridley, Finkle and Clarke.

Referees—Loft and Mason.

CHRISTIE CAKES LOSE 4 POINTS

Trent Cottons Spill The Maples For 3097 Count

Last night at the Recreation Alleys the Trent Cottons, in a return game with the Christie Cakes, took four points without exerting themselves very much. These two teams are playing games every other week, one in Trenton and one in Belleville and they are enjoying very much this cool weather pastime.

Last night the Cottons literally bowled the Christie Cake team off their feet with a score of 3097 against 2773 to win four points.

The Christie Cakes who have been bowling good games in the Major "A" League in Belleville could not hit their stride against the Trenton team and fell way below their average.

Leo Barrett who is the genial manager of the alleys was high man for the Christie Cakes with a three string of 731. For the Trenton Cottons Mr. Bryson was high man with 736.

Messrs R. JJ. Wray and G. Hurley acted as scorers for this game.

After the game was completed the Christie Cake team under the management of Mr. D. Tobe entertained the members of the Trenton team to a very enjoyable banquet.

The scores:

SPORT FLASHES BY HARRY "S" FOSTER

MARVELS OF BALANCE AND NERVE

Frequently the query is put to me, "What is, in your opinion, the most hazardous of sports?" The answer I invariably give is that apart from power racing in the air, land or water, stunt skiing packs more thrills for participants and onlookers than any other sport, and only great skill offsets proportional likelihood of tragedy.

While ski-jumping doesn't attract the attention that some other sport contests do, few can witness the daring and skill of the experienced jumper without the thrill of a lifetime.

Take the feats of the Ruud brothers, who seem determined, between them, to get a corner of the laurels that go with world ski-jumping championships. Until March, 1934, the ski-jumping crown rested on the head of Sigmund Ruud, 86 metres, or 291.6 feet, but at the spring meet last year in Jugoslavia, Brother Mirger snaffled the gilt headpiece by making the astounding jump officially recorded at 92 metres, or 301.6 feet. That the coveted headgear may again change hands, even though still kept in the family is thus indicated by the fact that subsequently Sigmund jumped 95 metres, but had the misfortune to fall in doing so.

CURRENT SPORT

(Day By Day)

Just 30 seconds stood between the Belleville "Y" cagers and the group championship last night up at the Collegiate, because had the "Y" aggregation won from the Cadets last evening they would have continued on to the group championship in grand style, but they didn't win last night and the show is practically all over except for the R.M.C. Cadets, who won a courageous battle. The score stood in favour of Belleville, 17 to 14 with only 29 seconds left to play in the last period. The locals broke away and it looked like another "Y" basket, but wait, a foul was called, Sisson made sure of it and with the score standing 17 to 15 MacDonald scored for the Cadets and the game was all knotted up at full time. It was undoubtedly the most exciting team game that has been played in Belleville this season. Then the Cadets proved ubetter foul tossers in the overtime and scored two to Belleville's one, although both teams had the same number of free shots.

It was a tough game to lose, but a mighty sweet one to win on the part of the Cadets, who are now sitting pretty on the top of the group heap. Twice this season the local "Y" aggregation has had the score well in their favour in the dying moments of play only to see victory slip from their grasp. The Cadets downed the locals in a similar manner in Kingston, so evenly matched are these two teams. On the other hand the Deacon A. C. juniors romped home to a rather easy victory over the Cadet kids, insomuch as the local juniors rested on their laurels and ghosted around the floor during the last half. The Deacon victory last night assures them of their second junior E. O. B. A. championship in as many seasons. The group group leading R. M. C. intermediate squad are not so comfortably situated, however, they mut win their remaining games to finish atop the local "Y" team. Apparently basketball is becoming more popular in Belleville as the gallery at the Collegiate was filled to capacity last night. The cage game is a thrilling sport and local sport lovers, who have not as yet become cage conscious should drop up and see these games. "They're the berries" for speed and thrills.

Sickness wrought havoc among the ranks of the Belleville "Combines" at Peterboro last night when Carl Morgan was unable to make the trip owing to severe illness and Roy Covert despite the fact he played a stellar game throughout was a mighty sick man, and never should have been on the ice at any stage of the game. Despite his illness Covert gave a courageous exhibition of the ice game and was not over-shadowed by any player on the ice. Incidently the locals inform us that Covert took an awful "going over" at the hands of the Petes, who sensing that Covert was a sick man, gave him the well-known works, but the local kid showed the homesters just what it means to have plenty of what is sometimes termed as "g——". The locals dropped the game by a 13 to 8 score and the round by the count of 15 to 12.

With the score standing 10 to 8 in the third frame McGuire rifled one past Foley during a scramble in front of the Peterboro net. The rubber was seen to hit the back bar of the goal and bounce out, but goal umpire Lebarr refused to flash the red light. An argument ensued during which Referee McCaffery stated, "the goal umpire did not flash his light and cannot count the goal" which indicated to all concerned, that McCaffery had seen the puck enter the net himself, but refused to call the play as he saw it by over-ruling the Peterboro goal umpire. Had the locals been awarded that legitimate counter perhaps a far different tale would be unravelled today.

"Derby" Jeffery, local goal custodian, turned in a marvelous effort despite the mounted score, we are informed. Incidently play raged the length of the ice in an open game all night and "Derby" kicked out the proverbial million. Jim Ethier also turned in a stellar effort, eye witnesses tells us, but the work of Jeffery stod out as sensational. Local O.H.A. hockey is all washed up for this season, now that the Petes and the Maroons clash for the group title. "May the better team win, and then go far."

Now that O. H. A. hockey is but ancient history in Belleville the executive of the local city league immediately swung into action and announced that the semi-final play-off series in the loop would open at the Arena on Thursday night. The league executive met last night and completed final arrangements for this important series that resulted in a few surprises being released. For instance Pete Morgan's name was submitted by the S. E. A. C. and sanctioned with the result that the ex-Belleville, Brockville speedster will lineup with the Foster Ward kids along with Murney Green, Bentley and Wilson of Napanee. The return of Pete Morgan to local hockey wars alone should prove sufficient inspiration to elevate the statis of city league hockey. The semi-finals brings together the Alemite versus the S.E.A.C. kids and Grills A. C. versus the speedy Trenton aggregation in a two game series, goals to count on the round. The city leaguers have provided plenty of splendid hockey for the fans all season and now that the covetted play-offs have started and O.H.A. hockey is done, a bumper crowd will naturally swing in behind the city league.

Unofficially, it is learned plans are being considered to stage an exhibition football game between Sarnia Imperials, Canadian champions, and University of Michigan next fall at Ann Arbor. The proposal is to play one-half under Canadian rules and the other under American.

Promoter Clem Allen announced today that he had been successful in procuring the junior Golden Gloves boxing tournament for Central Ontario. The district allotted Mr. Allen was from Oshawa to Kingston and north as far as Peterboro, which maens that Belleville fight fans will be treated to some excellent boxing early next month. "Congrats Clem."

Polar and Brown Bear, Parents of At Least One Cub

Washington, Feb. 19 (AP)—The scientific world, still agog over the Dionne quintuplets, had a new shock from the animal kingdom today.

Two bears in the National Zoo, a female Alaskan brown bear and a Polar bear, handed their keepers and biologists a surprise in the form of cubs—or at least a cub—something the scientists didn't believe could happen until today. The parents are at opposite ends of the bear family.

Whether there is one new cub or twins is still uncertain because keepers have not yet entered the den for fear of exciting the mother. The proud papa is "snow", a pure-white Polar bear. The mother is "Totem Pole."

The parents are not only different species, but different genera, which makes them even more unrelated.

LOVE SCHOOL

By MARYSE RUTLEDGE

Faith hovered behind, her arm young figure etched in the wan light. Hopelessly, she watched the slithered lines of Hunter's back as he walked away from her. He was thinking of Gertrude's safety of course. Nothing else counted. But was this the end for her? Now that she had played her part, would they vanish into distant drama?

"Come on. You're with us," Stevens called gruffly. She hurried to join them.

Gertrude was already in the back of the car. She stared at Faith from under the jet black arch of her brows. Her eyes were large, of a dusky velvet. Her stare was hostile.

"Is there any reason, Phillip," she said haughtily, "why a stranger should be included in your mystery-box plans?"

Hunter Barclay was looking at Faith, too, as if he had finally placed her. "Whatever crazy idea you have, Phillip," he said, "I think we've exceeded our quota of unnecessary complexities for one night."

Stevens' cheeks sagged in pain under mottled veins, but his eyes were bright with fever. "You're sitting in front, Faith, beside Barclay." was his curt answer. "I'm warning you once more," he added, "I'm getting the order. I've been through hell in the last 36 hours, and don't kid yourselves, I'd rather see Gertrude dead than stand any more of it."

None of them said another word. Faith slipped into the front seat beside the Bronze. Then take the Boston Post Road" Stevens directed from the rear. "And no speeding. If any motorcycle cop comes after us, I'll let go."

After that, there was silence, broken only by Gertrude's whimpers. Her control had given way.
